The Leader of the Opposition also asked about the criteria. I presume he is referring to criteria for gaining access to the $1 billion of new money over five years that has been committed by the federal government to this agency. The short answer to that question is no, because we want to have the advice and active involvement of the board in deciding how best to invest that money in the long-term economic interest of the region.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, with respect to the criteria and the eligibility, I am somewhat confused by the answer given by the Leader of the Government to the effect that there are a number of existing agencies in operation, which he recited. I conclude from his answer that a big part of the job is to make those agencies more effective, and that if a client comes along, he or she might be directed to Enterprise Cape Breton, the IRDP, and existing agencies.

My question really is: Is there an additional source of funding to which a client may go, or does the client go to one of those presently existing sources, possibly with more money—or maybe not? We all know that game. With $1 billion of new money over a five-year period, only God would be able to tell at the end of the five years what was new and what was old. But I will not press that today.

What I really want to know is whether the $1 billion is going to be funnelled through "new money", funnelled through existing agencies, or whether it is to be funnelled through a fresh agency with new criteria.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to confirm that those programs to which I referred—the IRDP, the Small Business Loans Act, Enterprise Cape Breton, the Atlantic Enterprise Program, and so forth—that are being brought under the wing of the agency, will come with their budgets and with the person-years attached to them. They will not be funded out of the $1 billion that has been committed to the agency for the next five years. The $1.05 billion is new money for new programs from a new agency, and whether that agency will want to use part of that money to add on to the existing—and I might say quite rich—incentive programs that apply to Cape Breton, and to the Atlantic provinces generally, is another matter.

Senator MacEachen: So I take it that up to the present there is absolutely no mechanism in place by which a client could go to the agency to get access to the $1.05 billion; that no criteria have been established, no board has been set up, no legislation has been introduced, and all of that will likely happen later in the fall so that access will take place at the earliest in 1988.

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators. First, the "client", as the Leader of the Opposition put it—and I presume the honourable senator is referring to private sector clients seeking to take advantage of various financial incentives—has at his disposal now a variety of programs, and, I repeat, very rich incentives, under the Atlantic Enterprise Program, Enterprise Cape Breton, and so forth.

The Leader of the Opposition is wrong to say that all of this must wait until legislation is passed. I have already indicated that most of the members of the board will be appointed soon—I hope this week—under ministerial authority, and that they will be meeting before the end of this month to begin the discussion of the kinds of programs to be put in place.

I want to emphasize the fact that what we are talking about here are new programs—not necessarily incentives of the traditional kind to the private sector—that are intended to strengthen the private sector in the Atlantic region and contribute to the long-term economic development of the region. Of that $1.05 billion it is perfectly true to say, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, that none of that money has been spent; and none of it will be spent until the board has had an opportunity to consider the best way to spend it in the interests of the long-term economic development of the region.

Senator MacEachen: I think the Leader of the Government has confirmed what I had concluded, namely, that there are existing agencies with existing budgets available to clients. We all know that. With respect to the new agency, it is still in what I might say is its—

Senator Murray: Infancy.

Senator MacEachen: Or even its pre-infancy stage.

Senator Frith: Its gestation period.

Senator MacEachen: Its gestation or embryonic stage. There are to be new programs, but they have not been developed. The board will develop those, and a client today, who finds that the existing programs are not adequate or available to him, must wait for some considerable time to get access to the new programs. That is all I want to know. I do not complain about the reality. It is there, but, certainly, it does not represent much urgency.

WESTERN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

NATURE OF GENERAL STRUCTURE—DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Will this so-called new program for western economic development be set up on essentially the same criteria, principles and structures which the minister has just described? He will realize, of course, that we in the Senate do not have the same opportunity to question the minister, Mr. McKnight, directly as we do in the case of the minister for the Atlantic board. However, is the general structure to be similar?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the principle is the same; that more of the decision-making on matters of regional development should be made in the region by people from the region with resources provided by the federal government. That is the principle under which we are operating. I think the big mistake was made previously by my honourable friends when they did away with DREE and created this larger entity called DRIE, under which the regional development effort has been subsumed, if not lost. Now we are trying to find ways to make sure that the battle against regional disparity is carried on in the regions, making maximum use of local leadership, local initiative and local ideas.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have another supplementary question. Could the minister indicate when he believes that the agency in western Canada will be set up and when it will reach the stage where it is capable of receiving and dealing with applications from whomever, particularly the private sector, to get on to some economic enhancement programs?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think that things are off to a pretty good start with the appointment of my colleague, the Honourable Bill McKnight, as the minister responsible, and the appointment of Mr. Bruce Rawson, who is, as my honourable friend knows, an experienced and highly respected public servant, as deputy minister of the office. Honourable senators will also be aware that they intend to proceed quickly to set up sub-offices in Vancouver, Saskatoon and Winnipeg, and the main office will be in Edmonton. So, I believe that the agency will be open for business very shortly.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, does "shortly" mean some time later in 1987 or some time in 1988?

Senator Murray: Some time in 1987, not in 1988.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have three delayed answers to questions asked on June 29. Honourable senators will not be surprised if events have overtaken some of the answers, and they may appear dated. I shall follow the usual procedure: I shall read the name of the senator who asked the question, give a brief description, and if honourable senators wish me to read the answer into the record, I shall do so. Otherwise, I ask that they be taken as read and printed as part of today's proceedings.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CANADIAN JOB STRATEGY—AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The first answer is to a question asked by Senator Lorna Marsden, regarding the Status of Women—Canadian Job Strategy—Availability of Funds.

The announcement of adjustments to the Canadian Jobs Strategy by the Honourable Benoît Bouchard, Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Honourable Barbara McDougall, Minister responsible for the Status of Women, will not have increased funds added to the overall Canadian Jobs Strategy budget.

The purpose of the changes is to provide a flexible and creative approach to using the Canadian Jobs Strategy to ensure that the government is helping those most in need of addressing occupational segregation. It is also vitally important to do what works best within available resources. The participation of women in non-traditional occupations and the participation of women who are doubly disadvantaged, for example, women who are immigrants, is of great concern to the government.

The two changes to the Canadian Jobs Strategy announced in Halifax will help women enter non-traditional occupations and will help other women who were previously excluded because of an eligibility criterion.

Thus, the two changes to which Senator Marsden refers, like the other improvements and adjustments made, are strategic in nature, not financial.

EMERGENCIES BILL

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION RE LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question asked by Senator John B. Stewart, regarding the Emergencies Bill—Government's Intention Re Legislative Action.

[Senator Murray.]

The government does not at present intend to proceed with Bill C-77 before the fall.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POSTAL STRIKE—APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked in the Senate by Senator Charles Turner, regarding Canada Post Corporation—Postal Strike—Appointment of Mediator.

The Minister of Labour, the Hon. Pierre Cadieux, appointed Mr. W.P. Kelly as mediator in the dispute between Canada Post and the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada on June 28, 1987, following receipt of a joint request made by the parties earlier that same day. Through the efforts of Mr. Kelly, a tentative settlement was reached in the dispute on July 4th. Mr. Cadieux did not respond favourably to a previous request for mediation assistance, made unilaterally by the Canada Post Corporation, which he judged to be premature. Realizing the crucial nature of timing in any application of mediation procedures, the Minister instead appointed Mr. Kelly when he felt that his intervention would be most productive. Subsequent events have served to confirm the wisdom of the timing of the minister's decision in this particular dispute.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE
HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Order stands.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, on June 29, 1987, Senator Corbin said in this chamber, and I quote from page 1494 of Hansard, the Debates of the Senate—

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I asked to have the order stood, and I would like to know by what right Senator Bélisle is taking the floor now.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, I think I have as much right to speak in this chamber as my colleague.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: On a question of privilege.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, I will tell him why I am taking the floor today.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to know whether Senator Bélisle is rising on a point of order or a question of privilege, or whether he intends to take part in debate, which it was my right to do at this time.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, if my honourable colleague prefers, I could ask to have this considered as a question of privilege.

Senator Corbin: In that case, honourable senators, we will need proof that it is indeed a question of privilege.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is that agreeable to Senator Corbin?

Senator Bélisle: I beg your pardon?

Senator Frith: The main thing is whether it is agreeable to Senator Corbin. Is this intervention agreeable to the senator?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, that we can read tomorrow.

Senator Bélisle: On June 29, 1987, Senator Corbin stated in this chamber, and I quote from page 1494 of Hansard, the Debates of the Senate:

Personally, I said that the bill would be referred to committee. I certainly do not intend to keep the bill in this chamber indefinitely.

Honourable senators, I assume he was referring to his speech on June 17.

That is what Senator Corbin told us. However, after my own speech on the same 29th of June—

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, I do not intend to yield to the senator.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, Senator Bélisle has not indicated whether he rose to make a speech, to comment on the bill or whether he intended to raise a point of order. As a result, we have two senators speaking simultaneously. He has not indicated whether he was rising on a question of privilege. It seems to me that if we are to observe the rules governing these proceedings, Senator Bélisle should first of all explain why he feels obliged to speak at this time.

Senator Bélisle: Regarding the question of privilege, honourable senators, my reason for speaking at this time is that Senator Corbin wants to hold up the bill indefinitely. In my opinion, I am entitled to give the reason he is using to hold up the bill.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, may I say a few words? You are making an accusation, Senator Bélisle, and I think that is unworthy of you.

Senator Flynn: It depends on the nature of the accusation.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, that is what Senator Corbin told us. After the speech I made on the same 29th of June, Senator Corbin, with the unanimous consent of this chamber and without concluding debate on the bill, adjourned the debate again. He had put his name at the top of the list to take the floor on July 6 and 7, but again he postponed his intervention.

Here we are, August 10, and Senator Corbin is again asking that the debate be adjourned.

Allow me to recall the chronology of this debate. In light of his behaviour in the house, I find it somewhat difficult to understand Senator Corbin's statement, which I quoted at the beginning.

Senator Corbin first adjourned the debate on June 2, 1987. On June 17 of the same year, that is 15 days later, he delivered the first part of his speech, which is par for the course. He then told us the second part would be shorter. Since his last intervention, after my June 29 speech, every time he adjourned or postponed the debate.

Today, almost two months after his June 17 adjournment and nearly a month and a half after his statement that he had no intention of stalling the bill in the house, again he wants to adjourn the debate.

What are we to believe? Would it be that his research turned out to be fruitless and that he has nothing else to tell us?

If he has no intention of stalling the bill, as he said, let him provide concrete evidence of that!

I challenge Senator Corbin to prove to us that he does not intend to stall the bill. He ought to make his speech or tell us he has nothing more to add, just so the debate may proceed and we may at long last refer the bill to committee and hear all relevant evidence.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise to speak to this so-called question of privilege. In my opinion, there is no question of privilege. It is nothing more than an intervention in a debate. The purpose of this intervention is to make a case based on assumptions, and this, as I told him a few moments ago, is quite unworthy of an honourable colleague since he does not know the reasons why I am not ready or prepared to take the floor today.

He is accusing me of acting in bad faith, with ill will.

I would ask the Speaker to rule whether or not the question of privilege is warranted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the rule is clear in this respect:

27. A senator may speak to any question before the Senate, a question of privilege, or upon a point of order, or upon a motion or an inquiry, or in making a mere interrogation, but not otherwise except with the consent of a majority of the Senate which shall be given or withheld without debate.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, with all due respect for the Chair, this does not tell me whether Senator Bélisle had or had not a prima facie point of privilege when he raised the matter, and indirectly imputed intentions to me under the guise of a point of privilege.

In view of the opportunities for a senator to rise at each stage of the various readings of a bill in this House, I feel Senator Bélisle already used that privilege.

He adjourned the debate. The Senate gave unanimous consent for him to rise a second time at the second reading stage, while reserving his right to close the debate after all other senators have spoken.

And now he rises again today under the false pretense of a point of privilege to accuse me, to condemn me and to impute intentions I do not have.

It is my absolute right to adjourn the debate on any matter in this house. I am under no obligation to state my reasons. The reasons I gave in June are still valid today. I stand by that, and let Senator Bélisle also stand by that.

Order stands.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—
CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

[Senator Bélisle.]

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Senator Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, your steering committee met this morning at 11 o'clock and discussed a number of items, a report of which has been produced, and is now in the process of distribution to all senators, in both official languages.

This report refers to a proposal that was made to the Committee of the Whole by Senator Lucier. His proposal was that the Committee of the Whole should consider travel in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. This morning the steering committee discussed it. This document, then, is the report of the steering committee to the Committee of the Whole.

Honourable senators, is it your wish that this report be read into the record, or do you wish to read your own copies?

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this proposal was made by Senator Lucier. It was drafted by someone in the steering committee, so I do not think it should be presented as a motion or as a request by Senator Lucier.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I thought what you were saying was that the suggestion that the committee consider the position of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories came from Senator Lucier. However, as Senator Flynn has said, this is not Senator Lucier's motion. It is a report of the steering committee to the Committee of the Whole, responding to the suggestion made by Senator Lucier.

Mr. Chairman, since, in effect, the Committee of the Whole is the Senate as a whole, and often, when we make reports of this kind, we like to take a day to consider them before we deal with them, perhaps it would be a good idea to adjourn consideration of this report in order to give honourable senators an opportunity to consider it. It can then be dealt with at the next sitting of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Chairman, if that is agreeable, I will so move.

The Chairman: Is there any discussion, honourable senators? You have heard Senator Frith's suggestion.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, perhaps before we start cogitating upon this document, I might ask whether the chairman or someone else can give me an explanation of the interesting phraseology contained in the second clause:

● (1510)

That the Task Force be composed of eight senators, three of whom shall be nominated by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and five of whom shall be appointed by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

The Chairman: Senator Macquarrie, I might say that you are absolutely correct. This was brought up this morning at the steering committee.

Senator Doody: Now we know how the two caucuses are run.

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, the French version is not in keeping either. In both cases, it uses the term “nommés”.

The Chairman: Yes, Senator Flynn, but I understand that was the accurate translation for “nominated”.

Senator Flynn: No. It is my view that “proposés” would be more accurate.

[English]

The Chairman: Can we agree that, for the purposes of discussion, in the English text we will change the word “appointed” in the second last line to read “nominated”?

[Translation]

Concerning the French version, I would have to rely on the translators, but if you prefer “proposés” to “nommés”—

Senator Flynn: It would be more in line.

Senator Frith: It is more in keeping with the English version.

The Chairman: So, can we agree on the term “proposés” to replace “nommés”?

Senator Flynn: Well, let us say you will correct it at your convenience.

Senator Frith: Agreed.

The Chairman: Therefore, in the French version, paragraph two, line two, we will change the term “nommés” to “proposés”.

[English]

Senator Frith: I move as corrected.

The Chairman: Senator Frith moves that the version, as corrected, be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the committee. Is it your wish, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks, that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE ON BILL C-22

MONDAY, August 10, 1987

The Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, (formerly entitled the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of Bill C-22) has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

The Committee, to which was referred Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, has, in obedience to the order of reference of Thursday, 25th June, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments, observations, recommendations and recognition of dissenting opinion:

AMENDMENTS

EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. Page 10, new clause 14.1: Add, immediately after line 17, the following:

"14.1 Subsection 41(4) of the Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(4) Where, in the case of any patent for an invention intended or capable of being used for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine, an application is made by any person for a licence to do one or more of the following things as specified in the application, namely:

(a) where the invention is a process, to use the invention for the preparation or production of medicine, import any medicine in the preparation or production of which the invention has been used or sell any medicine in the preparation or production of which the invention has been used, or

(b) where the invention is other than a process, to import, make, use or sell the invention for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine,

the Commissioner shall grant to the applicant a licence to do the things specified in the application except such, if any, of those things in respect of which he sees good reason not to grant such a licence; and shall settle the terms of the licence and fix the amount of royalty payable to the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund."

Subsection 41(4) of the Patent Act currently requires the Commissioner of Patents to consider giving due reward for the research leading to the invention of a particular medicine when establishing the amount of the royalty to be paid pursuant to a compulsory licence. This amendment would delete this requirement and allow the Commissioner to fix a royalty payable to the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund.

2. Page 10, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out line 21 and substitute the following:

"41.1 In subsection 41(4) and sections 41.11 to 41.16,"

- (b) Strike out lines 22 and 23.

- (c) Strike out lines 29 to 34.

- (d) Add, immediately after line 28, the following:

" "participating patentee" means a patentee for whom a royalty has been paid into the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund by a licensee in respect of a licence granted under subsection 41(4);

"Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund" means the fund established pursuant to section 41.16;

"research and development intensity" means the ratio of research and development expenditures incurred in Canada by a participating patentee in respect of prescription-type medicines to the total sales for consumption in Canada of prescription-type medicines by such patentee;

"royalty" in respect of a licence granted under subsection 41(4) is the royalty fixed and determined by the Commissioner from time to time; for the purposes of fixing and determining such royalty the Commissioner shall apply the following formula:

(a) the royalty shall be the product of the royalty rate multiplied by the net price of sales of prescription-type medicines sold for consumption in Canada by a licensee pursuant to a licence granted under subsection 41(4), at arm's length or at the equivalent to arm's length;

(b) the royalty rate is to consist of a first portion of 0.04 plus a second portion, being the ratio of the total expenditures of the world pharmaceutical industry on research and development for prescription-type medicines,

the total annual revenues of such industry from sales of such prescription-type medicines throughout the world."

The special definition of "patentee" in the Bill, which includes voluntary licensees, in order to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the "Board") is deleted.

These definitions refer to expressions used in the new section 41.16 which would establish a Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund as recommended by The Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry (the Eastman Report).

Prescription-type drugs refer to drugs of a type that would be sold under prescription in Canada but might not require a prescription elsewhere.

This royalty would determine both the size of the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund and the amount licensees must pay with respect to sales under licences granted under subsection 41(4).

The qualification on sales "for consumption in Canada" follows the Eastman Report recommendations that no royalties be payable by generic companies on account of export sales.

The first portion (0.04) is to reflect the value to compulsory licensees of current promotion expenditures of patent-holding firms. This 4% is not based on the same criteria as the 4% royalty currently paid by licensees.

The second portion would be set at 10% at the present time, on the basis of existing conditions in the world pharmaceutical industry. This portion would vary according to the ratio of world research and development expenditures to world sales of prescription medicines.

- (e) Strike out lines 35 to 42.

This amendment would delete the requirement that a notice of compliance be considered to be first issued only in respect of a medicine that is an original and distinct chemical composition and not for an obvious chemical equivalent of a medicine for which a notice of compliance (NOC) has been previously issued. The deletion of subsection 41.1(2) removes an anomaly found in Bill C-22 that would, in essence, allow patents for certain medicines (that is, obvious chemical equivalents to medicines for which NOCs have been previously issued) to have unlimited protection against the operation of compulsory licences to import for their entire patent term.

3. Page 11, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 12 and 13 and substitute the following:

"been used; or"

- (b) Strike out lines 17 and 18 and substitute the following:

"duction of medicine."

The four year period of exclusivity with respect to statutory licences to import will apply both for medicines consumed in Canada and exported. The Eastman Report did not propose separate treatment for exclusivity in relation to the domestic and export markets.

4. Pages 11 and 12, clause 15: Strike out lines 19 to 49 on page 11, and lines 1 and 2 on page 12 and substitute the following:

"(2) The prohibition under subsection (1) expires in respect of a medicine four years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine."

With this amendment a four-year period of exclusivity running from the issuance of the first notice of compliance would be guaranteed to patent-holding firms. No distinction is made between the period of exclusivity guaranteed against licences to import or to manufacture.

5. Page 12, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 8 to 14 and substitute the following:

"(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of any licence pertaining to a medicine where on the date of the coming into force of this section, a notice of compliance has been issued in respect of such medicine."

The new "regime" for importation of medicines would come into effect when these sections are proclaimed into law, but will not apply to drugs for which an NOC has issued by that date.

- (b) Strike out line 45 and substitute the following:

"medicine is issued after the coming into force of this section, no"

This amendment and amendment 6(a) provide that the four year restriction on manufacturing will apply only where the first NOC for a medicine is issued after the proclamation date. Where an NOC issues prior to that date, statutory licensees will be subject to the old regime.

6. Pages 13 to 26, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 8 and 9 on page 13 and substitute the following:

"until the expiration of four years after the date"

This amendment parallels amendments 3 and 5(b).

- (b) Strike out line 15 on page 13 and all lines from line 16 on page 13 to line 11 on page 26 and substitute the following:

"that medicine.

41.15 No action or proceeding for any"

- (c) Add, immediately after line 16 on page 26, the following:

"41.16(1) The Commissioner shall establish a Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund to be composed of royalty payments made in respect of any licence granted under subsection 41(4) after the coming into force of this section.

(2) Any royalty in respect of a licence granted under subsection 41(4) after the coming into force of this section shall be paid into the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund at such time or times and in the manner determined by the Commissioner.

(3) The Commissioner shall at such time, to such extent and in the manner that he deems appropriate, make a distribution from the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund to participating patentees in respect of a period designated by the Commissioner.

(4) The amount to which each participating patentee is entitled under subsection (3) shall be the product obtained by multiplying the two factors set out in subsections (5) and (6), further multiplied by the sum of the total amounts paid into the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund over the designated period and any accrued interest in respect of royalties to be disbursed from the fund.

(5) The first factor in the calculation described in subsection (4) is the ratio of

(a) the total of the sales for consumption in Canada made by all licensees of the participating patentee in respect of licences granted under subsection 41(4), during the designated period

to

(b) the total of all such sales in respect of all participating patentees during such designated period:

These amendments would delete all references to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the "Board") from the Bill.

They would also delete proposed new section 41.16 which would grant longer periods of market exclusivity to drugs invented and developed in Canada. With these amendments all patented medicines under the new regime would have a four-year period of market exclusivity.

This amendment establishes the rules under which payments would be made from the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund to participating patentees. The Commissioner of Patents would establish designated periods during which payments made into this fund are disbursed out of the fund to participating patentees.

Disbursements from the fund for the relevant period would exhaust the total of all royalty payments into the fund for the period, including interest earned on those payments. Every participating patentee would be entitled to some proportion of the fund's monies. This proportion would be determined by the product of two factors.

The first factor is the total of all sales of compulsorily licensed drugs based on that patentee's patented drugs divided by the sum of all sales of compulsorily licensed drugs in Canada. Export sales are not included in this factor. This represents the patentee's nominal share of royalties that would normally accrue to him.

(6) The second factor in the calculation described in subsection (4) is the ratio of

(a) the participating patentee's research and development intensity during the designated period, plus 0.04

to

(b) the average research and development intensity of all participating patentees during such designated period, plus 0.04.

(7) The Governor in Council may make regulations defining, for the purposes of this section and section 41.1, the expression "research and development".

7. Page 33, clause 28: Strike out line 15 and substitute the following:

"arising under any of sections 41.1 to 41.16 of"

8. Pages 33 and 34, clause 30:

(a) Strike out line 34 on page 33 and substitute the following:

"30. Schedule II to the Access to Infor."

(b) Strike out lines 38 to 43 on page 33 and lines 1 and 2 on page 34.

9. Page 34, clause 31: Strike out the heading immediately preceding line 3 and lines 3 to 29.

10. Page 34, clause 32: Strike out line 30 and substitute the following:

"31.(1) Notwithstanding anything in sec-"

11. Page 35, clause 33:

(a) Strike out lines 3 to 8 and substitute the following:

"32.(1) The definition "priority date" in section 2 of the Patent Act, as enacted by subsection 1(2) of this Act, sections 2, 5, 7 to 13 and 16 to 25 and subsection 30(1) of this Act, or any of those sections or subsections, shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation."

The second factor is calculated as the sum of 0.04 and the research intensity of the participating patentee, divided by the sum of 0.04 and the research intensity of all participating patentees in Canada. This factor takes into account a participating patentee's research expenditures.

Both factors compare the circumstances of an individual patentee to the industry. In factor two, the research intensity of the patentee is compared to the industry norm. In factor one, the amount of sales of compulsorily licensed drugs attributed to the patentee's patents is compared to the total sales of compulsorily licensed drugs. A firm's share of the fund increases as its research intensity increases in relation to the industry norm.

This amendment is consequential on the amendments to clause 15. It changes the numbers of the sections to which reference is made.

These amendments are consequential on the amendments to clause 15. They delete subsections (2) and (3), referring to the Board and re-number the remaining provision.

This amendment would delete clause 31 of the Bill. Clause 31 provides for the payment of $25 million annually to the provinces for each of the fiscal years commencing April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991. It is consequential on the amendments to clause 15, which relieve existing pipeline drugs from the retroactive imposition of exclusivity.

This amendment renumbers clause 32 of the Bill.

This amendment would allow for greater flexibility in proclaiming into force the clauses of Bill C-22 that amend the general patent law.

- (b) Strike out line 9 and substitute the following:      These amendments accommodate the renumbering of sections.
- “(2) Sections 41.1 to 41.16 of the Patent”
- (c) Strike out lines 12 and 13 and substitute the following:
- “(3) of this Act or either of those subsections shall come into”

OBSERVATIONS

The amendments set out in this report would, among other things, remove all references to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the “Board”) from Bill C-22. This is done because the Board is not a part of the compulsory licensing and royalty regime being proposed in this report.

The Committee does feel, however, that it is appropriate to note that some concerns were expressed by witnesses respecting the constitutional authority of Parliament to vest the Board with the power to direct that excessive drug prices be reduced. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs responded to these concerns with evidence supporting the constitutional validity of the Board's powers.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON GENERAL PATENT LAW AMENDMENTS

Part of Bill C-22 is also directed to general amendments to the patent law. These amendments deal with revisions to the novelty requirements, procedures for granting patents, the term of protection and some changes to the effects of patents, after they are granted.

These amendments advance many desirable changes. Among these changes are the dating of patents from filing, with early publication of applications; the adoption of more stringent novelty requirements, with a special grace period for disclosures by inventors; and the introduction of the first-inventor-to-file system. The Bill also provides for the re-examination of patents before the Patent Office, and for the deletion of obsolete marking requirements and caveats.

These and other features advance the patent law towards becoming a more modern piece of legislation, and more in line with provisions in other industrialized countries.

However, the Committee is concerned that a considerable number of provisions in the law may have serious flaws. This is due to inadequacies of drafting and to deficiencies in the basic structure of the provisions themselves.

The novelty provisions fail to make an explicit requirement that applications be more than mere “obvious” variants on prior technology. The date for testing “obviousness” is not specified. This is a point that should be dealt with explicitly.

The novelty provisions appear also to be drafted so that applicants may file two, or more, applications for the same invention, and then theoretically obtain several patents for the same invention. The Commissioner may endeavour to prevent this from occurring, but the statutory language appears to permit it.

The provision to continue section 29 of the present Act so as to “deem” applications to have a filing date in Canada that dates back to a foreign priority date appears to have especially peculiar results. Foreign applicants claiming priority are not placed under the new regime by the Transition Provisions until up to one year later than Canadian applicants. The grace period may afford a one year longer period of protection to applicants filing on the basis of a priority claim than to Canadian applicants.

The Bill contains a "domestic refiling" procedure for Canadians which has the laudable objective of placing applications filed directly in Canada, on an equal footing with applications filed from abroad with a claim of priority. But as drafted, Canadians must give up their corresponding right to claim priority abroad, if they wish to benefit from the domestic refiling procedure. Canadians should have the full flexibility to file applications in Canada or abroad as freely as foreigners.

This domestic refiling section requires careful reconsideration as to its actual effects, and likely will require, along with many other provisions, subsequent amendment.

Submissions were made that portions of Canada's present law violate the Paris Convention, and that insufficient provisions are incorporated to allow Canada to adhere to the latest text of this treaty. These submissions merit further consideration.

The patent profession in a variety of submissions has raised a list of suggestions and concerns about the matters not dealt with in the Bill. These include requests that:

- an explicit limitation period be stated, to apply equally across Canada.
- provision be made to correct patents when some inventors have been improperly named, or omitted.
- patent claims be protected from being invalidated on the mere grounds that not all co-inventors participated in conceiving each claim.
- section 36 of the Act be amended so that the claims do not have to be recited twice, both in the body of the disclosure and at the end of the document.
- the rights of joint inventors to independently use, licence or sell their interests in a patent be defined.
- the intervening rights provision (section 58) be revised to define clearly the scope of immunity, and to limit it to bona fide cases of independent acquisition of the invention.
- provisions be introduced to extend a patentee's rights to control persons who contribute to infringement.

Objections were also made that:

- the Act provides no explicit criteria for determining the manner of calculating a patentee's damages.
- the Act lacks any provisions to apply where a patentee threatens infringement, without suing, and causes a business to suffer cancelled orders.
- the Act makes no provision for the effects of deferred examination on Canadians who wish to seek a licence to manufacture, under the present section 67, after three years from the grant of a patent. This period of delay should now date from filing.
- the transition provision for the 1935 revision (now section 80) needs to be repealed, as it extends to "any provision in force from time to time..."

All of these items listed deal with matters not referred to in the Bill. They merit consideration, and in many cases, incorporation into a revised patent statute for Canada.

The Committee has not had the resources to deal with all of these deficiencies by proposing amendments. Faced with the alternatives of not passing a large number of clauses dealing with general patent law amendments, or approving them with reservations, the Committee has decided to adopt the latter course. This is because the general patent law amendments may be relevant, to some extent, to the drug patent amendments, and the Committee does not wish to see a delay in the implementation of its recommendations in this regard.

Accordingly, in order to enable only those essential portions of the general patent law amendments to be proclaimed into force as may be deemed fit, a revision to the proclamation provisions contained in clause 33 of the Bill has been proposed as set out above.

It is hoped that the government will proclaim only those portions of the general patent law amendments that are necessary to ensure the early implementation of the other provisions of the Act. Then, it is the recommendation of the Committee that the government then take action to consult with the public and with practitioners in this field, in order to prepare amending legislation to deal with the concerns expressed in this part of the report.

Ultimately, the Committee would wish to see a patent law for Canada designed to encourage both invention and innovation, in a manner that would best serve not only inventors but all Canadians.

DISSENTING OPINION

This report represents the views of a majority of the Committee. The members who support the Government are in strong disagreement with the proposed amendments to Bill C-22.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL

TERRORISM AND PUBLIC SAFETY

AUTHORIZATION TO REVISE AND TABLE FRENCH VERSION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE REPORT AT LATER DATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have here a motion concerning the French version of the Report of the Special Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety. I could of course give notice of the motion, but with your leave, I would like to move it now, with the option of adjourning debate if there are any objections.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move:

That the French version of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Terrorism and Public Safety, tabled in the Senate on Monday, August 10, 1987 (Ses-sional Paper No. 332-521), be revised and tabled at a later date.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987—CLAUSE 16—STATUS OF WOMEN—SOURCE OF LEGAL OPINIONS—CONSULTATIONS WITH EXPERTS—NATURE AND SOURCES OF ADVICE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In responding yesterday to a question by Senator Fairbairn, who had asked where the opinions concerning women's rights of equality came from, according to Hansard at page 1645, the Leader of the Government responded with, "statements on the matter made before the joint committee by various witnesses from outside government and by the Deputy Minister of Justice of Canada." The Deputy Minister of Justice of Canada is very well known to many of us. He was a distinguished dean of the law school and provost of the University of Toronto. He would not claim to be, nor is he known as, a constitutional expert. Therefore, I assume that the Leader of the Government in the Senate means that the Deputy Minister of Justice formed a committee of advisers. Will he tell this chamber who was on that committee of advisers?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General of Canada does not give, as my friend will surely be aware, curbstone legal or constitutional opinions. The opinions and advice he gives to the government are, I am sure honourable senators are aware, as a result of considerable study and consideration within the Department of Justice.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, I am sure that such is the case and, in fact, that was the import of my question. Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate then saying that only constitutional opinions within the Department of Justice were relied upon in arriving at the conclusions the government reached with regard to clause 16?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can tell the Senate that during the First Ministers' meetings on this matter the relationship between the "distinct society" clause and the Charter of Rights was considered at very considerable length, and at one point in the proceedings the Prime Minister of Canada, who was chairing the meeting, asked to have the "experts" brought in, and they were brought in. I can say that they included the present Deputy Minister of Justice, a former Deputy Minister of Justice and several experts whom I do not feel I am at liberty to name at the moment, because they were advisers to provincial governments. Even if I were at liberty to name them, I can only remember the name of one of them.

Senator Marsden: I wonder, then, if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would tell us whether Mary Eberts and Anne Bayevsky, who are the authors of what is considered to be the premier work on equality rights and the Charter, were amongst those experts who were consulted?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I believe not. In any case, I did not meet them during the course of the First Ministers' meetings.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate would then tell us if Beverly Bains, Lynne Smith, Jennifer Banquier or Luci Lamarche were amongst those experts who were consulted in that context?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, at the meeting in question, I am almost certain that they were not present.

Senator Marsden: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate then tell us if any of the constitutional experts in this country, who deal explicitly with equality rights and the Charter, were among those consulted? I think I have listed most of them.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hesitate to do this, but there are people in the Department of Justice, including the Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice (Public Law), who are qualified in this area. I presume the point my friend is making is that the experts who were brought in at the time of that meeting were not women.

Senator Marsden: No, I am not—

Senator Murray: Then, unless I am wrong, all of the names that have been mentioned by the honourable senator were women or members of women's groups. I hesitate to begin naming the various people who have given professional legal advice to the Government of Canada, because I do not want to impute to them the political responsibility for the decisions that were taken by the Government of Canada and by the various First Ministers. However, I do say that the interrelationship between the "distinct society" clause, the linguistic duality clause—those two interpretative clauses—on the one hand, and the Charter of Rights, on the other, was considered at great length by the First Ministers and with the assistance and advice of a number of legal and constitutional experts.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, I would not want the Leader of the Government in the Senate to misinterpret my meaning or the intention of this questioning. I am not suggesting that all the constitutional experts are women, although I am sure a great many of them are. In response to Senator Fairbairn's question yesterday, reference was made to "various witnesses from outside government and by the Deputy Minister of Justice of Canada."

We know that the latter would not claim to be an expert, and you have confirmed that. Therefore, the real question is: Who is it who was consulted, and in whom we can have faith that they really understand the relationship between equality rights and the Charter? You have named Mr. Tasse and Mr. Iacobucci and Claire Beckton, who I assume is someone from inside the Department of Justice. I also assume that perhaps John White was there. I am simply wondering whether there are other people whom the Leader of the Government in the Senate considers to be experts. If we knew who those people were, this would be helpful in making a judgment with respect to how to proceed.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator, I think, is attempting to engage in a debate as to who, in her view, might be an expert in this field and who, in my view, or in the view of other people, might be experts.

● (1410)

We have confidence in the quality of the advice we have received and in the eminence in their field of those people who have given the advice to us.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have a further question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate on this sensitive area in the Constitutional Accord.

Given that the advice received was from highly regarded and qualified experts, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me whether that advice itself carried qualifications, was it qualified opinion, and, if so, what were those qualifications?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I believe it would be a great mistake on my part to try to describe the advice to the Senate. In due course I will be speaking to the Committee of the Whole, and I will be accompanied on that occasion by the Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations and by the Deputy Minister of Justice of Canada, who can and, I am sure, will elaborate on the position of the government and, indeed, of the First Ministers with regard to that matter. I may also say that my colleague, the Minister of Justice, will probably be appearing later in the proceedings of the joint committee. The officials of the Department of Justice will be in a position to elaborate upon the advice and upon the position of the Government of Canada.

In addition, members of the joint committee have the opportunity to question various witnesses, as they have questioned Mr. Beaudoin and Mr. Décary, and as they will be questioning Professor Lederman and others who come before the committee. We will see what the weight of the evidence is. My friends in the Committee of the Whole are likewise at liberty to invite various experts to give their testimony, including some of the people mentioned by Senator Marsden in the preamble to her question.

Senator Fairbairn: Would it be possible to include the experts who actually advised the government on that evening, or are these people who should be called separately? Would they be part of the leader's presentation in the Senate?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think it would be fair to begin with the Deputy Minister of Justice, who is the principal legal adviser to the Crown.

TRANSPORT

TRANSFER OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL SERVICE FROM OTTAWA TO GATINEAU

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have heard that the air traffic control facility is being moved from the Ottawa International Airport to Gatineau. I do not know whether this is a fact or not. The reason given was that the service was now to become bilingual.

If that is a matter of policy, does that mean when any government service is bilingual it has to be moved across the river, or can we count on continuing our mixed residence for bilingual services of the federal government?

International Airport to Gatineau. I will have to look into the matter and bring in a report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you sure you want the answer to be no, because the question was: "Can we count on it?"

Senator Murray: The second part of the question was whether, whenever a bilingual service was required, it was necessary to move the facility across the river. Obviously, the answer to that question is no.

Senator Frith: And then he added "or can we count on it?"

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS NATIONAL PARKS

PAYMENT TO PROVINCES FOR LAND TO ESTABLISH PARKS— GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I would like to deal with a couple of matters that were raised in Question Period yesterday. Senator Molgat asked a question concerning South Moresby. The answer to his question is that the agreement with the Province of British Columbia for the establishment of the South Moresby National Park Reserve requires that Canada provide for federal expenditures of $106 million over eight years. These funds are not to be paid to the B.C. government. Of the $106 million total, $20 million is for park capital development; $20 million is for park operation costs; $23 million is for acquisition of third party forest interests, which is to be cost-shared with B.C.; $1 million is for acquisition of other third party interests; and $50 million is for a Queen Charlotte Island Regional Development Fund.

It should be emphasized that the federal government has no intention of changing the policy which requires that provincially-owned crown lands be transferred to Canada at no cost. The rather large amount of money directed at the park's establishment and regional development does not set a precedent for future national parks.

As the most internationally significant wilderness area of Canada, South Moresby is the catalyst to ensure that the Queen Charlotte Islands reach their potential as a world-class tourism destination.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—REDUCTION OF CANADIAN URANIUM EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have some information with regard to the court decision in the United States concerning the enrichment of foreign uranium for use in U.S. power reactors. I believe this matter was raised by Senator Buckwold yesterday.

The government was disappointed, of course, to learn of the decision of the appeal court in Denver. The decision to restrict the enrichment of foreign uranium was taken, the government notes, not by the United States administration but by a court of law.

The government has expressed its concern to the United States administration and supports that administration's decision to seek to have the case appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I request leave to bring forward Orders No. 2 and No. 3. Orders No. 2 and No. 3 relate to Bills C-18 and C-19, respectively. It seems that there is a general disposition of members on both sides of the chamber to deal with these two orders quickly.

I should like to get the committee reports on these two bills dealt with first, and then proceed to Order No. 1, which relates to Bill C-22. That may take just a little longer.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL, 1987 MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT BILL, 1987

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications (Bill C-18, An Act respecting national transportation), presented in the Senate on 10th August, 1987, and the Ninth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications (Bill C-19, An Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings), presented in the Senate on 10th August, 1987.

[Translation]

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, although two separate orders referred Bills C-18 and C-19 to the Committee on Transport and Communications, and consequently, two reports were tabled, I am sure you will have no objection to my giving you the following clarification regarding the proposed amendments to both bills, this for the sole purpose of avoiding undue delay in considering these reports.

The Committee on Transport and Communications met twenty-seven times and heard seventy-five witnesses, including the Hon. John Crosbie, Minister of Transport, and his Parliamentary Secretary, Mr. Blaine Thacker, Member of the House of Commons, accompanied by the department's senior officials. In addition to these verbal presentations, the committee received and considered many important recommendations, in the form of briefs and telegrams, from groups and individuals concerned who either supported or challenged the legislation, in whole or in part.

After considering the testimony and submissions, the committee decided to submit the following amendments to Bill C-18.

On pages 4 and 5, clause 6: Strike out lines 39 and 40 on page 4, and lines 1 and 2 on page 5 and substitute the following, and I will read the amendment:

"tion 8, of not more than nine members appointed by the Governor in Council, each of whom must, on appointment or re-appointment and while serving as member, be a Canadian citizen or permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration Act, 1976 and among whom there must be at least one representative from each region of Canada."

The original text of this clause did not contain the citizenship and residence requirement for members to be appointed to the National Transportation Agency, and the amendment corrects this oversight. Otherwise, foreigners could become members of the agency, and that is why the committee decided to word the amendment in such a way that either requirement would have to be considered by the Governor in Council when appointing members on recommendation by the Minister of Transport.

The remaining nine amendments to Bill C-18 are purely linguistic in nature, as a look at the original text and the text as amended will show. I therefore think I can dispense with further comments.

As for Bill C-19, your committee recommends the following amendments:

Page 5, clause 8: Strike out lines 16 to 19 and substitute the following:

"(b) have regard to any statement of public transportation policy issued by the Governor in Council after consultation by the Minister with the government of each"

The Governor in Council was substituted for the federal government and "after consultation by the Minister" was added by our amendment.

Page 14, new clause 34(2.1):

This is an addition to the original bill, and the amendment reads as follows:

"(2.1) After the completion of the review referred to in subsection (2), the Minister shall cause a copy of a report of the review to be laid before each House of Parliament on any of the first fifteen days on which that House is sitting after the report has been prepared."

This is an addition, as I said before.

The third amendment, at page 14, clause 35, is also new: add, immediately after line 35, the following:

Under the title "Annual Report":

35.(1) After the expiration of each of the years 1988 to 1993, the Minister shall prepare the report referred to in subsection (2) and shall cause a copy of the report to be laid before each House of Parliament on any of the first fifteen days that that House is sitting after he completes it.

This is an annual report, not provided for in the original version, which must be tabled in both Houses of Parliament.

The report of the minister shall contain the following, and this is still the same new sub-section:

(a) the available statistical information respecting trends of highway accidents in Canada involving motor vehicles operated by extra-provincial bus undertakings and extra-provincial truck undertakings; and

(b) a progress report on the implementation rules and standards respecting the safe operation of extra-provincial bus undertakings and of extra-provincial truck undertakings."

In concluding, honourable senators, I would like to mention the number of senators who took the trouble to attend the committee's sittings although the Senate had adjourned for the summer. I was astonished to see such assiduous attendance and so many members present. I would like to thank committee members whose support I greatly appreciated, as committee chairman. Their co-operation was unfailing, and again, I want to express my cordial thanks.

Honourable senators, I move that the report on Bill C-18 be adopted.

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I want to say something about the reports on Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. Both of these bills came to the Senate late in June. Both were referred to the Transport and Communications Committee for consideration on Monday, June 29, 1987. On that day Bill C-19 was dealt with first. I remind honourable senators that that bill, Bill C-19, was given first reading in this place on Thursday, June 25; second reading was moved the following day, June 26; and the second reading itself took place at the next sitting, Monday, June 29.

At that point the senator sponsoring Bill C-19 for the government declined to move that the bill be advanced to the next stage of the ordinary legislative process, namely, consideration by committee. Senator MacDonald (Halifax) said:

I have acquainted myself as best I can with the bill, and I am quite confident that it is a good bill. I have no intention of referring it to committee.

In that lacuna, Senator Frith intervened to move that the government's bill be advanced. He did that on June 29, at page 1487 of the Debates of the Senate. I am sure the Minister of Transport is very grateful to Senator Frith for his cooperation, which was necessary for the progress of the bill.

Senator Frith: Don't count on it.

Senator Stewart: Much the same happened in the case of Bill C-18. That bill was read here for the first time on June 18; the second reading motion was made on June 22; and the debate concluded on Monday, June 29.

Again, the honourable senator who was sponsoring the bill on behalf of the government, in this case Senator Macquarrie, declined to move that the bill go through the next stage of the ordinary legislative process. Once again the ever cooperative Deputy Leader of the Opposition helped out by moving that the bill be referred to committee.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: On the morning of the next day, Tuesday, June 30, the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications met to plan the work which had been assigned to it by the Senate on Bills C-18 and C-19. It was agreed by the committee that it would complete its work on those two bills before the House of Commons returned from its summer adjournment in September. The House of Commons, as we know, by its Standing Orders, adjourns at the end of June for a summer recess.

That decision by the committee was not acceptable to the government, and later that day the Leader of the Government in the Senate announced that Mr. Mazankowski would have the House of Commons brought back immediately to await the pleasure of the Senate on Bills C-18, C-19 and C-22. That turned out to be an empty threat.

An Hon. Senator: Thanks to the Speaker!

Senator Stewart: On that day, Tuesday, June 30, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate again demonstrated the cooperative spirit of the opposition.

Senator Guay: Where was Senator Flynn?

Senator Stewart: Senator MacEachen said:

If there is an argument to the effect that it is crucial and urgent to have the transport bills dealt with in mid August rather than mid September, then we would listen to that.

Of course, in that spirit the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications considered whether or not the work on these two bills could be speeded up.

On July 7 the committee reported to the Senate that it believed it could report the two bills by Monday, August 10. As senators know, the committee succeeded in doing so. We are now considering the two reports eventuating from the work of the committee. That is how we got to where we now are.

Before I say anything about Bill C-19, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate the unhappy situation which prevails with regard to the evidence. Senator Langlois has mentioned the important work done by the committee. We heard from the Minister of Transport; we heard from the parliamentary secretary; we heard from the Deputy Minister of Transport; we heard the evidence and views of various people, both carriers and shippers, who are interested in transportation. These two bills—Bill C-19, dealing primarily with trucking undertakings, and Bill C-18, dealing primarily with rail and air transportation—are of very great economic importance. They are also important to persons wishing to travel from one part of the country to the other. Given their importance, it behooves honourable senators to consider the evidence on which the reports on Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 are based.

At the beginning of the work of the committee, I called to the attention of the chairman the fact that we would have to have the translated and printed evidence before we prepared our report. It soon became clear that we were not going to get the translated and printed evidence. What we got from time to time were printouts from a word processor. It is possible to work with some of this material, although it is awkward, when the print is good. Unfortunately, some of the most important evidence was virtually unreadable. Last week this question was raised again: What progress was being made with respect to producing the translated and printed evidence? At that time there was a rumour that that evidence would not be available until August 24. The Clerk of the Senate came before the committee to tell us that 50 translators had been engaged to bring forth the translation and that it was his understanding that the evidence would be available as of August 5.

Just before I came in here today, honourable senators, I checked to see what actually is available. I found that in my office I had received the proceedings of the committee up to the hearing of Monday, July 20. I stopped by the distribution office and found that since then another fascicle of evidence had been made available, that for Wednesday, July 29. The proceedings of the intervening meetings are not yet available.

Consequently, honourable senators, I find it difficult to understand how the Senate as a whole will be able to proceed beyond this point with these two bills. It is difficult enough for members of the committee to try to form a judgment on the amendments which are being proposed or, rather, which have been made by the committee, and this is particularly true when the evidence is in the other official language. How the Senate as a whole can be expected to pass these two important bills—bills fundamental to our economy—without having had an opportunity to see the evidence, particularly that of the Deputy Minister of Transport, I find almost incomprehensible. But that is the situation. Perhaps some repair work will be carried out later this day, but that still means that there will be a lot of reading to be done before the end of the week.

I should like to say something about the content of the two reports that are now before the Senate. Honourable senators will know that Part II of Bill C-18, the National Transportation bill, deals with air transportation. That is the only part of the two bills which deals mainly with the movement of passengers. I will say a few words about Part II first.

[Senator Stewart.]

Your committee was anxious concerning the impact of economic deregulation on the safety aspect of air transportation. We have heard various horror stories emanating from the United States, particularly with regard to the series of accidents which has beset Delta Airlines in recent weeks.

If honourable senators could read the evidence—it is not yet printed, and the computer printout is hardly legible—they would discover that those horror stories were not denied by the witnesses from the Department of Transport. However, those witnesses insisted that the situation which gives rise to those horror stories in the United States is not a result of economic deregulation but that, rather, it is the result of President Reagan's treatment of the air traffic controllers in the United States, the result of the resort to the hub system, and the result of the congestion produced by the large number of passengers seeking to travel and the large number of carriers making themselves available to carry passengers.

On July 20 the deputy minister was asked specifically about the Delta Airline incidents. It was his considered estimate—he refused to accept the word “guess”, for deputy ministers do not “guess”, they make estimates—that there was no connection between that series of incidents and economic deregulation. I believe that we have to accept someone's view on this, and I suppose that the Deputy Minister of Transport is as good a source of an “estimate” at this point as anyone. I phrase it that way because I believe there is still some uneasiness in the minds of some members of the committee; but in the absence of conclusive demonstration one way or the other, we have to go with an “estimate”.

Part III of Bill C-18 and all of Bill C-19—the Motor Vehicle Transport bill—deals with the carriage of goods. I wish to make a few summary comments on what we heard in evidence with regard to the economic deregulation of the carriage of goods.

First, it became very clear that the debate here was one between shippers, on the one hand, and carriers, on the other. Shippers contended that Bills C-18 and C-19 were highly desirable. Carriers, on the other hand, anticipated intense competition and a decline in revenues, with all the disadvantageous consequences which may follow.

Second, in the arguments put forward by the shippers there was heavy reliance on the notion that those persons engaged in the carriage business, whether by rail or by highway, should be required to operate in a market situation. They ought to be exposed to the invigorating winds of competition. For example—and I mention these names because they may surprise some senators—both the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Retail Shippers' Association—the latter represented by persons ordinarily employed by the T. Eaton Company and by Sears—based their arguments in favour of Bills C-18 and C-19 on the benefits flowing from free competition. The question was raised with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association whether they thought there should be free competition in world markets in textiles; they declined to respond.

The third point to notice in the evidence is that some of the stronger support for Part III of Bill C-18 came from commodity shippers, particularly exporters in western Canada. I am sure that there is not a member of the committee who would disagree that commodity shippers, particularly in western Canada, see Bill C-18 as liberating them from their captivity to one or other of the two major railways, which they contended often enjoy a monopoly position that enables them to exploit western commodity exporters. At times the evidence was reminiscent of the old argument that we used to hear that insofar as many easterners were concerned, the west exists to maintain eastern based institutions such as the railways and banks.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: Spoken like a westerner!

Senator Stewart: I suppose there are those who regard this legislation as a kind of charter of liberation for western Canada insofar as transportation is concerned. Indeed, the parliamentary secretary, in urging us to report the bills favourably, made the point that these bills were especially popular in western Canada.

I come now to a fourth point. Insofar as trucking is concerned, these bills will permit more U.S. trucking undertakings to be licensed to operate in Canada. This will result in considerable north-south integration of trucking, especially in Quebec and Ontario and, to some extent, in British Columbia. In contrast, to obtain a licence to operate a domestic air service, one must be a Canadian. In other words, insofar as air transportation is concerned, attention will still be given to maintaining the integrity of a strictly Canadian, east-west transportation system. However, this will not be the case with regard to trucking and, to a lesser degree, to the railways. The Minister of Transport told us, however, that the requirement that one be a Canadian, as defined by the interpretation section of the bill, was included in Part II because it was general practice in other countries. He was not prepared to defend this inclusion on the basis of theory nor was he prepared to deny it. He was simply asserting that what we are doing is no different from what is done in other countries.

A fifth point which I want to mention is that a great deal of concern was expressed by your committee about the question of safety. First, with regard to railway safety, we were told that the government will introduce a bill establishing a new safety regime for the operation of railways later this year. That, of course, was reassuring. Second, with regard to trucking safety, we were told repeatedly that satisfactory progress is being made toward the introduction of all the elements of a national safety code for highway traffic, indeed, that that code will be fully operative in all the provinces within the next year or so.

Now, I want to say something about some of the amendments to Bill C-18 insofar as the English text is concerned. As Senator Langlois has said, they are three in number. One of these amendments corrected what I suppose was an oversight, the possibility that the new Canadian Transportation Agency might be composed of, let us say, citizens of the United States. That possibility was open in the bill as it came to us from the House of Commons, but it has now been removed. Then, of course, there was the famous new province, "Albberta," which Canada acquired by the misspelling of Alberta. That was corrected by your committee. The last English version correction looks insignificant, but I call your attention to amendment number 10 which we made, because in the version of the bill that came to us from the House of Commons a crucial "or" had been left out.

Senator Bosa: The MacDonald amendment.

Senator Stewart: There was a double requirement in the unamended bill, but this is corrected by inserting the word "or".

Insofar as Bill C-19 is concerned, three amendments were made by the committee. I call your attention to that report, the adoption of which will be moved by Senator Langlois. The first of these requires that a statement of public transportation policy, which is to be taken into account by the provincial transportation boards, must be made by the Governor in Council. Perhaps I should say a word of background here. Insofar as trucking undertakings are concerned, most of them come under federal jurisdiction under the Constitution. For some 30 years or more this authority has been delegated by the Parliament of Canada to the provincial governments. For a period, the provincial boards which will be issuing licences to persons wishing to enter into trucking undertakings will have to apply certain tests, and in the bill as sent to us from the House of Commons one of those tests was that the provincial transport board was to

(b) have regard to any relevant written expressions of public transportation policy issued by the Government of Canada after consultation with the government of each province affected thereby.

That seemed to the committee to be defective in several respects. It was corrected so that that subsection will require the provincial transport board to province, and so on.

During the five-year period that begins when Bill C-19 goes into effect—it is anticipated that that will be January 1, 1988—the present test, which is public convenience and necessity, is to be replaced by an easier test, the so-called reverse onus test. This means that any person can apply for a licence to engage in extra-provincial trucking and will receive his licence unless there has been a successful objection. That is the meaning of "reverse onus".

In deciding whether or not to refuse a licence, the provincial board is to take public interest into account, but there is no definition of "public interest". We thought that an effort should be made to correct this; however, we were convinced that the federal-provincial problem of attempting to decide what "public interest" means in all the ten provinces is probably insuperable; that it will mean one thing in Nova Scotia, another thing in New Brunswick, and yet another in Prince Edward Island, just to take three provinces in one area of the country. Therefore, we abandoned that approach.

What we did propose was that there should be a report to Parliament after the review which is required toward the end of the period when the reverse onus test is in effect. At the end of that five-year period, assuming that the reverse onus test has not produced serious deleterious consequences, a new test—the so-called "fitness test"—is to come into effect. That, of course, will make it very easy for persons wishing to get into trucking to obtain licences. They will simply have to demonstrate that they are fit and able; in other words, that they have safe equipment and that they have the necessary insurance. However, that transition is not to take place without a study to ascertain how the reverse onus test has worked. However, there was no requirement that the minister report on the findings of that review. Honourable senators, that is the purpose of the second amendment proposed in the ninth report. If adopted, it will require that the minister shall cause a copy of a report of the review to be laid before each house of Parliament.

Honourable senators, the final amendment is probably the most important. At one point I thought that we should require that a report showing the efficacy of the public interest criterion in achieving uniformity throughout Canada in the licensing of extra-provincial trucking undertakings, and showing also the number and cause of accidents involving trucks in extra-provincial truck undertakings, be made to Parliament. However, it was argued by the parliamentary secretary, supported by officials from the department, that it would be difficult for the minister to make such a report. If he was required to evaluate the efficacy of the public interest criterion in achieving uniformity, he would, in effect, be required to pass judgment on the work of the provincial transport boards. Also, if he was required to report the causes of accidents involving trucks, he would be called upon to ask provincial authorities to give information, indeed, to acquire information which might not be readily available.

The concern here is related directly to safety. At present, under the public convenience and necessity test, it is fairly difficult to obtain a licence. As of January 1, 1988, a less demanding test will come into effect, the so-called reverse onus test. It will then be considerably easier to get into the trucking business. Indeed it is anticipated, and the philosophy of the bill suggests, that there will be more trucks on the highways, because there will be more competition.

Then, after five years, it will be extremely easy to obtain a licence. There will only be the fitness test to satisfy. Consequently, the committee felt that provision should be made to ascertain how these two tests—first, the reverse onus test and, then, the fitness test—are working. We thought that it was unnecessary to provide for a continuing examination, but we thought that the experience of the five-year period should be covered, and also enough of the period after the end of the reverse onus test regime—in other words, the first year or two of the fitness test regime—to see what was actually happening with regard to safety. That is why your committee, in its report, is proposing that there should be an annual report. This report will be brought about by the following provisions of the act:

35.(1) After the expiration of each of the years 1988 to 1993, the Minister shall prepare the report referred to in subsection (2) and shall cause a copy of the report to be laid before each House of Parliament on any of the first fifteen days that that House is sitting after he completes it.

(2) The report of the Minister shall contain the following in respect of each year referred to in subsection (1):

(a) the available statistical information respecting trends of highway accidents in Canada involving motor vehicles operated by extra-provincial bus undertakings and extra-provincial truck undertakings; and

(b) a progress report on the implementation of rules and standards respecting the safe operation of extra-provincial bus undertakings and of extra-provincial truck undertakings.

Since these provincial authorities are exercising delegated federal jurisdiction, Parliament has a right to be informed, indeed, it has a duty to provide that it be informed, as to what is happening with regard to accidents and the realization of the National Safety Code. Incidentally, honourable senators, I believe there may have been a word misspelled and a word left out in our report. It should read "on the implementation of rules" rather than "on the implementation rules."

There is one other matter, an almost private matter, which concerned the committee. The Iron Ore Company of Canada owns the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway. However, another company, a competing company known as Wabush, relies upon the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway to move its iron ore. The Iron Ore Company feels that the provisions of Bill C-18 with regard to last offer arbitration on tariffs could operate against the interests of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway and thus, of course, those of the parent company, the Iron Ore Company of Canada.

A statement was made to the committee on July 29, 1987, on behalf of the Department of Transport, and that statement was confirmed on August 5, 1987. This is the kind of evidence that I think honourable senators ought to have an opportunity to read. On the latter day I asked the parliamentary secretary if the statement made earlier by Mrs. Bloodworth, from the Department of Transport, should be regarded as a definitive statement by the government with regard to the Iron Ore Company's problem. Mr. Thacker replied:

Mr. Chairman, I can assure senators that that was a definitive statement. However, we have even more information for the members of the committee, and I would ask Mr. Weinberg to pass on that additional information.

Then Mr. Edward Weinberg, of the Department of Transport, gave us that additional information. That seemed to settle the matter and quieted the feeling of members of the committee that the Iron Ore Company was being dealt with unfairly by the bill.

Since then I have received a copy of a letter from the Iron Ore Company of Canada. The letter is addressed to the Honourable Leopold Langlois, Chairman of the Committee. That letter protests against what the departmental officials told us.

At no time has Iron Ore Company of Canada denied the common carrier status of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway. We constructed our railway for our iron ore operation and we are now known as a common carrier. Furthermore, we have, in the past asked to discontinue part of our operation, but the Government of Canada denied us that right and subsidized our losses on the passenger side, up to approximately 85 per cent. This is the reason why we received a subsidy of $5.5 million as stated by Mr. Ed Weinburger in his testimony on August 5 before your committee.

I would also like to point out the error made by both Margaret Bloodworth in her testimony before you and by the Minister of Transport, the Honourable John Crosbie, in his letter of May 20 about clause 48(3)(b) (See attached). They interpret the clause to mean that only one onus must be proved, i.e. a third party show they are "materially prejudiced". In fact, if this were so, IOC would not be concerned as it would be given the same status as Wabush in clause 59.

However, the wording in clause 48(3)(b) is not "or" but "and". Such wording is used for a reason which we assume to be the confidentiality of a contract between shipper and carrier. The clause puts a double onus on IOC: to prove infringement on "public interest and material prejudice" to IOC before the agency will send it to clause 59. This has been our concern from the start. IOC and Wabush are competitors in an iron ore operation.

Contrary to what Margaret Bloodworth testified on July 29, Wabush had another option in 1964. They could have constructed their own railway to go along with their iron ore operation as we did and as Quebec Cartier Mining has done. We feel that the minister's officials have chosen not to recognize the injustice that will be done to our company.

I read extensively from that letter, honourable senators, because it is very important that the Parliament of Canada should not do an injustice to any person. It seems to me that it is incumbent upon the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or whoever will speak for the government on this measure, to provide a conclusive rebuttal to what the Iron Ore Company has said in their letter to the chairman of the committee. I assume that that will be done before the government asks the Senate to give the bill third reading.

In conclusion, I want to say a word or two about the work of the committee. It is fair to say that we did not begin our labours in a good atmosphere. At the end of June the government was pushing the Senate far too hard. It was demanding that we complete our work on a pair of complicated bills in a very short period of time, an impossibly short period of time, and in circumstances which, as the lack of the evidence before us today shows, made it impossible for the committee to do its work properly. Nevertheless, the members of the committee, under the leadership of our chairman, settled down to the task, and I think it is fair to say that we had an instructive and a pleasant series of meetings.

One of the factors which made for the successful conclusion of the committee's work was the participation of the parliamentary secretary. Mr. Crosbie appeared before the committee at first, and that did not help at all. However, the government, in its wisdom, or somebody in their wisdom, had Mr. Thacker come in towards the end. Fortunately, he displayed an openness of mind and a readiness to concede that the bill as it had left the House of Commons was not the quintessence of perfection. That made it possible for the members of the committee to agree unanimously on all the amendments made to both Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. In fact, our record will show that some of those amendments were actually moved by members of the committee who support the government. Mr. Thacker made a helpful contribution to the work of the committee, but I think it is fair to say that the man who carried us through it all was the chairman of the committee, the Honourable Senator Langlois. He was patient with us, made us work diligently, and ensured that the committee had the assistance of good witnesses. Without his devotion we would not have been able to accomplish the task given to us by the Senate, namely, that we report these two bills on Monday, August 10.

Most of the amendments to the texts of the bills, particularly to the French texts, are the result of Senator Langlois' own reading and careful re-reading of the bills. I think we owe Senator Langlois a debt of gratitude.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the honourable senator a question. If I heard the honourable senator correctly, he stated that the purpose of clause 35(1) was to allow a review of the application of the reverse onus test, yet, when I look at clause 35(1), I see that it confines itself to a report on safety.

Perhaps I misheard the honourable senator, but, if I did not, I wonder how that clause can relate to an examination of the application of the reverse onus test.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I hope I understand the honourable senator's question. The connection between the reverse onus test and safety is that it is anticipated that the reverse onus test, which is to become effective January 1, 1988, will make it considerably easier for persons to enter into the trucking business. That will put a larger number of trucks on the highways. Just how much of an effect that increase in traffic will have on safety is hard to say, because many aspects of highway safety are primarily the responsibility of the provinces; nevertheless, the Parliament of Canada is instructing provincial transportation boards to bring in the reverse onus test, a test which, undoubtedly, if the legislation works, will put more trucks on the highway. That is the connection between the new test and safety.

Of course, there is an even greater connection between safety and the fitness test, which is to come into effect five years in the future. Then anyone who has safe equipment, safe drivers, and who can obtain insurance will be able to set himself up as an extra-provincial trucker.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I wish to make a few comments on the proposed transportation legislation. I read with interest that the Minister of Transport, the Honourable John Crosbie, chided the Senate and labour for holding up these transport bills. He went on to say that "anybody concerned with regional development or regional disparity would rush these bills through as fast as possible." I suggest to Mr. Crosbie that anybody concerned about the economy of Canada and the safety of its citizens would not rush these bills through but would take the time to better understand the impact of deregulation flowing from these bills.

A few weeks ago I attended two transportation conferences, one held in Montreal, Quebec, by the Conference Board of Canada, which was attended by people directly affected by deregulation and who had some knowledge of the impact of deregulation, and one held in Senator McElman's back yard, Fredericton, New Brunswick, which was an outstanding transportation seminar sponsored by the University of New Brunswick. The university brought in people from the United States, people representing the union side, the non-union side, the government side, operators, shippers, and almost anybody who in any way had been or will be affected by deregulation. I think the University of New Brunswick should be congratulated on its efforts, and, in particular, Dean Wilson and Professor Bisson for putting on such an objective transportation conference. Mr. Crosbie, instead of attacking the Senate and those of us who sit here from time to time, would have done a better service to Canadians if he had organized such seminars in other parts of Canada so that Canadians could be more familiar with what is taking place.

There are a number of things I should like to share with the members of the Senate. In my unique situation I serve as an officer of an international union that has probably been more seriously affected by deregulation in the United States than any other organization. My organization represents approximately 500,000 drivers, warehouse and office workers in the transportation industry, as well as being key players in the airline industry. As for the impact of the U.S. deregulation, it has generally been acknowledged that shippers have been the major winners, and the big shippers have been the big winners.

As expected, the initial phase of deregulation generated unprecedented competition, and, on average, we now have lower rates and fares throughout the U.S. transportation industry. However, the competition has been so severe that it has also produced an unprecedented number of losers. Everyone seems to have forgotten one of the pioneers of deregulation, Freddie Laker, who introduced low air fares, so much so that he was awarded the Order of the British Empire. Now, what was his contribution in the final analysis? Well, he bankrupted an airline and left investors stuck with approximately $40 million or $50 million, and 40,000 passengers with paid-up tickets but no planes to fly home on. Perhaps if I were successful in my other life of bankrupting a couple of Canadian trucking companies I would receive the Order of Canada, but I probably will not get the chance to do that, because deregulation will beat me to it.

Deregulation has also produced a trend toward corporate concentration amongst the survivors. With People Express now out of the airline picture, we have 84 per cent of the airline market controlled by six large carriers compared with 73 per cent in 1978. As a result of mergers, we now have six large regional systems controlling 86 per cent of the rail freight in the U.S. and 93 per cent of the profits. There were 13 carriers in 1978. In trucking, the number of carriers doubled since 1978, but 40 per cent of the new entrants have failed, and the top ten LTL carriers now account for nearly 60 per cent of the shipments and 90 per cent of the profits.

When you have a smaller and smaller number of competitors meeting each other in the marketplace, I think there is a real danger of "softer" competition. So, it is an open question as to where rates are headed in the long run under deregulation, and it remains to be seen whether the shippers retain their winners' status once all the mergers, acquisitions and bankruptcies work their way through the transportation system.

In any event, if the shippers are thought to be the winners to date, my organization in the United States has been characterized as one of the major losers, and our members as major casualties of the U.S.-style transportation reform. This is an entirely accurate picture. We saw 5,000 union jobs disappear in the Braniff bankruptcy alone, and there has been a steady erosion of jobs over the past six years in the trucking industry. Since trucking is where deregulation has had its greatest impact, I wish to base most of my remarks on our experience in that industry.

To begin, the impact of wide-open entry into trucking was totally predictable—and the same thing will happen here. In the United States some 17,000 new entrants descended on the industry like a swarm of locusts, most of them small, non-union companies and one-truck owner operators, the vast majority of whom were incapable of formulating a business plan extending beyond next month's truck payment. Their cost structures were extremely low relative to the established carriers, their economic lifetimes were predictably short, as reflected by their 40 per cent failure rate, and there seemed to be an inexhaustible supply of them, and they only stayed in business long enough to injure the legitimate operators. Almost overnight we had an invasion of these "entrepreneurs" in an economy that was in recession and a market that could barely sustain its existing carriers. Virtually everyone in the industry was forced to engage in cut-throat competition and non-economic pricing just to retain their market share. Those who saw this free-for-all as an opportunity to expand their market share, and who had the resources to take advantage of it, engaged in predatory pricing to run their competitors off. In addition to the 6,500 new entrants who went out of business, we had 74 major, long-established union carriers go down with them. These carriers had $5 billion in annual revenues and employed more and 120,000 union employees; 40 of these companies were large enough to employ 500 or more workers. This large-scale loss of jobs is by far the single most serious impact that transportation reform has had on labour.

I would like to explore this issue a little further, since the deregulators seem either not to understand or simply not to care about what has happened to these jobs. Our research department conducted a study of the employees of a large carrier that declared bankruptcy and closed its operations in 1982 as a result of deregulation—Spector/Red Ball, one of the ten largest general freight carriers in the U.S., with $430 million in annual revenues and 7,500 employees. The average age of the employees was 51, with 60 per cent of them being over 50 years of age. The average employee had 22.5 years of service with the company and 8 years remaining to retirement.

What happened to this large group of long-term, skilled and experienced workers? The deregulators will tell you that they found work with the other trucking companies that captured the business when Spector went under. The fact is that three years after they had lost their jobs, when the study was conducted, 30 per cent of these people were still unemployed. With an average age of 53, you can imagine their employment prospects. Of the remaining 70 per cent who found employment, half of them were forced to go outside the trucking industry, and 90 per cent of these people wound up in non-union jobs as groundskeepers, car salesmen, furniture salesmen, Red Cross workers, residential construction and other forms of self-employment. When we look at the entire group of 7,500 former Spector employees, only one-third remained in the trucking industry, and less than 20 per cent managed to obtain full-time union jobs within the industry.

In addition to this employment impact and all of the human suffering that goes along with it, there is another serious consequence of erasing a large segment of the skilled, experienced, union workforce from the industry. It has to do with what we are talking about today: the safety impact of their replacements—younger, less skilled, less experienced, non-union "entrepreneurs" who came into the industry with their own equipment and were forced to bid against each other for all of the freight that they could haul in order to meet their monthly payments.

These people were the subject of another study conducted in the mid-1970s, before deregulation, by a Harvard professor, Dr. Daryl Wyckoff. He wanted to know if unionized company drivers in the regulated sector of the industry operated any differently from non-union company drivers and owner-operators in the unregulated sector. In effect, he compared truck drivers, like those who were forced out of the industry when carriers liked Spector went under, with the kind of drivers who flooded the industry and displaced them under deregulation. His findings are more than a little disturbing. He found that:

Exempt, unregulated owner operators had over 3.5 times as many reportable accidents per 100,000 miles as the regulated common carriers; more than 3 times as many moving violations; almost 20 times the number of hours driving over the legal limit of ten hours; and they drove an average of 4 miles per hour faster.

Union drivers, mostly Teamsters, had 25 per cent fewer reportable accidents than non-union drivers; almost 2/3 fewer moving violations; and they drove an average of three miles per hour slower.

In short, the unregulated, non-union sector was characterized by unsafe operating practices relative to the regulated sector. Why should this be? It is because drivers in the regulated sector worked under compensatory collective agreements with their employers and were not subject to the type of undue economic pressure prevailing in the unregulated sector—pressure which forces drivers to run faster and for longer hours simply to make a living in a cut-throat environment.

Of course, since deregulation these pressures have spread to the rest of the industry and are now reflected in the increasing number of truck accidents on the highways. Between 1983 and 1985 interstate truck accidents went up by 25 per cent, from 31,500 to over 39,000. The American Automobile Association has cited driver fatigue as a probable or primary cause in 41 per cent of these accidents.

Highway safety is also being compromised in the area of truck maintenance. A great many drivers have chosen to deal with the competitive demands on their cost structures by deferring routine maintenance on their equipment. For example, in 1985 2,900 trucks were stopped in roadside inspections in Virginia. Half of them had sufficiently serious defects that they were ordered off the road. Next door in Maryland 55 per cent of the 4,600 trucks inspected were ordered off the road for repair. What is really frightening here is that Maryland has 500,000 trucks registered. This means that less than 1 per cent of them were inspected. In the following year, when inspections were beefed up and the Maryland state police examined 18,000 trucks over a five-month period, 72 per cent were removed from the road.

So next time you are driving down the highway, or out on the 401, or out on the freeway, and there is a truck in front or a truck behind, and you are in the middle, there is every reason to believe that either the one in the front or the one in the back cannot stop or has defective steering or defective equipment.

This same problem has shown up in state after state. It has become so bad in California that there is a move afoot in the legislature to reregulate in order to establish bottom-line trucking rates just to ensure a sufficient return for proper maintenance. In fact, truck safety under deregulation has become such a pressing issue in the U.S. that it was the subject of a CBS News "60 Minutes" segment on March 15 of this year, and the federal government has been forced to respond to the problem by tripling its funding for training state inspection teams from $17 million to $50 million.

These are some of the problems of transport reform in the U.S. that have been of particular concern to me. But there should be no misunderstanding. These are not just labour's problems or the trucking industry's problems; these are serious economic and social problems that are national in scope. Corporate concentration, deteriorating highway safety, the failure of long-established businesses, large-scale dislocation and unemployment all have price tags. While some of them are not right up front for the consumer to see, the bill will arrive just the same. All of these costs ultimately get factored into the equation of international competitiveness. In this regard, the U.S. experience is a wonderful case study for us. After ten years, with transport reform ostensibly aimed at lowering the cost of moving U.S. goods to market, are the Americans achieving a level of competitiveness in a world that fills Canadians with envy? I think not.

There was a lawyer at this conference at the University of New Brunswick, Mr. Jacobs, who was one of the pioneer lawyers who has represented most major carriers in the U.S.—many of them in Canada—in applications for licensing. His final position was summed up by saying that the benefits of deregulation in the United States were far outweighed by the damage caused to the industry in the United States. The government has raised the amount of money that they will spend on safety, and we are assured in this legislation that this federal government will have $23 million or $26 million set aside so that we will be able to police our own industry here in Canada.

There is an interesting article in the Montreal Gazette of November 11, 1986, which is a preview of what we can see will happen. We are led to believe by Mr. Crosbie, and by the government, that this legislation will have all kinds of people policing it and watching over it, and that the provinces will cooperate, and so on. Well, let us talk about what is happening already in the province of Quebec. There were 150 employees in their inspection system just a few short years ago; that has now been reduced to 68. I am quoting here from Renald Leduc, president of the Fraternité des constables du ministère des transports, where he said:

His members lost all their clout on Jan. 1, 1985, he said, when they stopped reporting to Transport Quebec and were assigned instead to the Sûreté du Québec.

The Quebec Provincial Police. He goes on to say:

The SQ took our $7-million budget and removed the flashers we had on our cars and then told us we no longer had the right to chase down trucks that failed to stop at our weigh stations.

Nor can the special agents patrol sideroads in search of delinquent truckers who detour around weigh stations.

When Mr. Binette, an agent at the Les Cèdres weigh station, called in about trucks that were going by and not reporting to the weigh station he says:

I was told that there's only one car on patrol for that area, . . . and it was out on an investigation. So they said to forget it and weigh those trucks that happened to pull in.

Leduc said:

. . . all truckers know how ineffective the stations are. So, if you are grossly overloaded, you simply drive around the station. Or else you drive right by, thumbing your nose at us because you know there isn't a thing we can do about it.

Leduc said there are 12 agents in his Longueuil office. Two years ago, two of the 12 would be out manning the local weigh station while the others were aboard the 10 patrol vehicles at their disposal.

Now we have two cars, one of which doesn't run any more. So two people are at the station, while the 10 others stay in the office. It's amazing what great blackjack players they've become.

That is, I think, a preview of what is going to happen in the provinces as far as policing or enforcing these new regulations is concerned.

In the past few years, as evidenced by the growing number of mergers, acquisitions and restructurings, the major Canadian carriers have been actively positioning themselves to operate in a deregulated environment. I foresee a continuation of this trend toward consolidation and anticipate that there will be no new major domestic carriers entering the market in the near term. Consequently, the influx of new entrants to the industry will be comprised almost entirely of small non-union companies and individual owner-operators. Under the "reverse onus" transition period contemplated in the act, these operators will be able to acquire operating authorities at will, since existing carriers will be unable to prove that a small entrant will significantly affect the industry or the public interest.

Small, non-union companies and owner-operators have an obvious cost advantage over the major carriers by way of lower wage structures and non-existent fringe-benefit packages. Moreover, these operators will find themselves under pressure to further reduce their costs in order to meet the severe competitive demands that currently exist in the Canadian trucking industry. Experience indicates that these operators tend to respond to such pressure by driving excessive hours and deferring maintenance on their equipment.

The downward pressure on labour costs and the potential for compromising safety are two key implications of deregulation that are of direct concern to me. I recognize that the labour cost advantage enjoyed by non-union competitors is a problem of special interest for the union sector to address by way of collective bargaining and recruiting endeavours. The safety cost advantage, on the other hand, is a matter of public concern, and one that must be effectively addressed by legislation.

What is especially disturbing to me in this regard is that whereas relaxed entry requirements are scheduled for implementation on January 1, 1988, effective and enforceable safety regulations currently under development in the form of the National Safety Code for Motor Carriers will not be in place and operational until late 1989 at the earliest. In my view, the infrastructure of legislation, regulations and personnel required to enforce effectively the safety provisions of the National Transportation Act is a prerequisite to any form of relaxed entry into the Canadian trucking industry. It is unthinkable to issue operating authorities at will when effective safety enforcement mechanisms are still at the developmental stage.

Given that this infrastructure will be in place no earlier than late 1989, I am strongly recommending that the implementation of the "reverse onus" transition period be deferred to January 1, 1990, and, correspondingly, that the "fit, willing and able" entry test be put into effect at the end of the proposed three-year transition period, on January 1, 1993.

As a consequence of our experience with deregulation in the U.S., I am also concerned with the potential for job dislocation in the organized sector of the industry. The government's new transportation policy can be expected to produce a significant shift in jobs from the union to the non-union sector of the trucking industry. The number of union members who will be displaced by the adoption of this legislation is presently expected to be in the 5,000 to 10,000 range. Many of these displaced workers will be either unwilling or unable to secure employment in the non-union and owner-operator sector of the industry with its marginal working conditions and rates of pay.

The legislation contains no mechanism to provide counseling or retraining to reintegrate these displaced workers into the productive workforce. I recommend that the legislation be amended to address this important concern, and propose that the task of reintegrating displaced workers be undertaken as a separate and special initiative using the general training services of the Department of Employment and Immigration.

In connection with this proposal, I also wish to emphasize that the job impact and the related retraining requirements can be significantly reduced by simply ensuring that the legislated safety infrastructure is in place and being enforced in a timely manner. This would remove the safety cost advantage enjoyed by the non-union and owner-operator sector of the trucking industry, thereby eliminating a potentially dangerous and destabilizing element from the environment that will be created by the new National Transportation Act.

In conclusion, while I have very serious reservations about the much heralded benefits of deregulation, I recognize that Parliament has given its approval to this course of action. What I am urging is that this new policy be implemented in such a way as to minimize the destructive impact on safety and employment. By delaying the implementation of the legislation until such time as the National Safety Code for Motor Carriers is fully operational, we can establish a level playing field for all participants in the new environment and curtail the natural tendency for operators to minimize costs at the expense of safety.

The other concern I have—and it is also a concern expressed by the industry, as noted by the The Journal of Commerce on March 20, 1987, in the headline “Canadian Truckers Wary Of Deregulation Effects”—is that under deregulation U.S. carriers could dominate Canada. In anticipation of the adoption of this legislation, many American carriers have already purchased Canadian companies to have their licences and to be in position to move in this area. Many of the major carriers that we do business with in the U.S. are poised for open entry across the border, and when they do they will come in with predatory pricing and they will wipe out many of the Canadian trucking companies as we know them.

Honourable senators, I have somewhat mixed views on this. On the one hand, these companies that are coming in are largely the major carriers, such as Yellow Freight and Consolidated Freight with which my international organization has contracts. They will come in at fair rates of pay and good working conditions. As a Canadian, I resent the fact that they are going to come in and are going to be able to almost destroy the Canadian transportation industry as we know and understand it.

I think the Minister of Transport, Mr. Crosbie, is wrong; there is a need for careful consultation and study about this. There are some serious safety factors which will affect Canadians as a whole. We are creating serious problems because of the conditions of our highways and all of the things that will flow from that. We need to move very cautiously and carefully, and the legislation and the Safety Code must come into effect at the same time or we are going to face serious problems in the transportation industry in Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John M. Macdonald: No. As honourable senators will remember, this bill was sponsored by Senator Macquarrie. In the normal course of events he would be speaking today. However, he is unable to be present and has asked me to take his place.

Hon. George van Roggen: On a point of order, does that mean that Senator Macdonald is closing the debate?

Senator Macdonald: No. I am speaking on the report.

At the outset, I must say that I am very grateful to Senator Stewart who gave a very detailed report on the bill and on the proposed amendments. If any questions are asked of me, I am sure he will not mind if I refer them back to him, because he has a more detailed knowledge of the bill than I do. Indeed, during the committee hearings he played a most important part, and that is not to detract from the contribution of the other members of the committee.

Honourable senators, as stated by the chairman, the committee did give the bill a very thorough study. In fact, the committee sat for most of July, and for those of us who come from far distances that was quite a sacrifice.

The committee heard every organization and person who wished to be heard. Besides that, it received a number of briefs from those who did not wish to appear in person. As was to be expected, there was a considerable amount of repetition as far as the arguments for quick or delayed passage of the amendments were concerned. However, even in such cases I was most impressed—as I am sure other members of the committee were—by those who gave evidence before the committee. Their detailed knowledge of their business and their confident attitude as to their ability to do business anywhere in the world was most impressive.

As was to be expected, some of the clauses of the bill gave some concern to members of the committee. A good many people from the Department of Transport appeared before the committee and they, too, were knowledgeable and able to clarify some points and meet some of the concerns of the members.

As mentioned by Senator Stewart, I thought the parliamentary secretary to the minister who appeared before the committee on two or three occasions was a most cooperative witness. He was reasonable, informative and not averse to accepting amendments. When he was not prepared to accept proposed amendments, he gave a reason for his attitude. Generally speaking, I think it could be said that he called the bill a sort of delicate balance package. Agreements have been reached over a long period of time, apparently between shippers, carriers and the provinces. He was nervous that any amendments might upset this delicate balance, causing him to go back, especially to the provinces, for a new agreement.

In any event, it was helpful that he attended our last meeting and was able then to provide answers as to what amendments would and would not be acceptable. Where there was not total agreement, the members of the committee and the parliamentary secretary understood and appreciated each other's point of view. Perhaps, as a member of the committee, I should not say this, but I do think it fair to say that the committee did a very complete and useful study of the bill. Of course, I am pleased to support the adoption of this report.

With regard to the point raised by Senator Stewart as to the Iron Ore Company of Canada, I will refer that matter to the department and provide an answer at third reading of the bill. I agree with Senator Stewart that it is difficult to formulate reasonable judgments without having all of the evidence of the committee proceedings before us, because this is a very complex and important bill. I think the only thing that remains to be said—and I suppose it does not need to be said—is that Senator Langlois, as chairman of the committee, performed his duties in his usual competent and very courteous manner. I ask honourable senators to support the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report on Bill C-18 adopted.

Motion agreed to and report on Bill C-19 adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall Bill C-18, as amended, be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill, as amended, placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall Bill C-19, as amended, be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill, as amended, placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—POINT OF ORDER

On the Order:

Consideration of the Sixth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, presented in the Senate on 10th August, 1987.—
(Honourable Senator Bonnell)

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Is the honourable senator moving the adoption of the report?

Senator Bonnell: Not yet, no.

Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: If you rise to speak on this item, I want to raise a point of order.

Senator Bonnell: Just sit down for a moment, please.

Senator Flynn: I ask the Chair to put the question.

Senator Bonnell: I am going to answer the senator's question. I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have not moved the adoption of anything. I stand—

Senator Flynn: The order has been read and it deals with the consideration of the report. I am asking if Senator Bonnell is moving the adoption of the report.

Senator van Roggen: Not yet.

Senator Flynn: Then the order will stand. If he is not doing anything, he can sit down.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, we all appreciate Senator Flynn. Without him in the Senate it would be quite dull. Let me say, honourable senators—on a point of order, since that is what we are talking about—that yesterday, August 10, 1987, I received a copy of a communiqué concerning the proposed amendments to Bill C-22, which was sent to Mr. Greene from the Director of Committees Branch. The director felt that there could be some procedural concerns respecting this report. I would like to bring those concerns before honourable senators so that the Senate as a whole will know what the concerns are with respect to the recommendations in the report.

I will read from this communiqué so that I do not misinterpret anything. It is directed to Mr. Richard Greene, Clerk Assistant, from the Director of Committees:

I have certain procedural concerns with respect to the proposed amendments.

1. The first amendment proposes to repeal Subsection 41(4) of the Patent Act. Bill C-22 does not propose to alter Subsection 41(4). Therefore the amendment may go beyond the scope of the Bill, making it an inadmissible amendment. To amend the Patent Act and not the Bill specifically before the House is not in order. Beauchesne's Fifth edition states:

An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee... An amendment may not amend sections of the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before the committee.

Honourable senators, I would point out that our committee had legal counsel. Our legal counsel's advice is that we are procedurally correct. I have before me a written document from our legal counsel stating that in his opinion we are correct in what we have done.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Might my honourable friend be good enough to table that document? We have not seen it.

Senator Bonnell: Yes. This document is from David J. French, LL.B., Ottawa. I would like to table this report, to form part of the record of today, to show that the advice we received is a signed, written document stating that we are procedurally correct.

An Hon. Senator: Could you read it?

Senator Bonnell: This document is three pages long, but if it is the wish of honourable senators, I will read it.

Senator MacEachen: No.

Senator Bonnell: Perhaps I will give honourable senators some idea of what is in this document. My own view is this: I agree that we would probably not be able to amend a section of an act when that section was not dealt with in the bill. But we are amending subsection 41(1), which is dealt with in Bill C-22, and it is subsection (4) of section 41 that we are amending. So, section 41 of the Patent Act is amended in Bill C-22, and I repeat that we are amending subsection (4). I feel that since section 41 is in Bill C-22 we have every right to amend subsection (4), because it is consequential to subsection (1) and it is relevant to subsection (1). That is an opinion—my opinion and the lawyer's opinion—but the house officer's opinion raises doubt. He is an LL.B. and is trained in patent law.

● (1550)

Senator Roblin: He has never cracked Beauchesne, I gather.

Senator Bonnell: I don't know what you gather.

Senator Flynn: Why don't you—

Senator Bonnell: On a point of order, why don't you listen, Senator Flynn, just for once.

Senator Flynn: With you it is never once; it is ten times.

Senator Bonnell: Do it twice.

Senator Flynn: No, I won't do it twice.

Senator Bonnell: Then do it three times. Let me say, honourable senators, that he brought up another point of order. He raised another point which he suggested might be a problem, namely, the royalty fund. He suggests—

Senator Barootes: Not your royalty fund.

Senator Bonnell: It was brought forward by the Director of Committees in a communiqué of August 10 to Mr. Richard Greene, the Clerk Assistant. His second point was relevant to the royalty fund. He states that:

Amendments Nos. 1 and 6 deal with the establishment of a new Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund into which the licensee will pay and from which payments will be disbursed to participating patentees.

He suggests that there may be two problems with these amendments. He says:

... both of them which may infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown.

That would be a very serious matter, and, in my opinion, I do not feel that we are doing anything like that. In my opinion, we are setting up a trust fund, the same as you would in a court. In my opinion, there is no money going into the national revenue and, in my opinion, there is no ways and means motion to govern how it is paid out. It is paid into a trust fund, the same as a judge in a court would order a trust fund. However, I am not a lawyer—

Senator Flynn: That is obvious.

Senator Bonnell: Senator Flynn is a lawyer.

An Hon. Senator: Thank goodness!

Senator Bonnell: "Thank goodness" someone says.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: On a point of order, may I ask the honourable senator what substance he is now dealing with? Is he dealing with the report?

Senator Bonnell: I am speaking on a point of order.

Senator Molson: What is the point of order?

Senator Bonnell: The point of order is—

Senator Molson: I think you are completely out of order.

Senator Bonnell: We are dealing with the consideration of my report, which was tabled yesterday.

Senator Molson: You have not moved the adoption of your report.

Senator Bonnell: I know I haven't.

Senator Molson: Then wait until you do. Get back on side.

Senator Bonnell: That being the case, I will make a motion:

That the Sixth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be referred back to the said Special Committee to consider the amendments proposed in the report;

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Bonnell:

That the said Special Committee for such purposes be revived, and

That it be an instruction to the Special Committee to report back to the Senate no later than Thursday, 13th August, 1987.

Senator Flynn: It is out of order, because it would require, first, at least one day's notice. What is before the Senate is the adoption of the report.

Senator Bonnell: No. I did not move the adoption.

Senator Flynn: At this point you cannot make that motion. You can give notice of a motion. But you cannot even do that today, because it is too late. You need one day's notice to move that kind of motion, because it is not on the order paper, it is entirely new.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What is on the order paper is consideration of the report.

Senator Flynn: Then move it. Move consideration of the report.

Senator Bonnell: I made a motion—

Senator Frith: Consideration of the report was moved yesterday.

Senator Flynn: Really, Senator Frith, are you losing your mind, arguing the way you are doing? It is all very well to say anything that goes through your mind—

Senator Frith: Finish what you have to say, and then I will speak.

Senator Flynn: Your Honour, I say that this motion would require one day's notice, that it is not in order at this point. That is sufficient to put it off.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, is the point of order being raised that notice must be given, and leave is not granted?

Senator Flynn: Leave is not granted.

Senator Frith: Then notice is given. Now you are out of order, because notice has been given, and we cannot deal with it until tomorrow. If you want to deal with it tomorrow, then we will deal with it tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: We are not dealing with the motion but with the report. The report is before the Senate. Senator Bonnell has risen on a point of order, and we are entitled to discuss the point of order he has raised. He has raised it to defeat it. He has built a straw man, and now he does not want anyone to deal with it. He won't get away with that. We have this report before the Senate. The question is whether or not the recommendations contained in the report are acceptable, and that is the point that we are entitled to discuss.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, let us get back to where we were. We were dealing with an order that is called "Consideration of the Sixth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22." Senator Bonnell rose on that consideration and moved a motion.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Frith: What is now before us is a motion, and we have been refused leave; and the order with which we have been dealing now stands over because of the motion that was made under that order.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Frith: That means that we now have to deal with that tomorrow, because leave was refused—

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Frith:—and I ask His Honour the Speaker to make that ruling. What we have before us, and what His Honour has in his hand, is a motion which, as read by Senator Bonnell, is to refer the report—that is what we were considering: consideration of the report—back to the committee, and to reconstitute the committee for that purpose. Since leave was not given, and notice was therefore given, it stands over until tomorrow.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Have we not missed a step in the proceedings? It has been my observation in the past that when a motion is called by the Table, that is not sufficient to put it before the Senate for discussion.

Senator Frith: He did not call the motion; he called the order.

Senator Roblin: But that is not sufficient to have it discussed. It has to be moved by a member of the Senate. It wasn't moved. The subject is not before us until someone moves it.

Senator Frith: He moved the motion.

Senator Roblin: That is not the point. We have before us this Order of the Day which was called by the clerk. The calling of an order by the clerk does not place an item before the Senate for discussion.

Senator Frith: Of course it does.

Senator Roblin: It does not. It has to be moved.

Senator Frith: What about an inquiry?

Senator Roblin: Certainly, but it is moved by the person making the inquiry.

Senator Frith: No, no—

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can have his opinion. I think that when the Senate reflects upon this matter it will come to the conclusion that it is up to an honourable senator to move a motion before it is before us for discussion. It is not sufficient merely to have the item called by the clerk at the Table. If I am wrong, I am willing to be corrected. I do not claim to be an expert in these matters. That has been my firm impression. It seems to me that we got off on the wrong foot when Senator Bonnell did not move his motion.

Senator Frith: He said he was rising on a point of order.

Senator Flynn: So, I rise on the same point of order.

Senator Roblin: Until the motion is before us, there is no point of order to be discussed with respect to that motion.

● (1600)

Senator Frith: But there is a motion.

Senator Roblin: The motion is not before us simply because the clerk calls it.

Senator Frith: Senator Bonnell moved a motion.

Senator Roblin: It has to be moved by a member of the Senate.

Senator Frith: He moved a motion.

Senator Roblin: He never did. Senator Bonnell was challenged by my friend here to move a motion, but he did not move it.

Senator Flynn: He could not.

Senator Frith: He did not move the motion that Senator Flynn asked him to move. But there is no requirement that Senator Bonnell move a motion asked for by Senator Flynn or by anyone else.

Senator Flynn: He cannot move a motion at all at this point in the proceedings.

Senator Frith: Where Senator Roblin got this proposition that nothing is before the Senate until a motion is moved I cannot imagine. The order was called, and what does the order say? Does it say, "continuing debate on a motion?" No. It says, "consideration of the report." Senator Bonnell got up under the heading of "consideration of the report" and made a motion.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): He said he had a point of order.

Senator Frith: Whatever he said, he moved a motion.

Senator Murray: He was asked two or three times, and he said he was on a point of order.

Senator Roblin: You can't bootleg in a motion on a point of order.

Senator Frith: Senator Bonnell is not bootlegging anything. Whatever he said, he eventually moved a motion. If a mistake was made, it was made when the other side refused leave to proceed with that motion and said that it required—

Senator Murray: You never asked for leave.

Senator Frith: Yes, leave was asked for.

Senator Murray: Leave was never asked for.

Senator Frith: Now we are on Senator Flynn's point of order when he rose to say that Senator Bonnell's motion requires one day's notice. The record will show that we asked, "Is leave not being given?", and Senator Flynn said, "No, leave is not being given."

Senator Flynn: Not even to give notice.

Senator Frith: So, at that moment leave was not given, because Senator Flynn said, in spite of what he is saying now, that the motion requires a day's notice.

Senator Flynn: But you cannot give it now.

Senator Frith: Therefore, when leave is not given, the motion becomes a notice which stands over until tomorrow. The proper procedure now, because leave was not given, is to call Order No. 4.

Senator Roblin: The proper procedure is to call Order No. 1.

Senator Frith: Order No. 1 was called 20 minutes ago.

Senator Roblin: Order No. 1 was called by the Table, so we should proceed with it. The fact is that my honourable friend here did not want to discuss Order No. 1.

Senator Frith: He was talking about the sixth report, which is what Order No. 1 is about.

Senator Roblin: He wanted to bootleg in a motion to deal with this question in another way. That is quite improper. What should now happen is that Order No. 1 should be moved by my honourable friend, Senator Bonnell, particularly since we cannot proceed with this bootleg motion which has obviously been introduced. The next order of business is not Order No. 4. We cannot skip over Order No. 1 like that. Something has to be done about it. It either has to be stood—

Senator Frith: If you had granted leave, we would be dealing with it. You refused leave.

Senator Roblin: Never mind that. If you try to bootleg things in like this, it is not likely to succeed, I suggest.

Senator Frith: The bootlegger is standing on his feet!

Senator Roblin: I suggest that the proper procedure at the present time is to proceed with Order No. 1, which the clerk has called and which we have not properly dealt with.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I hesitate to rise because I am not, by any stretch of anyone's imagination, an authority on parliamentary procedure. However, I do believe that there is a logical progression here, and I am having great difficulty understanding the points raised by honourable senators on the other side. Order No. 1 was called. As I understand it, it is now argued that the order, having been called by the clerk, cannot be discussed unless a motion is made relative to that order. Is that not the point some honourable senators are trying to make; that the adoption of the report must be moved before the order can be discussed?

Senator Flynn: That's not it.

Senator van Roggen: Senator Bonnell then rose on a point of order, and after developing the point of order for a short time, Senator Molson said that it was not in order for him to be doing so. Senator Bonnell then said, "If it is not in order for me to be doing so, I will move a motion instead."

Senator Guay: Right on!

Senator van Roggen: The proposition was then put forward that Senator Bonnell could not do that because Order No. 1, having been called, cannot be discussed or dealt with until the adoption of the report is actually moved. My point is simply this: Once an order is called, that order can be discussed and dealt with, without any motion being made or without any further steps being taken, in the same way as we deal with orders that do not involve reports or bills, such as Order No. 9 which deals with the consideration of the report on the "Snow-birds". Discussion of that order could go ahead without any separate motion being introduced. So, surely under Order No. 1, which has been called by the Table, discussion can proceed without a motion by Senator Bonnell for the adoption of the report. During the discussion on Order No. 1, Senator Bonnell made a motion that this matter be referred back to the committee. Leave was denied, so Senator Frith has said that we will let it stand as notice for one day, if you will not give leave.

The argument that it is incumbent upon Senator Bonnell to move the adoption of the report makes no sense to me. Maybe that is not what was meant, but it is certainly what I heard.

Senator Flynn: First, it is obvious that Senator Bonnell could not move the motion he introduced. Second, he could not give notice of that motion at that particular time. It was too late. Notices of Motions come at the beginning of the sitting. Third, Senator Bonnell rose on a point of order when Order No. 1 was called. Perhaps he moved consideration of the report implicitly, as Senator van Roggen has suggested, and I do not mind that. However, if he wants to discuss this matter without introducing a motion, he cannot object to my rising on a point of order. If Senator Bonnell was not speaking to the report and was really on a point of order, I am entitled to discuss his point of order. One way or the other, I am entitled to deal with the problem he raised, whether he raised it by moving a motion or implicitly by saying, "I am not talking about the report, I am talking about something else." If he wants to talk about something else, I will talk about something else. If he wants to talk about the report, I will deal with the report. But I raised a point of order also, because I want to discuss the point of order he raised, and that I am entitled to do.

Senator van Roggen: Can a point of order only be raised on one side of this chamber?

Senator Flynn: It was raised on your side.

Senator van Roggen: But Senator Molson said that it was wrong to raise it.

Senator Flynn: Senator Molson said that it was wrong to discuss the point of order without moving the adoption of Order No. 1, but that is something else. If he does not want to move it, it means that he is discussing only a point of order, and I am prepared to discuss a point of order. That is all, and I do not mind one way or the other.

Senator Guay: You objected to the motion.

Senator Flynn: You cannot prevent this discussion. You are trying to avoid discussing the point of order raised by Senator Bonnell at this time. It is the device you have used with regard to the so-called motion put by Senator Bonnell. It is so obvious. Do not take us for fools. Just because you have the numbers it does not mean you are right.

Senator van Roggen: Senator Flynn, I would never take you for a fool. I might disagree with you at times, but I do not disagree with you on this occasion. It seems to me from what you are saying that you would like to discuss the point of order. I am not trying to prevent you from discussing the point of order. Senator Bonnell was discussing the point of order when Senator Molson interjected and said that he should not be doing so. Personally, I think Senator Bonnell was wrong to give way to Senator Molson's objection; Senator Bonnell was quite properly discussing a point of order. When Senator Bonnell was finished discussing his point of order, Senator Flynn or any other senator could also have discussed it.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, if I might interject a word here about my intervention, my comment was that Senator Bonnell had not made his point of order. He rose on a point of order, and then went all through his report and the communications received from the clerk, and so on, but he did not say what the point of order was. That was my objection. He either has to have a motion, state a point of order, or sit down.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have listened quite carefully to the procedural arguments and I am trying to understand the nature of the difficulty which has been suggested by Senator Flynn and subsequently referred to by Senator Molson. I support 100 per cent the point made by Senator van Roggen in which he argued that it was possible, under this item, to have a debate. It is not necessary for Senator Bonnell or anyone else to put a motion in order to have a discussion or a debate on the report of the committee, which Senator Bonnell presented yesterday. In fact, if you look at the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, you will notice on page 1074 it says:

The Honourable Senator Bonnell moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buckwold, that the Report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

Therefore, yesterday a motion was moved, seconded, and carried that today the Senate would consider the report. Therefore, it is clear to me that it is totally in order to have a debate on that report, as was ordered yesterday by motion. I think that is absolutely clear, and therefore I think it was quite appropriate for Senator Bonnell or Senator Flynn or any other senator to get up and debate the report.

The question then arises: What sort of a motion can be made under this particular order, and what notice is required? It is interesting that on the scroll the Table officers presumed that Senator Bonnell would move the adoption of the report. They presumed that because it often happens, but it is not necessary that it happen.

Senator Flynn: Always.

Senator MacEachen: It is not necessary that it happen, but if Senator Bonnell had moved the adoption of the report, would anyone have risen and said that he needed a day's notice? Obviously not. We saw just a few moments ago Senator Langlois, as Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, under a similar order made yesterday—namely, the consideration of the report—move a motion that his report be adopted.

However, it was not necessary, procedurally, for Senator Langlois to move the adoption of his report in order to have a debate. Senator Stewart could have made his speech under the item of "consideration of Senator Langlois' report" without the movement of a new motion. But what is interesting is that we ask ourselves: Is it appropriate to make a motion under this particular order? We obviously find that it is, because a motion has been made to adopt the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. I suggest it is equally in order, rather than move the adoption of the report, to move to refer the report of the committee back to the committee itself.

Senator van Roggen: Exactly.

Senator MacEachen: In fact, if you look at Beauchesne, there is ample reference, when a committee report is made, to the possibility of referring that committee report back to the committee. In the case of a special committee Beauchesne says, of course, that you have to add the requirement that the special committee be revived in order to do it. Therefore, I think it was quite appropriate for Senator Bonnell to make that motion.

Honourable senators, the objection has been raised that Senator Bonnell made the motion on a point of order. That is a technical point that will have to be considered. However, that does not preclude me from making the motion, because I am speaking on a point of order raised by another, and when that point of order is disposed of, I am free—as is any other senator—to make the motion, which might be held inadmissible because Senator Bonnell made it on a point of order. We still have his motion before us, namely, the consideration of the report, and if it is ruled that Senator Bonnell acted improperly in making his motion when he said he was speaking on a point of order, then, of course, it is open to another senator to make that same motion.

Of course, honourable senators, I think it might be alleged—and I am not going to press the point—that Senator Bonnell's motion constitutes an instruction to the special committee. To that extent, if, indeed, Senator Bonnell's motion is held to contain an instruction to the committee, then, of course, I understand that, according to rule 45 of the rules of the Senate:

(1) One day's notice shall be given . . .

I think it would be pressing the point very hard to insist that one day's notice is required. However, Senator Frith has asked for a ruling, and I think we must have a ruling on this particular point. There are, in fact, two points: Whether Senator Bonnell is estopped from making this motion because he referred to the fact that he was speaking on a point of order; and whether it requires one day's notice. Those are the two points, and if Your Honour rules, then we can later proceed, still under this order, to move the motion, because I insist that under this order it is as valid to move the motion to refer the report back to the committee as it is to move the adoption.

Senator van Roggen: Of course.

Senator MacEachen: It is quite as valid, and, to speak quite frankly, the Table officers had no right to put down under Senator Bonnell's name:

... moves ... that the Report be adopted—

I do not think he told them he intended to move the adoption. Speaking quite technically and correctly, the scroll should not have contained the assertion "Senator Bonnell moves ...," because he had given no indication to the Senate that he intended to move the adoption. In fact, he had already decided not to move the adoption. He had decided to move that the report go back to the committee.

● (1620)

Senator Flynn: When did he decide that?

Senator MacEachen: He obviously decided it, because he made the motion.

Senator Flynn: Yesterday?

Senator MacEachen: I have no idea. However, if he had decided yesterday or this morning, he was not obligated to inform anyone. He informed the Senate itself when he rose in his place today. That is the situation. Let us not be mesmerized by the fact that there appears on the scroll the notation, "Moved by Senator Bonnell" that "the Report be adopted," because there was an alternative which he exercised, and that was to move that the report be referred back to the committee.

There may be some procedural difficulties, but one of them is not the right to move this motion under this order. It may be that it requires one day's notice, and that the motion could not be moved until tomorrow. However, honourable senators, what is the point of the government today refusing leave to send this report back to the committee? If they want their bill and if they want to—

Senator Flynn: Out of order.

Senator MacEachen: —facilitate the work of the Senate in an orderly way in order that we will do our job on Friday, then it would seem to me that it is in the interest of the Senate and the government to accept the motion today. So, whatever work has to be done in the committee on the procedural matter can be done and the committee can report tomorrow. Why hold it up? Senator Bonnell is saying that he wants this report to go back to be examined by his committee because procedural objections have been raised by the Table officers. "Send the report back," he is saying to the Senate, "so we can look at this and fix the matter up, if required, and I will bring it back to you not later than Thursday."

I do not know why we should be battling over this unless—

Senator Flynn: I know why.

Senator MacEachen: —it is the wish of Senator Flynn to say that there are procedural difficulties with the amendments. Maybe there are.

Senator Murray: Then let us consider them.

Senator MacEachen: Let us consider them in the committee.

Senator Murray: Consider them here.

Senator MacEachen: There will be a motion to that effect. Whether Senator Bonnell's motion is ruled in order or not, there will be another motion that will be an order to send it back, and it will be carried. Why not do it today and get on with the work of the Senate?

Senator Flynn: I rise to comment on an unfair comment made by the Leader of the Opposition about the people at the Table. When a committee chairman reports a bill with amendments, it is presumed that the chairman moves the adoption of the report. That is why it appears that way on the scroll, and it should appear that way in the Minutes of Proceedings. When Senator Bonnell brought forward his report yesterday, don't tell me that he did not have the intention to move the adoption. That is not true. He had the idea. Now he is afraid of a decision on the validity of the amendments proposed, and that is your fear also, Senator MacEachen, and the fear of the majority. You do not want the Chair to consider the validity of these amendments. You are trying to avoid the issue in order to bury the mistakes made by the committee. You do not want to deal with the problem of the—

Senator Frith: We are assuming that there is a problem and we want to solve it. It is quite the opposite.

Senator Flynn: All right, tomorrow we will discuss your motion.

Senator Frith: He is assuming that there is a problem and wants to deal with it. Why take two or more days to do it? Let us get to work on it and see if it can be solved.

Senator Flynn: The Chair is in a position to render a judgment on the problem, and you are avoiding that.

Senator Frith: No, on the contrary.

Senator Flynn: You want to send it back to committee rather than deal with the problem, as we should deal with it.

Senator Frith: We want the committee to deal with the problem. We assume you are right.

Senator Flynn: The Chair has to deal with it, not the committee. I do not trust that committee, because it is the one that made the mistakes. It is so obvious and so simple.

[Senator MacEachen.]

In any event, because the point was raised by Senator Bonnell, I am entitled to discuss the point he raised, and I am going to discuss it right now.

Senator Bonnell: Go ahead. The floor is yours.

Senator Flynn: And we will see if you do not—

Senator Bonnell: Let me finish the point.

Senator Flynn: I am going to have the Chair rule whether some of the amendments proposed by the—

Senator Bonnell: Would you permit a question?

Senator Flynn: Certainly.

Senator Bonnell: Will you let me finish the point so you can debate the whole point?

Senator Flynn: Sure.

Senator Frith: Just a minute. Senator Flynn is perfectly entitled to raise his point of order. At any point in time when there is a breach of order, that is the time to raise the point of order. What is before us now, however, is the point of order as to whether or not this motion is in order. That has to be dealt with before we go on to any other points of order. Let us get it settled whether the motion is in order or not. If that motion, that is the motion to refer it back to the committee, is a breach of order, or there is something out of order in that motion, then anyone can raise that as a point of order.

However, what is before Your Honour now is a request to rule on whether or not Senator Bonnell's motion is in order. Senator MacEachen says it is as much in order as an order or a motion to adopt. That is the question that Your Honour has to rule on. Then we can go on to other points of order, if necessary.

Senator Flynn: Will we get back to the point of order discussed by Senator Bonnell?

Senator Frith: You can raise it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, section 655 of Beauchesne's says:

It is not possible to initiate a debate in the House on the evidence alone of a committee, unless there is before the House a formal report. The report must state the specific question and be brought to the House by means of a specific motion to concur.

Following this, if we concur, then we go to section 660, which says:

(1) When the motion to concur is moved, the House may refer the report back to the committee for further consideration or with instructions to amend it in any respect. It is not competent for a committee to reconsider and reserve its own decision, but if the House resolves that such reconsideration is necessary, the correct procedure is for the House to give the committee instructions, which will enable it to consider the whole question again. Bourinot, p.480

I do not know if that helps. The motion to adopt the report should come first, and when it is debated then there is a second motion and an amendment or another motion, if you wish, to send it back to committee.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, my submission is that there is before the Senate now the consideration of the report. Yesterday the Senate ordered that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate. It is my submission that that is all that is before the Senate, and that it is open for a senator to move either the adoption of the report or to move that the report be referred back to the committee. There is no obligation on a senator to move concurrence in the report and then that it be referred back. I do not think that makes any sense at all in our proceedings. I think we have to give a little more thought to that.

Senator Murray: How do you interpret the citations His Honour just read?

Senator MacEachen: I have listened to those citations for 34 years.

Senator Murray: If I understood the citations correctly, what we were being told was that to accomplish the end that is desired by Senator Bonnell it would take (a), a motion to concur; and (b), an amendment that the report be not concurred in but that it be referred back to the committee with instructions. That is my understanding of the citations that His Honour just read.

In any case, if I may leap into this lacuna for a moment, it seems to me that the normal procedure is as follows. A report has been brought in on a bill. The report that has been brought in is part of the legislative process. It has been brought to our attention that there are certain procedural difficulties. The appropriate thing to do, in the normal course of events, would be for an honourable senator to raise those procedural difficulties as a point of order.

Senator Frith: Which Senator Bonnell has done.

Senator Murray: Yes, but to raise them as a point of order and allow the Senate to discuss and decide on them. Instead of that, what has happened is that the chairman of the committee has risen in his place, drawn honourable senators' attention to the procedural difficulties that have been raised, stated that his committee had obtained legal advice—in which he has confidence—to the effect that there are no procedural difficulties, and moved that the report be referred back to the committee, without any instructions whatever except to report by Thursday.

It seems to me that we could conduct the business of the Senate much more expeditiously if we faced the procedural difficulties now, whatever they are, which is the appropriate time, and resolve them one way or another.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I do not want to be disputatious about this, because I may misunderstand the point of the motion to refer the report back.

I understood Senator Bonnell to say that he had received legal advice that there was nothing out of order in the report.

He also said that he has received advice from the clerks at the Table that there is something out of order.

I understand that the purpose of Senator Bonnell's motion to have the report referred back to the committee is based on the fact that it is undesirable for a Senate committee to make a report to the Senate when there is a cloud over its procedural, and perhaps even constitutional, rectitude. Therefore, he wants the committee not to go back and check the legality. He assumes that there is a problem, and it is my view that, assuming that there is a procedural problem with the report in its present form because of the citations and the points that he has raised, the committee should be asked to go back and try to present a report that does not offend these principles.

If we proceed—which, if you wish, we can do—to have a discussion about this, and Senator Flynn, for example, makes the same points, my view would be that that raises enough doubts that the report should be referred back to the committee so that the committee can present a report that does not create these problems.

We seem to have fallen into thinking that what will happen is that Senator Flynn will raise questions on the report and that we will say, "No, Senator Flynn is wrong." The purpose of Senator Bonnell's motion is to say, "Let's assume he is right." Then we will not spend two days discussing this matter, because the Senate can make up its own mind as to what is in order—it does not have to have a ruling if it does not want one. If all honourable senators agree that there is a problem, then the committee should try to take that into account in presenting a report.

We are not quarrelling about whether there is a problem or not. We are saying, "Yes, there is a problem, but let us not go back and try to solve the problem in terms of deciding what is right or what is wrong. Assume there is a problem and that there may be a difficulty, and phrase the report in a way that does not offend."

That is why I say it seems to me we are misunderstanding each other, if honourable senators opposite think that our position is that we want to have a fight about whether or not there is something irregular here. My view is that if there is any doubt about this we should send it back to the committee—we have only until Friday by an order of the Senate—and see if the committee can present a report that takes into account these objections.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think "misunderstanding" is the key word, because I am misunderstanding this myself now. At the last meeting of the committee I raised this matter and asked that it be dealt with then. At that time I had a copy of the document provided by the officials with me. As I said, I raised this matter then, and I was told by the chairman of the committee and by other members of the committee that the committee would present the report to the Senate and that the Senate would deal with it. Now there appears to be a complete turn around. Despite the fact that we had that information at the last meeting of the committee, and I asked that we deal with it then, it was decided not to do that but that the report be presented as it was—possibly flawed, possibly not flawed—to the Senate and the Senate could then consider the report. That is what we are asking the Senate to do now.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, should it not be possible for the Senate to consider the flaws in this report right now? Why should we be discussing these points of order?

Senator Frith: Because we are working on the assumption that they are right.

Senator Roblin: I do not think you should necessarily assume that that is the opinion of everyone when they have not heard the issues discussed, and even if everyone does agree as to what the issues are, for the enlightenment of the committee it would be no bad thing to have those issues ventilated in the chamber right now. Points of order can be raised with respect to the document that is before us, which is the report of the committee, and we can review them. I think this is something we should proceed with right away.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I want to go back to the main procedural point in an effort to understand what has been the impact of the Speaker's comments.

If I understood His Honour correctly, at this point it would be appropriate to move the adoption of the report, and when that motion is made, and before it is carried, an amendment would be in order to move that the report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the committee.

I really seek guidance from the Chair to determine whether that is the impact of His Honour's statement, because, if that is the case, we can certainly do that. Is my understanding correct?

The Hon. the Speaker: The intent was to have the report, if moved, adopted now. As to subsequent events, either a motion put by Senator Bonnell or by some other senator can be heard by the Senate, or, as Senator Roblin has said, honourable senators may wish to discuss the issue now. That is the prerogative of honourable senators. I would suggest that the adoption of the report be moved now, and that we proceed from there.

● (1640)

Senator Flynn: The question can then be put to the Chair. If you say that we do not want the Chair to rule, we want the committee to rule—that is something else.

Senator Frith: A ruling is not necessary.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: It is only if there is a dispute that we need to have a ruling. We are not disputing it!

Senator MacEachen: —I am prepared, without prejudice to my own arguments and comments, to accept the procedure proposed, if it is agreeable to His Honour, namely, that a motion could be made that the report be adopted. It would then be possible to move an amendment that the report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the committee for the purposes indicated. We would then be able to carry that today.

Senator Frith: That is crazy!

Senator MacEachen: Any discussion that is required could be undertaken on the amendment to the motion.

Senator Roblin: I comment on that, honourable senators, by saying that I feel much relieved, because that is really what I was trying to say when I first entered into this discussion, namely, that there had to be the resolution before us and then we could deal with it in the way suggested. I have no objection to what the honourable Leader of the Opposition has been proposing—without prejudice to any of my arguments!

Senator Flynn: The way I assume that the proposal would work is that you would move the adoption of the report; I, or someone else, would raise the question of the legality of some of the amendments; and you would move the referral back to the committee to state that we do not want the Chair to rule on this question, we want the matter to be considered by the committee—

Senator Frith: We do not need to.

Senator Flynn:—rather than to be dealt with by the Chair.

Senator Frith: We do not need it.

Senator Flynn: We can then discuss whether this is a good solution in practice. But what we have to decide is whether these amendments are in order or not. I do not think that it is up to the committee itself to decide that, because it has already made a decision.

Senator Frith: That is not what it wants to do. It does not want to make this decision; it is assuming that that decision is made. It wants to go back and comply with it!

The Hon. the Speaker: Well, honourable senators, may I then have a motion to adopt the report now?

Senator MacEachen: Your Honour, I find the approach proposed by Senator Flynn quite dangerous. It will have the effect of delaying the expeditious treatment of this bill, because he has given us notice that if the motion to adopt the report is made—and at that point, of course, the amendments are before the Senate—he will then raise points of order and will ask the Chair for rulings. At that point the Chair may find it necessary to make rulings which we may find difficult to live with. All of that will go on without an opportunity to have the committee deal with the report.

I am seeking a practical solution, namely, that we move the adoption of the report and that we move immediately that it be referred back to committee. The necessity of procedural rulings by the Chair would be deferred until the committee has made a further report after being able to examine again what it has put forward to the Senate. If that can be done, I would set the process in motion, but I do not think that we should embark on two separate tracks at the same time. Either have it done in the special committee, or have it done on the floor of the Senate. I think that if it is to be done on the floor of the Senate, we will be heading into real difficulties. It is a government bill that is being dealt with, and I do not understand why government members will not immediately agree to have this go back to the committee, at the request of the chairman, to consider the difficulties that have been raised by the Table officer.

Senator Frith: Not to make a ruling!

Senator Roblin: And what the committee would do would be another matter.

Senator Flynn: If it was another committee.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have listened with great interest to the exchanges between the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and the members on the other side relative to adopting the report at this time as a first step or mechanism for getting it back to the committee.

I wish to say that personally I have grave reservations about voting in favour of the adoption of a report which, as has been explained to me, is possibly flawed.

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator van Roggen: In the interests of the Senate—not of the Liberal Party or of the Conservative Party—it is important that we not bring forward proposed amendments to legislation if, indeed, they are flawed.

Why should I, therefore, having had notice of that, be asked now to vote for the adoption of the report just to get it back to the committee, where these concerns about the report being flawed can be dealt with and, hopefully, corrected?

I refer now to earlier this afternoon when we had the two transportation bills before us. A considerable discussion, with quite long and comprehensive speeches, was conducted by two or three senators relative to those bills before their adoption was moved. If, in the course of those speeches by Senator Stewart, Senator Lawson and others, points had been brought to our attention that might have persuaded us that those reports should have had some further consideration by the committee before we adopted the reports, then surely the logical thing for us to do would have been to send those transportation bills back to the committee rather than move their adoption and vote on them first.

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator van Roggen: I feel strongly, personally, that I would rather not be invited to vote for the adoption of the committee report, having been forewarned that it is flawed. I would much rather vote simply, having received this advice that it may be flawed, to send it back to the committee now so that the committee can endeavour to correct these imperfections—if, indeed, they are—and bring in a report so that I could then vote for its adoption, knowing that these flaws had been removed, or at least dealt with to the extent possible.

I do not think that we, as senators, should be making a partisan exercise out of trying to tidy something up that has been brought to our attention by the legal officers of the Senate, namely, that a report may be flawed. We should be addressing ourselves as to how to correct that imperfection rather than going through this exercise, and, indeed, using the mechanism of adopting the report in order to get it to the committee, when we are being asked to adopt something that we should not adopt; that is wrong.

● (1650)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am wondering whether today we should deal with the fact of whether this motion is in order or whether we need a motion to adopt. I believe that amendments to the committee's report, which would satisfy the procedural and other objections, can be made.

Senator Roblin: There are other objections, not just procedural ones?

Senator Frith: The reason I said "and other objections" is because the objections that were the subject matter of the memorandum by the Table officers were divided into some which were procedural and some which may be matters of law. They have been bundled into the term "constitutional". In fact, I think Senator Flynn would agree that some are procedural and some are constitutional and matters of law. That is the only reason I use that expression, whatever the objections may be.

I think the report could be amended in such a way as to avoid offending those principles. I have just spoken with Senator Flynn and indicated that I would understand if he would like to see what they are. If that is so, those amendments could be made on the floor rather than being sent to committee. I do not think there is any reason to prefer one system over the other, except that from Senator Flynn's point of view he would rather have them presented on the floor in case the committee thinks that it has to make a ruling on the legitimacy versus the ruling by the Senate or, if called upon, the Speaker. I do not think that is the committee's intention. I can understand why Senator Flynn would say, "If you have some amendments to the bill or to the report that you think would not offend these principles, let me see them."

Senator Roblin: You should not ask us to draft them.

Senator Frith: I am not asking you to draft them; I am saying that I will present them. I am not expecting you to vote for the amendments. I am simply saying that they would be amendments that would not offend.

Senator Flynn: I think we should discuss the legality of some of the amendments without asking the Chair to rule at this time. Then tomorrow, if amendments are to be presented, we will see them, with the reservation of calling on the Chair to make a ruling on these amendments or those that you may eventually propose. I would suggest that we not refer the matter back to the committee, because, after all, the committee has a plan which is something concrete. It has no expertise in constitutional matters. It is a lop-sided committee. It is a committee in which I have no confidence at all as far as impartiality is concerned. Do not ask us to support a motion of that kind.

I agree that we should discuss the legalities without asking the Chair for a ruling, and tomorrow amendments can be introduced.

[Senator van Roggen.]

Senator Roblin: Fair enough. Good idea.

Senator Frith: I thought we could avoid the question of legalities in that I thought we, on all sides, realized that there were some legality problems.

Senator Flynn: It would help you to propose amendments that might be—

Senator Frith: I, of course, would prefer to propose those amendments to the committee and have the amendments come back from the committee, because I do not expect the committee to be raising the question of legalities. The problem for the committee is to come back with a report that does not offend those principles.

I do not know whether we are any further ahead; I thought we were, but I guess we are not. I do not see what we can do other than stand the order.

Hon. Efstathios W. Barootes: Honourable senators, I am totally confused by this, and I seek further clarification from the wisdom with which I am faced opposite.

It appears as if we have had a special committee established by the will of those on the other side rather than by the usual procedure. The committee has sat for three months and one week trying to get somewhere, and now we have a report before us.

It would appear to me that for us to proceed either in the way Senator Frith or some of our front bench colleagues wish, we would have to withdraw those points of order and withdraw the motion. Then we could proceed with discussion of the bill itself or the report of the committee. I am a little confused as to how we are going to do that when we have before us a series of motions on which we have asked for rulings.

Nevertheless, it would appear to me that these legal points were raised by the Deputy Leader of the Government at our committee meeting yesterday. The letter from the clerk was produced and considered, and it was decided not to proceed. Today, all of a sudden, the amendments in this report, of which some of the committee members are so proud, and with good reason, because they worked pretty hard at it—and which I might add, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in the other place has spent some time endorsing as I understand it—are now being renounced. I do not know how we can return the matter to the committee because we are in a jam.

I think we have to withdraw the resolutions or the motion if they are on the Table and proceed from there, and allow either Senator Bonnell or someone on this side to put forward a motion.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thought that we could profit from consideration overnight of how best to come to grips with what I think we want to come to grips with, that is, the amendment or non-amendment of Bill C-22. That is the issue we really want to deal with. There must be a way to get to that by negotiation. If we cannot do it on the floor, we can do it otherwise.

Having discussed this with Senator Flynn, the problem I now have is that the proposal I made he seemed to think was based on a lack of confidence in the committee. He is entitled to have a lack of confidence in the committee, but I do not share that; I have a great deal of confidence in the committee.

I do not know whether eventually the best way for us to come to grips with amendment or non-amendment of Bill C-22 should come through the committee or be proposed directly on the floor.

I do not know of any other way to deal with this now, except to ask: Have we a ruling that Senator Bonnell's motion is out of order or not? Can we deal with that, and then we will at least have something in front of us?

Senator Flynn: The ruling is that he has to move the adoption or the consideration of the report first.

Senator Molson: I have been following the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition, which seemed to me to be very sensible. Supposing the motion is put by the chairman of the committee to adopt the report, it will then be debated if that is the wish. Someone could then move an amendment that it be not now adopted but referred back to committee. Then we could go through the whole procedure. If we do what was suggested earlier by Senator MacEachen, it would get a motion in amendment on the floor. At the moment we do not have a proper motion before us in order to be debating anything.

Earlier I objected, because Senator Bonnell said he was speaking on a point of order, but he never said what the point of order was and, frankly, when he finished, I was not sure what it was. He read the opinion of the law officers, and so on, which is fine, but we have nothing before us by way of motion or resolution. In all the years I have been in this chamber we have always had to start any procedure by a motion or a resolution presented on the floor of the Senate by a senator. It seems to me that if we have moved the adoption of the report, if we debate it, and if somebody moves an amendment that it go back to the committee, we are right where we want to be. I would ask Senator MacEachen whether I am wrong in that.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, my procedural position is that what is before the house now is the consideration of the report, as ordered yesterday by the Senate, and that it is appropriate to have a debate on that subject. Certainly it is commonplace in the House of Commons to have before it committee reports that are never concurred in. That is possible.

Senator Roblin: It is consideration that is the issue here.

Senator MacEachen: Yes, there is before us consideration of the report. The Senate has agreed that today we consider the report, and we are free to do it on the strength of that particular order.

Senator Molson: We need a motion, however.

Senator MacEachen: But I am submitting that it is open to the Senate, procedurally, to leave the order as it is. There is no procedural objection to that. We could consider the report for several days under the present order and make no motion whatsoever. That is my submission. In logic, the Senate agreed to a motion yesterday authorizing members of the Senate to consider the report at the next sitting of the Senate. We have authority to consider the report. We could debate it. At a certain point it is open to a senator to make a further motion—

Senator Roblin: Or to raise a point of order.

Senator MacEachen: —or to raise a point of order, as Senator Roblin says. My submission is that it is equally valid to make a motion to refer the report back to the committee, and that it is not necessary to have an earlier step; namely, to move the adoption of the report. In logic, it does not stand up to have both alternatives married together, because we would move to adopt the report knowing perfectly well there might be something wrong with it that we do not want to adopt, which is the reason for our sending it back to the committee.

I was prepared—even though my logic was violated, as was procedure, I think—to agree to a make-shift arrangement, as it were; namely, that we move the adoption of the report and then move an amendment to refer it back—and do it fast—so that all of the problems could be settled in committee. But that is not what either Senator Flynn or Senator Molson is suggesting. Senator Molson suggests that we move the adoption of the report, then raise procedural problems, have Speaker's rulings, and so on, and not refer it back to the committee.

I suppose that we could ask the Speaker to rule whether it is his view that there must be an intermediate motion, whether there must be a motion to concur before there can be a motion to refer it back. If he rules yes, we could appeal it. If we appealed it, we could make the motion to refer, and the procedural matter would be settled. That is open to us.

However, I was hoping that rather than go in that direction we could have unanimous consent, waive all other considerations, and refer this report back to the committee immediately, without prejudice to any position. Why do we not do that? Why do we not simply agree to send the report back to the committee? If the lack of confidence which Senator Flynn has in the committee is justified by the subsequent report, then he will have a field-day. He is not giving up any rights whatsoever. The rights which he could exercise today will be available to him when the report comes from the committee.

I suggest that we agree by general consent to send the report back.

Senator Flynn: Do you not agree that the committee will try to save face one way or the other?

Senator MacEachen: I was not a member of the committee. I do not feel, personally, the necessity to save face. I believe the sensible thing to do is to refer the report back to the committee, give it a day or two, and then, if there are procedural difficulties which have not been cleared up, Senator Flynn can have a field-day. All I am asking him to do is to postpone that exercise and let us all agree by unanimous consent to send the report back to the committee.

Senator Flynn: I would prefer to have the amendments that Senator Frith has in mind directly before the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Are honourable senators in agreement with Senator MacEachen's suggestion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: But having it understood that it is without prejudice to any position taken at a later time.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to interpose my will against the will of the Senate, but I do want to express my reservations. I think the position outlined by Senator Molson is undoubtedly the correct one. There should be the motion to consider—that is what is before us now. This should be here as a subject for our debate. Should the motion to consider be proceeded with and, in the course of that proceeding, should someone want to amend the motion to the effect that it not be considered now but that it be referred back to the committee, that is the proper way to do it. I do not think it requires any unanimous consent. What is wrong with this thing here is that it is not an amendment—it is a new motion, and it is an instruction, at that.

As to leave, I think my colleague is quite correct in saying that it requires leave, but we can skip all of that if we just follow the proper procedure in this house as we always do in these matters. That is what I think we should do.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I understand that Senator Roblin has reservations about the course of action which I proposed. I have reservations about his course of action, which I think is procedurally incorrect. We both have reservations. In an effort to facilitate this matter, why do we not refer the report back to the committee by common consent and reserve all our positions? If these difficulties prevail, when the committee report comes back we will all have a field-day.

Senator Roblin: I think that it would be highly appropriate if this house were to ventilate the issues that are involved in this question of the legality and the constitutionality of what this committee is trying to do. That report is before us now for consideration. It is legitimate for us to consider matters that have to do with the constitutionality, rectitude, propriety, or what have you, of what that committee recommends. If the report is to go back to the committee for improvement, as I hope it will, there is no reason why we should not express our opinions about that matter beforehand so that the committee will be informed as to the opinions of some of us on the whole matter. It seems to me that that is the way in which we ought to proceed.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not wish to delay the proceedings much further except to say that I am glad I am here and do not have to read this in Hansard on a subsequent day to try to divine what happened. The fact is that whatever the procedural difficulties are, they are not really on the record. Senator Bonnell began, on some kind of point of order, to recite them to us, but to the best of my knowledge and recollection he never completed his recitation. I am still of the view that it would be best to deal with the procedural difficulties here and to resolve them here, but we have come to an impasse on the matter. For some reason honourable senators prefer to send the matter back to committee and have it dealt with there. I do not think that gives us much time to deal with the amendments that Senator Frith indicates he or somebody has in his back pocket. I would have liked to see those amendments now.

● (1710)

However, we will not object further. We have made our point about this. I do ask, however, that the complete letter, if that is what it is, or memorandum from the Table officers, indicating the procedural difficulties, be made part of the record so that we will know what it is that we have been talking about for the past couple of hours. Perhaps the honourable senator would care to place alongside that the opinion of Mr. French, LL.B., the counsel to the committee.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, if Senator Flynn will keep quiet for another two minutes—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Bonnell: —and if we have agreement, then I would like to carry on, as the Leader of the Government has said, and finish the point I had in mind, and table the copy of the letter from the Table officers and also the letter from the lawyer.

Senator Murray: And they can be incorporated in Hansard.

Senator Bonnell: Yes; and perhaps I could also table the letter from Mr. du Plessis, the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, giving his viewpoint that the proposed amendment does not create any charge on the public revenue and therefore does not infringe on the financial initiatives of the Crown. Perhaps this letter can also be tabled.

Senator Murray: Not just tabled but made part of the record.

Senator Bonnell: The correspondence from my lawyer should also be tabled. They can all be tabled and be made part of the record for this day.

Senator Murray: At this point in the proceedings—in the Hansard.

Senator Bonnell: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: We may have the printed edition next week!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the correspondence be printed in Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of correspondence see appendix, p. 1686.)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, if I understood the words of the Leader of the Government correctly, even with reservations and with the requirement that these documents be printed, I understand that it is agreed that we send this report back to the committee with very low-key, unprovocative comment.

Senator Frith: And with the deadline of Thursday.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bonnell:

That the Sixth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be referred back to the said Special Committee to consider the amendments proposed in the report;

That the said Special Committee for such purposes be revived, and

That it be an instruction to the Special Committee to report back to the Senate no later than Thursday, 13th August, 1987.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND — CORRESPONDENCE RE REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL C-22

August 10, 1987.

TO Mr. Richard Greene,
Clerk Assistant

FROM Gary O'Brien,
Director of Committees

SUBJECT Proposed Amendments by Special Committee on Bill C-22

I have certain procedural concerns with respect to the proposed amendments.

1. The first amendment proposes to repeal Subsection 41(4) of the Patent Act. Bill C-22 does not propose to alter Subsection 41(4). Therefore the amendment may go beyond the scope of the Bill, making it an inadmissible amendment. To amend the Parent Act and not the Bill specifically before the House is not in order. Beauchesne's Fifth edition states (c.773(8), p. 233):

"An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee... An amendment may not amend sections of the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before the committee."

There have been many rulings in the House of Commons on this point. (i) By Speaker Lamoureux, June 19, 1970. "Motions in amendment must be relevant to the Bill before the House and cannot seek to amend the parent act"; July 20, 1973 "If an amendment seeks not a modification to the Bill before (the House) but rather a change in the statute which the bill seeks to amend", there is no alternative but to find it unacceptable". (See Decisions of Speaker Lamoureux, pp. 467, 488);

(ii) By Speaker Jerome: December 19, 1978 "Of the five motions, three of them" (Motions 11, 27 and 30), "clearly seek to amend the parent act in a way that was not envisaged by the amending bill"; December 20, 1975 "Amendments cannot seek to amend the Parent Act of a bill since it is not before the House". (See Decisions of Speaker Jerome, pp. 124, 122.

It should be noted that Bill C-22 does amend Subsection 41(1) of the Patent Act, and adds many sections after section 41, notably 41.1, 41.11 - 41.26. Bill C-22 does not envision amending Subsection 41(4) regarding requirements of the Commissioner of Patents when establishing the amount of the royalty to be paid pursuant to establishing a compulsory license. The amendments proposed by the Senate Special Committee puts forward an alternative scheme regarding royalties.

The fundamental procedural question regarding the admissibility of the first amendment is its relevancy to Bill C-22. Based on the authorities and Commons precedents, it appears not to be relevant.

2. Amendments Numbers One and Six deal with the establishment of a new Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund into which the licensee will pay and from which payments will be disbursed to participating patentees. There may be two problems with these amendments, both of them which may infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown.

(i) There is a proposed alteration to the Act regarding the conditions of purchasing a licence, which, though it may not be a tax, is a charge upon certain people or corporations, sanctioned by federal law.

May's 20th edition states (p. 766) "The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication to which the royal demand or recommendation is attached must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the maximum amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications, expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a change."

(ii) In addition to the fact that they may fall under the rubric of "ways and means", the amendments propose to make payments from a fund administered by the Crown, to individuals. It may be that both a ways and means motion as well as a royal recommendation would be required in order to do so.

Only Ministers of the Crown can move ways and means motions or those proposing the spending of Crown money.

If these amendments are considered 'money votes', their admissibility is made more complicated in that the Constitution Act, 1876, sections 53 and 54 state:

"53. Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

54. It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed".

The problem of admissibility may be one not just of procedure, but also of law. The Law Clerk's opinion should be sought on this point.

It should be noted that May's 20th edition states that levies upon an industry for its own purposes are not considered ways and means (p. 826-827). Three points, should also be considered: (i) does the new provision impact upon consumers as well as the general level of research and development within Canada? In other words, is the levy for the purposes of the pharmaceutical industry only? (ii) while it may not be ways and means, there may still be the problem of payments by the Crown to individuals; and (iii) a motion in amendment by Mr. Dingwall was ruled out of order in the House of Commons on March 31, 1987 with regards to Bill C-22. The amendment proposed that "Every patentee of an invention pertaining to medicine shall ... pay to Her Majesty in right of Canada in addition to any taxes an annual royalty of fourteen percent of the net revenue whether direct or indirect from the sale in Canada of medicine, to be distributed to the patentees, as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council".

The Speaker of the House of Commons ruled " ... such a charge, an annual royalty of fourteen percent on the sales of patented medicines in Canada, would extend the objects and purposes as expressed in the Royal Recommendation and would require the passage of a Ways and Means motion. Therefore, I must rule the motion out of order". (Commons Debates, March 31, 1987, p. 4745).

It appears that the Canadian practice may be more strict than that of the U.K. regarding ways and means motions.

3. I feel these concerns should be addressed since Bill C-22 may be the object of a conference between the two Houses and the Commons may be locked in a straight-jacket from both a procedural and legal point of view, with regard to accepting the Senate amendments.

Senator M. Lorne Bonnell,
Room 481 - S,
Centre Block,
Senate of Canada,
OTTAWA, Ontario.
K1A OA4

Dear Senator:

You have asked for my opinion concerning a procedural question raised respecting possible Senate amendments to Bill C-22. This question concerns the extent to which amendments may be introduced in the Senate to implement the Drug Patent royalty system recommended in the Eastman Report. I will first review the background to this question.

The House of Commons in Bill C-22 endeavoured to increase the compensations afforded patentees, whose inventions were subject to statutory licences under section 41 of the Patent Act, by providing for a period of exclusivity. During this period statutory licences would be inoperative. This was done in clause 15 of the Bill by adding sections 41.11, 41.14, and 41.16. These sections would declare a licence issued by the Commissioner of Patents under section 41(4) of the Act to be partially inoperative. Further provisions would cancel this inoperativeness after a period of time, i.e. 7 to 10 years, or under special conditions, i.e. for failure to manufacture in Canada.

While Bill C-22 would affect the exclusivity enjoyed by patentees who are subject to statutory licences under section 41(4) of the Act, the Bill would not change the criteria by which the Commissioner sets the royalty for statutory licences.

The Special Committee has proposed to change the manner of compensating patentees by:

- (1) shortening the period of exclusivity, and
- (2) providing a predetermined formula for the Commissioner to set the royalty payable.

It is obvious that the provisions in the Bill were drafted so as not to change the wording of section 41(4) directly. This was likely so that the Bill's provisions could, as provided for in clause 15, section 41.26 of the Bill, be suspended, if needed, at a later date. The Bill would nevertheless affect section 41(4) by rendering licences granted thereunder inoperative for a period of time.

The Bill would also expressly amend a subsection of section 41 of the Act, namely subsection 41(1) dealing with the style of claiming monopoly rights over medicines.

A concern has been raised that the Special Committee's Report goes "outside the scope" of the Bill as passed by the Commons. This is based on the following passage from Beauchesne:

"An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee... An amendment may not amend sections of the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before committee."

and a number of rulings by Speakers of the House of Commons.

The Beauchesne quotation speaks of amending a "statute which is not before the committee". This is not the present case.

The quotation refers to a bar on amending sections of the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the Bill. In the present case the Bill amends subsection (1) of section 41 of the original Act, and affects subsection (4) of the same section.

Beauchesne also states (section 876(1)(2) p.267, Fifth Ed.):

- (1) A committee on a private bill is precluded from making amendments which are beyond the scope of the bill as defined by the clauses and schedules of the bill. It is within their competence, however, to make amendments in the bill which are within those purposes, though such amendments, necessarily, must not enlarge the powers sought by the bill.
- (2) The admissibility of amendments made at the committee stage of a private bill is governed by the same principles as those for public bills.

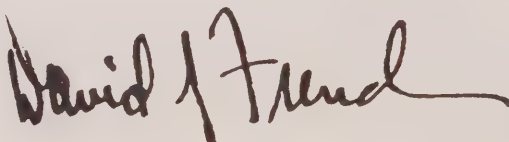

The spirit of these quotations is summarized in the words "beyond the scope of the bill" as defined by its clauses.

In view of the foregoing, it is my opinion that the recommendations in the Report of the Special Committee are procedurally correct because:

- (1) Bill C-22 did amend section 41 of the Patent Act, vis section 41(1) ;
- (2) Bill C-22 did affect subsection 41(4) by rendering licences granted thereunder partially inoperative (vis clause 15, s.41.11: "...notwithstanding anything in section 41"); and
- (3) the Report is focussed on the same issue as the Bill, namely providing compensation to patentees. The Commons would provide increased exclusivity; the Special Committee would reduce the extent of exclusivity and provide a more precise royalty formula.

On this basis, it is clear that the proposed amendments are relevant to the scope of Bill C-22.

Yours truly,

The Honourable Lorne M. Bonnell,
Chairman,
Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22
Room 489-S,
The Senate,
Ottawa

Dear Senator Bonnell,

The Sixth Report of the Special Committee of the Senate proposes certain amendments to Bill C-22, one of which would provide for the establishment of a "Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund".

You have asked for my opinion on whether this amendment is one that may be made by the Senate. In other words, is it an amendment that would, if passed by the Senate, infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown?

The purpose of the fund would be to put into place a new system for the payment of royalties to participating patentees. Under the present system, royalties are payable directly from the licensee to the patentee and the amount of the royalty is determined by the Commissioner of Patents. Under the system that would be put into place by the proposed amendment, payments at a higher royalty rate would be made by licencees into a royalty fund and the monies accumulated in this fund would later be distributed to the patentees according to a formula set out in the amendment.

The requirement that so-called "money bills" or amendments involving the expenditure of money originate in the House of Commons and have the recommendation of the Government are historical ones common to all parliamentary democracies. In Canada, as in the United Kingdom, they find their expression in the traditions and rules of the Houses of Parliament. In this regard, I refer you to Rule 62 of the Senate and to Standing Orders 86 and 87 of the House of Commons, copies of which are annexed to this letter. However, in Canada the requirement is also part of our constitution, which is now the supreme law of the land. Sections 53 and 54 of the Constitution Act, 1867 provide as follows:

"53. Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

54. It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or any Tax or Impost to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed."

In order to understand this requirement, it is important to appreciate what it is that constitutes the nature of a bill or an amendment to a bill that would have the effect of "appropriating any part of the Public Revenue". Such a bill or amendment, within the meaning of section 53, would be one that, if enacted, would commit, set apart or earmark public revenue for a particular person, purpose or use.

In the case of the proposed Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund, the money that is to be paid into that Fund comes from licencees and is therefore not money that is taken out of the public revenue of Canada. The fund itself would become what is referred to as a special purpose account, governed by section 15 of the Financial Administration Act. That section reads as follows:

"15. (1) Money received by or on behalf of Her Majesty for a special purpose and paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for that purpose, subject to any statute applicable thereto.

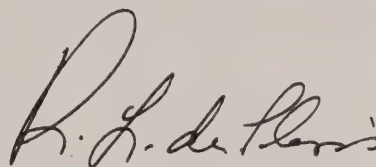

(2) Subject to any other Act, interest may be allowed and paid from the Consolidated Revenue Fund in respect of money to which subsection (1) applies, in accordance with and at rates fixed by the Minister with the approval of the Governor in Council."

A special purpose account is a type of holding account or "liability account". This means that the money deposited in the account, although it is paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, is received for a special purpose. It also means that, when the money is paid out to patentees, the payment does not reduce the public debt. This is because the money, in effect, belongs to the patentees and is collected for the sole purpose of the payment of a property right. Such an account, therefore, has no effect on the public debt. It does not create a charge on the public debt and it does not appropriate public money.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the proposed amendment does not create a charge on the public revenue and therefore does not infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown.

Yours sincerely,

PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

REPORT TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour of tabling the Report of the Privacy Commissioner for the period ending March 31, 1987.

[English]

THE SENATE

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST INQUIRY FROM OFFICE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Just before coming into the chamber today, I received a call from some young lady in the office of the Minister of Justice. The questions directed to me were as to whether I was still practising law and, if so, where my conflicts of interest might arise.

Honourable senators, I have been here for some 25 years and I have never encountered such an insulting inquisition which trespasses on the privilege of members of Parliament.

I ask the representative of the government in the Senate to please call off such insulting inquiries.

I know that the inquiry directed to me is not directed to me solely but to all members of this chamber who are also members of the legal profession. This, to me, is an insult and a trespass on the rights of Parliament such as I have never seen in this place before.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just before the sitting commenced, Senator Lang came to me and asked if I had received a call from Mr. Hnatyshyn. I responded that I had not. However, then, by messenger, an envelope appeared on my desk which I opened. The message is from my secretary and it states:

For your information—

1.35 p.m. We had a call from Ray Hnatyshyn's office wanting to know about lawyers in the Senate. She asked if you practised law. I said that you were Counsel to firms. She wanted to know which (and as the firms are listed in the Parliamentary Guide) I gave them to her. She said again—so he is practising law—and again I repeated that you were Counsel to.

She added, in brackets: "(I wonder what this was in aid of.)"

It so happens that I met with the Minister of Justice some time this morning and I talked to him not ten minutes ago on two other matters, and I am sure that if he had any direct knowledge of these matters he would have raised them with me.

In any case, I undertake to make a full inquiry at once and to bring in a report to the Senate as soon as possible.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Just to keep the record complete, I also had a similar telephone call shortly before I came into the chamber.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: I should add to that that I also received a call.

Senator Frith: What about Senators Cogger and Bazin?

Senator Argue: No secretary, no call!

Hon. George van Roggen: I would like to object to the fact that I did not get a call!

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I do not know if I received a call or not.

Senator Frith: For the record, the next President of the Canadian Bar Association, so far as he knows, did not receive such a call.

Senator Bazin: I wasn't in my office!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Reports of Committees:

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I ask the indulgence of the house to revert back to Reports of Committees later today. The report, which does not have to be ready until tomorrow, is almost prepared except for having it printed in both official languages. Therefore, I would ask the permission of honourable senators to revert back to Reports of Committees later today.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: May I ask whether Senator Bonnell is going to move the adoption or consideration of the report, or will he say nothing at all?

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, for the information of my honourable friend, who is always colourful and gives me great enthusiasm, when I complete my remarks I will move the adoption of the report.

Senator Flynn: I think that the honourable senator will have to move the adoption of the report before he makes his remarks. Otherwise, he will get into trouble again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE HONOURABLE JERAHMIEL S. GRAFSTEIN

TRIBUTE ON PUBLICATION OF SENATE SPEECH IN U.S.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Hon. George van Roggen: I crave the indulgence of honourable senators, because this is not a formal report of my committee but, under Reports of Committees, I wonder if I might draw to their attention the fact that one of the outstanding members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Senator Grafstein, delivered a speech in this chamber on June 30, 1987, reporting on the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary meeting in Vancouver.

● (1410)

The Honourable Dante B. Fascell, the Chairman of the United States House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee, took the occasion on July 21 of this year to refer to Senator Grafstein's speech and to have it printed in the Congressional Record. The whole of his speech, as given in this chamber, is now part of the Congressional Record of the United States.

I thought it interesting that this, if not unique then most unusual, occurrence had taken place, and that honourable senators would like to know.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have here a motion suggesting that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. I thought that it might be appropriate for us to sit at 11 a.m. tomorrow to undertake further work on the report in connection with Bill C-22, or to deal with the third reading stage or whatever stage we will have reached at that time. We may get a jump on the proceedings by coming back in the morning rather than at 2 p.m. If it is agreeable to honourable senators, I will move that motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if we are able to obtain unanimous consent to deal with the debate on the report, which will be presented by Senator Bonnell, then I take it that we would probably have third reading tomorrow, the next day, as we usually do. It would mean that Bills C-18 and C-19 will also have been dealt with if they receive third reading today. We can then deal with third reading of Bill C-22, which would enable us to clean up our legislative agenda. I believe that is a very good idea, and I will support the motion.

Senator Doody: If it is acceptable to honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, 13th August, 1987, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—DISCUSSION BY PARLIAMENT OF PROPOSAL ON SENATE REFORM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government. The Meech Lake accord provides for an annual constitutional meeting of First Ministers, and the first item listed to be discussed is Senate reform.

Shortly after the Meech Lake agreement, I asked the minister whether the government would be making a proposal under this provision or whether it would simply wait for the provinces to do so. His response at that time was that yes, the government would be making a proposal to the First Ministers.

On May 5, I asked the Leader of the Government:

Will the proposal of the federal government be discussed beforehand by Parliament, and by the Senate in particular?

The response of the Leader of the Government was:

Honourable senators, my friend is getting quite a distance ahead of himself. I really have not had an opportunity to think about that or to discuss it with my colleagues, but I shall do so.

I notice that recently he was again quoted as saying that yes, the government would definitely be coming forward with a proposal. My question now is a repeat of the question I asked on May 5: Because this matter obviously is of major importance to the Parliament of Canada—to both houses, but particularly to this house—will this house and will Parliament be involved beforehand in the preparation of the proposal to be made to the First Ministers?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I cannot give that undertaking at this time. I can only remark upon the fact that in recent years both houses of Parliament, and especially this one, have been actively engaged in discussions on Senate reform, and quite a number of proposals from parliamentary committees on this subject are already on the public record. So we will be studying those as we formulate a federal government position.

I might also say that the government will have to do some soundings with the provincial governments before putting any proposal on the table, because we would like to have a proposal that will at least provide a sound basis for discussion. I do not preclude the possibility that there will be some formal consultation with this house or the other house. I simply state that I cannot give that undertaking at this time.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I am pleased to hear the minister say that there will be soundings with the provincial governments. Surely, if there are to be soundings with the provinces on a matter affecting Parliament, there ought to be soundings with Parliament. I cannot visualize a situation where this body would not be involved beforehand. What I am concerned about is that we will find ourselves with a government proposal that is a fait accompli and that there will be no opportunity for input by this body and the House of Commons, Parliament—not the federal government but Parliament—which is, it seems to me, the body primarily concerned in this development, not the provinces. It is fine to sound out the provincial governments, but surely this body and the House of Commons should be consulted.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when we have an amendment to the Constitution relating to the Senate, Parliament, of course, will have an opportunity to debate it and, indeed, to approve it or otherwise. I know where the honourable senator stands on the issue of Senate reform. He was co-chairman of a joint committee that studied the matter and brought in a list of recommendations. As I look around at other colleagues, I know where a great many of them stand on the issue, because they have made their positions clear. It may well be that this house or the other house may wish to find a way to achieve a consensus and to convey some consensus to the government on the matter of Senate reform. There is nothing to stop my honourable friends in this place or in the other place from so doing. My only statement is that I cannot undertake at this time that the proposal that we will place on the table in a federal-provincial conference will be placed before Parliament for discussion. For one thing, I am not sure that there will be time to do so.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I regret very much that I must take from the leader's remarks that it is the position of the government that this fourth level of government which has been created, namely, the First Ministers' conferences, is now to deal with matters, including matters relative to Parliament itself, behind closed doors, under the type of negotiation we saw with the Meech Lake accord, which results in a proposal that is put forward ex cathedra, a proposal which is so carefully negotiated with the provinces and so carefully argued in this so-called Star Chamber, this new form of government we have developed in this country, that Parliament is really incapable, to all intents and purposes, of amending it, as we were told we may not do with the Meech Lake accord. Indeed, we will have the same situation with the very reform of this chamber.

I am not blaming this government for having invented the dominion-provincial conference. It is something that has grown over 25 or 30 years. However, I would hope that the Leader of the Government in the Senate would share with me my concern that we have invented a structure of government that, to all intents and purposes, bypasses Parliament and legislatures, so that when these men get in a room and make a deal, that is it! If we have majority governments, not minority governments, in this country, then they can control Parliament or their legislatures, put the agreement through, and that is it. The reform of this chamber seems to be the next stage in that process. That is what I take from the remarks of the Leader of the Government, and I am very concerned. I would hope that the government would have some slight concern about this very unfortunate state of affairs in which we have landed ourselves as a result of allowing these dominion-provincial conferences to develop to the level that they have.

Senator Flynn: That is a good start for a debate.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my colleague, Senator Flynn, points out that that was a good start for a debate, and I agree. I am not sure whether Senator van Roggen is objecting to the annual First Ministers' conference on the economy or the annual First Ministers' conference on the Constitution. In either case, I do not know on what authority he can state that these meetings will be held behind closed doors. That is not a decision that has been taken at all.

So far as the process of constitutional amendment is concerned, I do draw to his attention that as a result of the amending formula that was agreed upon in the 1981-82 exercise, this is the very first time in the history of our country that the Constitution is being amended by way of resolutions of not only the House of Commons and the Senate but of all ten provincial legislatures.

In previous exercises—including that of 1981-82—joint addresses were moved by the federal Parliament, and executive decisions made by the governments in the provinces. Indeed, some of the amendments that were brought into the constitutional package of 1982, after the agreement of 1981, were agreed to by the provinces in a series of telephone calls between the federal government and those provinces, of which there is not even a written record.

Senator van Roggen: The difference was, with respect, that in 1982 this Parliament had committees sitting that made substantive and numerous amendments as opposed to the process today where they came out of the Langevin Block, and no amendments are to be considered.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, numerous and substantive amendments were made by a parliamentary committee to a unilateral initiative of the Trudeau government, which had the support not of ten provinces but of two provinces.

Senator van Roggen: So the provinces now run the federal government?

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987—ADVISERS TO GOVERNMENT
APPEARING BEFORE SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been very helpful over the last two days in clarifying the nature of the advice which the government received on the matter of the Charter of Rights in relation to the various aspects of the constitutional amendments now under discussion. In his remarks yesterday, reported on page 1661 of the Debates of the Senate, the Leader of the Government in the Senate said this:

... the interrelationship between the "distinct society" clause, the linguistic duality clause—those two interpretative clauses—on the one hand, and the Charter of Rights, on the other, was considered at great length by the First Ministers and with the assistance and advice of a number of legal and constitutional experts.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate also went on to say that a number of those constitutional experts were from outside the Department of Justice, although advisory to it, and therefore, in the sense in which I would like to use the word, they were "independent" legal and constitutional experts.

My question is: Can the leader tell us how many of those people who provided advice to the government will appear as witnesses before the joint committee?

Senator Marsden: My question is: Could the leader tell the chamber how many of the legal and constitutional experts from outside the Department of Justice will appear as witnesses before the joint committee?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator referred to advisers from outside the Department of Justice who were nonetheless advising the department. With the exception of a former Deputy Minister of Justice, that is not the case. If my recollection is correct, the two advisers who were brought in to the room for that discussion were the present Deputy Minister of Justice and a former Deputy Minister of Justice, both of whom, it can be said, are advisers to the federal government. The others were not advisers to the federal Department of Justice but were in the Langevin Building that night in their capacity as advisers to provinces. To the best of my knowledge, subject to correction, none of them has been a witness before the joint committee.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CREATION OF NEW AGENCY—EFFECT ON TENURE OF PRESENT COMMISSIONERS

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and flows from the proposed transportation legislation. The proposed legislation contemplates the creation of a new transport agency to replace the existing Canadian Transport Commission. As a result, there are a number of commissioners who are to be replaced or whose appointments are to be terminated.

The particular case I am referring to involves a commissioner who was appointed for a ten-year term, not at pleasure but at good behaviour, which, in my view, constitutes a contract. At this time he has approximately five and a half to six years left in his term of service or his contract. He has received a presentation from someone from the Treasury Board acting on behalf of, I assume, the Minister of Transport proposing to give him nine months' pay and send him on his way. He is so angry and so insulted at this unfair treatment that he is contemplating court action against the government.

In this particular case this commissioner gave up his business to take a ten-year appointment, and since he is going to be removed as a result of the legislation, and through no fault of his own, is it the policy of this government to engage in such practices to force someone to go to court to get what that person is entitled to under the terms of his contract, or will the government do the honourable thing and honour the terms of the contract and see that these individuals are fairly treated?

Senator Perrault: Shocking!

In any case, I have no knowledge of the particulars of that case.

Senator Lawson: I have a supplementary question. I think we are entitled to an answer on a very important principle here, whether contracts are to be honoured or not to be honoured. Can you make an enquiry and find out for me, please?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will ascertain what information, if any, can properly be released on that matter at this time.

THE SENATE

PROVINCIAL NOMINATIONS TO FILL VACANCIES

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: May I ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate? We have two vacancies in this chamber at the moment. Has the government asked for nominees from the respective provinces, which I believe are Quebec and Ontario? If so, have the respective provinces responded to that invitation? If they have responded, would the honourable Leader of the Government tell us who has been nominated?

THE SENATE

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST INQUIRY FROM OFFICE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have a preliminary report on the telephone calls which apparently have been made by somebody in the Department of Justice to various honourable senators. The preliminary report states that the calls, first of all, have been made not only to Liberal senators but to others. They were made out of a concern of the department respecting contracts being awarded to various firms of which members of Parliament may be partners and, therefore, a concern about conflict-of-interest provisions from the point of view of the department.

● (1430)

I will get a fuller and more formal report at a later date and bring it to the Senate.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I appreciate that information. Just for purposes of the record, I did phone my office and was advised that I, too, had received a call with respect to my association with the law firm that I have been associated with since 1960.

Just for the information of honourable senators and for the information of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I sit in an office within five feet of the place that I was sitting at in 1960. I can be found at 111 Richmond Street at any time on a Friday or a Monday when the Senate is not sitting. The law firm's phone number is in the legal directory; it is also in the Toronto Telephone Directory.

With respect to government contracts, I do not believe the firm has received a government contract since 1904, but I will check into that for you, if you request it.

REFUGEES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATIONS ON BILL C-84— POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF BILL WITH HUMAN RIGHTS AND LAW OF THE SEA

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I now have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, and it relates to a bill before the other place, Bill C-84. I wonder whether or not the government consulted the provincial governments respecting that bill, and whether or not the provinces agreed that there was an emergency that warranted the introduction of the bill.

I may state in passing that members of several provincial governments have commented publicly on the problem posed by the non-scheduled and unexpected arrival of people claiming refugee status, because, of course, that does create problems, actual and potential, for those provinces. I know that the Premier of Nova Scotia has spoken on the matter, as has the Premier of British Columbia.

Senator Grafstein: Apparently there have been groups, including the Canadian Bar Association, which have questioned the bill with respect to its being contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, contrary to United Nations protocols, treaties and practices respecting refugees, contrary to the United Nations' principles and policies and treaties respecting human rights, and, finally, contrary to the International Law of the Sea.

Could the minister advise us whether or not the law officers of the Crown advised the government that the bill is not offensive to those various and important fundamental laws?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think it is an open secret that whatever legislation is brought in by the government and passed by Parliament in this field will be the subject of court action by somebody. My information is that the law officers of the Crown are confident that the legislation does not offend against the Canadian Constitution, against international law or international treaties to which we are a party.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ACTION ON ILLITERACY AND LEARNING DISABILITIES

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, it has been brought to my attention that our colleague, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, was successful in persuading his colleagues to include most recently in envelopes containing old age security cheques a colourful pamphlet making the Canadian public aware of the Constitutional Accord.

An Hon. Senator: It was coloured blue!

Senator Fairbairn: I will not comment on the contents of the pamphlet other than to say that I do know it takes a great deal of persuasion on the part of ministers to achieve this accomplishment!

Senators may recall that, since January, I have been asking the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State—and, indeed, I mentioned it in a speech in the Senate last March—that the problem of illiteracy and learning disabilities be made the subject of such a pamphlet that might be included in pension cheques, Family Allowance cheques—any government cheques—to make Canadians aware and sensitive to a problem that touches 20 per cent of our citizens. I am wondering whether the government leader in the Senate could use his powers of persuasion, in conjunction with my own efforts, to persuade his colleagues so that a pamphlet on the subject of illiteracy and learning disabilities might find its way into those cheques.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will take that suggestion up with my colleagues, yes.

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you.

Senator Frith: There's no chance that those against the accord will get equal time, is there?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if this is a new policy that he has implemented, that is to say, sending such information in pamphlet form to senior citizens? The information which Senator Fairbairn just mentioned was inserted in the envelopes containing senior citizens' old age pension cheques.

Are you anticipating bringing this to the attention of all Canadians one way or another? If you feel that it should be done for senior citizens and others, what other ways and means are you taking to ensure that all Canadians get the same information?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I believe the same insert was put in the Family Allowance cheques.

Senator Perrault: It will be put everywhere!

Senator Doody: In Senate salary cheques!

Senator Murray: Recipients were invited to return the coupon and ask for further information.

Senator Perrault: On all tax forms!

Senator Murray: I may say that I am quite gratified by the response. There have been quite a number of responses asking for further information. We thought that it was an appropriate step to take in view of the fact that the accord is extremely important for the country and has the support of ten provinces, the federal government, the leaders of the three political parties and Parliament.

With regard to what further steps might be taken, I will take that under advisement, of course.

An Hon. Senator: I am sure you will.

Senator Murray: We could consider television commercials—without the Canada geese, of course!

An Hon. Senator: You could always use the loon!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, would it be possible, concerning that question about the political parties' proposed amendments to the Meech Lake accord, to ensure that the people of Canada are made familiar with the proposed amendments in the same way?

Senator Guay: My supplementary is to let you know that I am in accord with what you have done. That is why I followed up Senator Fairbairn's question by adding that you could also include it in the Canada Pension Plan cheques and others, as I have suggested. I am pleased that you are now possibly giving consideration to putting it on television and also on the radio.

THE SENATE

AVAILABILITY OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, the first two Orders of the Day deal with the proposed third reading of Bills C-18 and C-19. I want to ask a housekeeping question, one which should be cleared away before we get to those orders. I refer, of course, to the translation and printing of the evidence and proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. At the outset of those committee meetings, I informed the committee that we would have to have the translation and the printed evidence before we could complete the work of the committee.

As I said yesterday, we were given the printout from a word processor. Some of that was legible, but about half of it was virtually illegible by reason of the fact that the ribbon, or whatever is used, was worn out.

When the matter was raised again, the Clerk of the Senate came before the committee and told us that it was his understanding, after inquiries, that we would have, as I read what he said, most of the evidence on August 5, that is before we were to report the bills. Honourable senators, I have just come from the distribution office where I found that the last four issues available are the issues for July 14, July 15, July 20 and July 29. There is a considerable gap between the issue of July 19, which was Issue No. 19, and the issue for July 29, which was Issue No. 23. Also, the issues for the meetings after July 29 are not available.

I am directing this question to the Leader of the Government; he may wish to direct it to the senator who is responsible for the conduct of these two government bills. I am referring now to a period during which the other place was in adjournment so that the pressure of work from the other place did not fall upon the translation and printing services. Moreover, the Senate was in adjournment for most of that period. Surely, with the proper priority given to government business, this translation and this printing could have been done.

I think this matter is particularly important in this case. As we know, senators who are not members of committees often attend committees to hear the evidence. In this instance, however, the Senate was not in session, and most of the senators were not in Ottawa. They, therefore, did not have the opportunity to attend the meetings of the committee.

Let me give you an example of the kind of problem that arises. Only yesterday Senator Lawson made a speech concerning the disastrous results of economic deregulation, particularly in the trucking industry. He emphasized the relationship between economic deregulation and safety. There is not on the record of the Senate any comment or any rebuttal of what he said, yet, we are going to be asked later this day to approve third reading and passage of these bills.

I think it is incumbent upon the Leader of the Government, or whoever he has asked to assume the responsibility for the progress of these two government bills, to explain to the Senate, before it votes on the third reading of these bills, when this evidence is going to be available in translation and in print, if, indeed, it is going to be available; or are senators going to be asked to vote on, say, Bill C-19 with the cloud of uncertainty created by Senator Lawson still in their minds? It seems to me, given his speech, which was well informed, we have an obligation—

Senator Flynn: It would have been a good speech on second reading.

Senator Stewart: That may be true, nevertheless, it was a speech which was made in the Senate, a speech that Senator Flynn will want to consider carefully.

Senator Flynn: I knew that story a long time ago. I suggest the speech was a little late. He should have made it on second reading.

Senator Haidasz: Better late than never.

Senator Stewart: That is an argument that Senator Flynn can have with Senator Lawson. All I am asserting is that that speech is now on the record of the Senate, and we are being asked to vote on third reading without any rebuttal of the content of that speech available to senators.

Senator Flynn may have inside information with regard to trucking deregulation and its consequences for safety, but that is private knowledge, not public knowledge available to senators. I think he should be sympathetic towards senators who do not have his special, inside information.

Senator Flynn: I have no such inside information.

Senator Stewart: I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or whoever is acting on his behalf with regard to these two items of government business: What provision is being made to make the evidence available to the Senate?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will undertake to attempt to answer, although it is certainly not my direct responsibility.

Senator Flynn: Nor that of the government.

Senator Doody: Yes, nor that of the government, for that matter, although, obviously, it will be helpful for the progression of government business if the people who are responsible for the printing and translations see to it that the necessary documentation gets here on time.

When this was brought to our attention earlier this month, the problem was immediately brought to the attention of the Clerk, who contacted the Secretary of State's office. Assurances were given at that time, as Senator Stewart has said, that the printed proceedings would be available up to a date that would make possible the study of the bills. That has not happened, and I do not know why that is the case. I have asked the Table to look into this matter further.

I suggest that it might be appropriate for us to raise this matter at the next meeting of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, which is scheduled for tomorrow morning, and that we ask the management of the Senate to advise us as to how best we can accomplish obtaining the printed proceedings in time to deal with the legislation.

I cannot go beyond that at this point. I just do not have the information. No one has bothered to bring me up to date any more than they have bothered to bring anyone else up to date on the progress of the printing problem. It is certainly not a new problem. It has been going on for as long as I have been here despite entreaties and pleas by individual senators both on the government side and on the opposition side. The problem does not seem to be much closer to a resolution.

I will certainly be pleased to raise the matter with the Internal Economy Committee, and I shall try to get a more accurate report for honourable senators. Other than that, I can really add very little this afternoon.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: May I add, in response to what Senator Stewart said and Senator Flynn's admonition about giving this speech on second reading, that we appeared some months ago before the parliamentary committee chaired by the Honourable Patrick Nowlan with some of the same information. It apparently fell on deaf ears.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL, 1987

THIRD READING

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move third reading of Bill C-18, as amended.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this bill, as amended, be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I am not going to say anything more about the content of the legislation. I expect that honourable senators will have questions concerning the matters raised by Senator Lawson yesterday, matters which have not yet been dealt with on the floor of the Senate. I do not have questions because I had the privilege of attending the committee meetings.

The matter I want to raise now is the matter of which I gave notice, in a sense, yesterday, namely, the particular concern of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, which feels it has been treated unjustly by the Department of Transport, that its position has been represented improperly by officials of the Department of Transport and, indeed, by the Minister of Transport. I will not go into the detail of that now, because Senator Macdonald, Cape Breton, knows the question and probably has an answer ready. Unfortunately, I gather that when he speaks he will close the debate. If his answer is not satisfactory, I suppose that the only recourse is to vote against third reading of the bill, which is certainly not my intention.

• (1450)

Perhaps Senator Macdonald could be permitted to say something now so that it could be cleared away before we hear his final speech closing the debate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It will not close debate on third reading. It only closes the debate on second reading.

Senator Stewart: I did not realize that.

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, with regard to that matter, when representatives of the Iron Ore Company of Canada made their submission to the committee, it was my view that that company was subject to quite an injustice. When the Wabash people came along to make their submission, I thought that there was not such an injustice to the Iron Ore Company of Canada, that matters were sort of even. Perhaps I had better put it this way, that after the question was put yesterday, I got in touch with the Department of Transport to see if there is any change in its attitude as it was stated in the committee hearings.

I have before me a letter which I received today from the Minister of Transport with regard to this matter. Perhaps if I read that letter it would clarify the matter so far as the Department of Transport is concerned. The letter reads:

Dear Senator MacDonald:

Pursuant to your discussion with departmental officials today, I am writing you, as the Senator responsible for the passage of Bill C-18, concerning the August 7 letter from Mr. Carl Nickels, Chairman and President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada to the Honourable Senator Léopold Langlois about aspects of Bill C-18.

I want to stress that the Government has tried to achieve a reasonable balance between the interests of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway (and the Iron Ore Company of Canada) on the one hand and Wabash Mines on the other. Because the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway is a common carrier and Wabash a "captive shipper", we think that the provisions dealing with final offer arbitration of Bill C-18 should apply to the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway. I also concur with the testimony given by Mrs. Margaret Bloodworth to the Senate Committee on July 29 that any final offer arbitration action between those two parties could lead the Agency to decide to refer the matter for investigation as a Section 59 case.

As you know, this matter was extensively considered by both the House and the Senate Transport Committees. I think all parties had a fair hearing, and agreement was reached in the Transport Committees of both Houses of Parliament that the provisions of Section 48 should not be amended to accommodate the concerns of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. Accordingly, I hope that you and your colleagues will give third reading to Bill C-18 without any further amendments except those that were agreed to by the Senate Committee last week.

That letter is signed by Mr. Crosbie, the Minister of Transport. It would seem that the attitude of the department now is the same as that expressed before the committee.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I return to a point which was made earlier by Senator Stewart and commented upon by the Deputy Leader of the Government, namely, the printed accounts of committee proceedings. I do not intend to make extended remarks on the point, except to remind honourable senators that on an earlier occasion I did make some extended comments about the situation in which senators find themselves when proceedings of committees are not available when bills are called for adoption.

Senator Doody has pointed out that, really, the matter is not his direct responsibility, and I accept that he is not responsible for the administration of the Senate. Nevertheless, the problem still exists and it is one that, as he has pointed out, has been around for quite some time.

Regardless of the location of the responsibility for the failure to produce the evidence, there is one recourse that senators have in a case of this kind, and that is not to pass the bills until the evidence is available. I think that that is a valid point of view to take. In this particular case, however, the Senate has passed an order to have all stages of these bills completed by the end of the day on Friday. We did not add a qualification that we should have the proceedings of the committee hearings. Perhaps we should have done so. In any event, all I want to say is that if we were not already faced with a decision of the Senate to deal with these bills by a certain date, I would be tempted to ask that their consideration be deferred until the evidence is available. Because of that order of the Senate I will not do so and will not stand in the way of the passing of the bills. But I do want to say that it is a valid recourse that the Senate can take in the future if the printed evidence is not available. I think that those responsible ought not to be surprised or indignant if that recourse is resorted to in the future.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I just want to make one comment on proceedings of committees, and so on, an elaboration, I suppose, on the comments I made a few moments ago. Subsequent to those few words, I received a note from the Table to the effect that the Translation Bureau did, indeed, respect the commitment it had made to have the committee proceedings ready by August 7. However, the Printing Bureau has procrastinated. So, all of the assurances given at that committee, which we accepted, have indeed been fulfilled, but we have still been snookered.

Senator Frith: "Rooked" is the popular word with the Prime Minister, I think.

Senator Doody: Some people want to be "euchred", others want to be "rooked"—I prefer to be "snookered". If senators want to raise a procedural point on that, we can get into it. However, that does not take away the frustration I feel when we have been told, "We did everything we said we were going to do, but we also found a way to frustrate your desire to get the records before the chamber."

I would ask those honourable senators who are members of the Internal Economy Committee to put this forward as a first priority in an effort to come to grips with it again. I know that we have tried to do so several times in the past. We have sent delegations of officials to meet with representatives of the Printing Bureau and the Secretary of State's office, and various promises and commitments have been made. Obviously, they have not been fulfilled. I really think we have to come to grips with this for the sake of the business of the Senate.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I would like to make a short comment, because I have heard these complaints in the Internal Economy Committee for close to three years now. My subcommittee has been trying to grapple with some of the issues, particularly that of translation, the quality of which really leaves a great deal to be desired. I am beginning to think that departments of government only understand one thing—and, incidentally, this problem exists in the other place, too—which is that when you decide to do something yourself that they are not doing well, they usually improve what they are supposed to do. I would suggest, in looking at the problem, that the Senate, as an institution which is supposed to enjoy a certain amount of autonomy, including the level of its budget, should look at the possibility of securing in other ways the services which obviously are lacking.

● (1500)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I congratulate Senator Doody on getting us a fast answer. Perhaps he will ascertain for the sake of the committee—where I hope the matter will be raised again—whether the problem was the same as that concerning the Printing Bureau which we discussed in the chamber on an earlier occasion. At that time they had set aside the printing of the Debates for another specific purpose. I believe it had something to do with a Commons committee or the Commons itself. Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government will obtain that information for us so that in committee we will know who received priority.

Senator Doody: I will certainly ask that the information be made available. I do not have it at the present time. I simply had a note from the officials. Certainly that is important, and I will endeavour to obtain the information.

Senator Frith: I would hate to think that it was in order to print Senator Murray's insertion with the Old Age Pension cheques. We would all be disappointed if that were the case.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion for third reading of this bill, as amended?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Lawson: No.

[Senator Doody.]

Senator Frith: Your Honour, I thought I heard someone say "No" or "On division".

Senator Lawson: On the adoption of Bill C-18 I am voting "No".

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Then the bill, as amended, will be read the third time, on division.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed, on division.

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT BILL, 1987

THIRD READING

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the third reading of Bill C-19, as amended, respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving third reading of this bill, I will resume my seat and I am prepared to accept questions.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson, that this bill, as amended, be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: On division. I would like to be recorded as voting "No" on Bill C-19, as well.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed, on division.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE PRESENTED, PRINTED AS APPENDIX AND ADOPTED

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22 has the honour to present its Seventh Report respecting Bill C-22, to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 1721.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

An Hon. Senator: Now.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, let me take the first couple of minutes of my allotted seven to give nothing but praise to the deputy chairman and members of the committee for their dedicated work over the summer on a very difficult and controversial bill, one that occupied the attention of many Canadians and of the special committee for much of the summer. As chairman of the committee, I wish to thank the members of the committee from both sides of the house for their dedicated work.

As we bring forth this report, may I say that as chairman I took the stand, rightly or wrongly, that no such thing as a minority report should come before this Parliament. Because of the strong views held by many senators on the government side, I allowed a section to be included at the end of our report indicating that they did not agree with these amendments. Therefore, the report represents the views of the majority of the committee, but those members who are in support of the government are in strong disagreement with the proposed amendments to Bill C-22.

I mention that because I would not want this situation to become a precedent or something that will be used or referred back to in the future. As chairman, I allowed that to happen, because I knew they held strong views and felt that their views should not necessarily be expressed afterwards but that they should be included in the report.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): On a point of order, that is the third time that the chairman has said that he "allowed" us to do this. I thought that was done by the will of the committee.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: I thought that we had examined ways of accommodating the opinions of members of the committee, and that the committee agreed that that was the way to handle it. With respect, I did not think that it was done by the grace of the chairman.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I suspect that my friend, Senator Doody, is correct in that the committee agreed that the chairman should let this happen.

Senator Roblin: How to win friends and influence people!

• (1510)

Senator Bonnell: At any rate, they worked hard and they did not agree.

However, we brought in the report of the committee. Let me say further that the basic change brought in by the committee was to add the Eastman recommendations to Bill C-22, which gives four years of exclusivity to the patent drug companies instead of ten years. In the seventh report the committee is recommending to the government and the Senate that the royalty to be paid by the generic drug companies be 14 per cent instead of 4 per cent, which at this particular time the Commissioner of Patents may prescribe. Another change the committee recommends is that the bill become effective when it is proclaimed by the Governor in Council. Currently Bill C-22 becomes effective retroactively to June 1986.

Another change put forward by the committee is that the Drug Prices Review Board be removed. As honourable senators will remember, the government has stated with regard to Bill C-22 that it supports the Drug Prices Review Board and has said that it is a good way to control prices of patent drugs and of new drugs coming on the market. According to what the committee heard from various witnesses across Canada, many Canadians have very little faith that the Drug Prices Review Board has teeth. Others thought that the responsibility for asking companies producing patent medicines to reduce prices should be under provincial jurisdiction. However, most people thought that the best way to control prices was through competition, and by allowing generic drugs into the field, and the more generics stemming from any particular drug, chemical or medicine, the more competition, resulting in lower prices. The committee determined that the only real teeth given to the Drug Prices Review Board was that, after looking at the prices of drugs for a five-year period, it was allowed to remove patent protection from the drug concerned. Under the Eastman recommendations, companies would have four years' exclusivity on their patent rights. It was felt by the committee in this light with regard to the proposed five year protection that most of it was already gone and, therefore, the provision was almost useless. The members of the committee felt that the best way to control prices was through competition from prices of generic drugs.

As well as looking at these amendments with regard to drugs and at the Eastman report, the committee also looked at the entire Patent Act as such. Bill C-22 contains some good things. One thing the committee thought was good was the proposal that new patents be based on first to file rather than on first to invent, as was the case in the past. Other changes to the general Patent Act which have been proposed are worth while. The committee felt that Bill C-22 contained some really progressive changes. However, there are changes that should have been made and could have been made to make it even stronger and better. Rather than getting involved with amendments and changes to the general Patent Act, the committee felt that it was best to make recommendations and to point out some of these conditions to the government for consideration. As a result, the first part of our seventh report consists of amendments to the legislation recommended to the Senate. The second part consists of amendments to be recommended to the House of Commons for adoption, so that there is no possibility of any procedural difficulties. In addition, the report contains observations as well as recommendations on the general patent law amendments. They need no explanation from me. They are the result of a summer's work by a very active committee. Therefore, I leave the report with the Senate and move its adoption.

Hon. Michel Coggier: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the chairman for his kind words to me and to other members of the committee. I shall try to respond in kind. Yesterday we had a long afternoon arguing procedural points about the sixth report. We are now called upon to consider the seventh report. This morning I argued in committee that I did not think that it was very nice to the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the other place, since the sixth report had already been endorsed, approved and blessed by him, to pull it out from under his feet and throw at him a seventh report. I assume, however, that he will take a look at this report and give it his approval, blessing and endorsement. In any event, I want to convey my apologies to him.

Senator MacEachen: Very thoughtful of you!

[Translation]

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, we are approaching the end of three months of fairly intensive work, started in mid-May, on a bill that has focused the attention of the media and the general public.

Other committee members will consider some of the more technical aspects of this report. I thought I would give a short history of the bill for the benefit of honourable senators, which may be conducive to a better understanding of the facts and put the report into its appropriate context.

A point I intend to make later on in concluding my speech is that the report hardly justifies the three months of intensive effort that went into it. At the very beginning, when I agreed to sponsor the bill, I was looking forward to working with my colleagues on the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, since according to the rules of the Senate, Bill C-22 would normally have been referred to that Committee. However, it did not happen that way. Now, considering the tremendous work accomplished by the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and considering the exceptional talents of its chairman and his extraordinary insights into the Canadian business world and Canadian society in general, I assumed that the Banking Committee's reputation was not the reason for not considering the bill in this particular committee.

Upon reflection, I thought that perhaps the reason was that the interests of the membership of the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce were not sufficiently representative of the interests of Quebec, the province I represent. It is public knowledge that Quebec has a vested interest in Bill C-22. In fact, we all know that Bill C-22 was the subject of three unanimous resolutions by the Quebec National Assembly, and that it received the support of the Chamber of Commerce, the Montreal Board of Trade, and the Senior Citizens Association. In any case, I thought that perhaps they wanted to create a special committee where Quebec interests would be more adequately represented. However, when I saw the names of the members of the Special Committee, I was both surprised and disappointed, because although Liberal senators from Quebec represent nearly one-third of the total Liberal contingent, there was not a single Liberal representative from Quebec on the Special Committee on Bill C-22.

The only representatives from Quebec were Senator Paul David and myself, and there was not one from the Liberal Party.

Although I am relatively new to this chamber, I have been in politics long enough to understand the message we were being given, and I concluded that one of the prerequisites for membership on the committee was unfailing, unswerving, irreconcilable and unconditional opposition to the bill.

[Senator Cogger.]

Honourable senators, such was the atmosphere when the committee began its proceedings; since it also carried out its mandate in that atmosphere no one should be surprised to find today the report with which you are familiar and which is before you.

I must tell you that this atmosphere prevailed during the past three months. It was echoed in the choice of witnesses, in the way the committee proceedings were held, in the selection of experts and, finally, in the drafting of the report.

So it became essential to project the image of a committee which would listen only to harsh criticisms of the bill, and to very little favourable evidence. It became essential to seek a disproportionate balance in the number of pros and cons. I leave you to imagine, and you heard this from our chairman, to what extent opponents, if we are to believe our own statistics, were significantly more numerous than supporters. There is no need to dwell on the fact that during its proceedings the committee heard, for example, the Canadian Consumers Association on seven occasions: their national representatives once in Ottawa, their provincial representatives six times in the provinces. The committee heard the Canadian Labour Congress five times, I believe: their national representatives once in Ottawa, their provincial representatives in four or five provinces.

But there is more. I also want to draw the attention of honourable senators, and I am referring to the way the proceedings were handled, to the difference in the way most committee members would welcome witnesses according to the views they held.

A witness appearing to denounce Bill C-22 openly, for whatever reason, was generally welcomed with open arms, warmly greeted by the committee chairman and, having given evidence, more often than not was thanked profusely, warmly and generously.

When the witness took it upon himself to defend or speak in favour of the bill, he sometimes had the impression of being given a frosty reception.

I must confess that sometimes he was given a hard time.

● (1520)

[English]

I see my colleague, Senator Guay, laughing. If you think I am exaggerating, let me just quote to you for a second. In Edmonton, on Wednesday, June 3, the committee was listening to what I thought was a very valid and valuable presentation by a Mr. Shipka, who is the Registrar of the Alberta Pharmaceutical Association. Our chairman, in an objective, non-partisan, unprejudiced and unbiased gesture, asked of Mr. Shipka the following question:

Do you feel that it is right, through increased drug prices, to tax the poor, the sick, the infirm, the crippled, those on welfare, those who are eating dog food for meat because they can't afford anything else so that we can have more research.

Mr. Shipka was somewhat flabbergasted at that question. In my law practice I have not had that much court experience, but I would suggest that that was, at least, a leading question.

Senator MacEachen: But what was the answer?

Senator Cogger: As a matter of fact, it was a typical case of: "My mind is made up, don't bother me with the facts."

Senator Frith: You said that.

[Translation]

Senator Cogger: In some cases, and I believe that other committee members have found the same thing, and it is unfortunate, the very motivation or credibility of certain people who came to support the bill was questioned, and these witnesses were not just anybody, as we have had people of the highest calibre appear before us.

I recall for example what happened in Halifax when the dean of the Pharmaceutics Faculty of the University of Halifax appeared before the committee. It appears that the Pharmaceutics Faculty, as attested before the committee, will be undertaking jointly with a multinational company a project worth several million dollars. I do not recall the exact amount, but it is not important. The dean, who appeared before the committee with his students in attendance, was questioned in such a way as to suggest that his evidence and his support of the bill had been bought by the multinational with the promise of a grant.

I had to intervene because I found it extremely unseemly to allege or imply that the support given to a bill by a distinguished academic, researcher and scientist could have been bought.

In my opinion, honourable senators, this was not one of the highlights of the proceedings of this committee.

[English]

In many ways it was a shame that some of the senators opposite who are prominent members of the academic and scientific communities, such as Senator Marsden, Senator Stewart and others, were not there at times to lend support and moral authority to those academics, researchers and individuals from the various schools in this country who appeared before our committee and, quite often, were eloquently pleading for the prompt adoption of Bill C-22. Yet, as I pointed out, in too many cases those individuals were handled roughly by the committee.

In any event, the long and short of it is that as a result of all these travels, and as you have heard many times, we come back to this chamber having found out that there were many more consumers than there are researchers; many more buyers of drugs than there are individuals who labour to invent them. As I pointed out before, if we want legislation by referendum, so be it. I do not think it is quite enough for a committee to go out and spend $350,000 merely to come back to this chamber and say that there are more people against this bill than there are for it and, therefore, we should kill it.

[Translation]

I am sorry to say that at committee hearings, opponents of the bill were quick to exploit the anxiety and concern of people regarding possible price increases, to the extent that when people left the hearings they were even more worried than they were before.

I must admit I was very surprised, especially since these very legitimate concerns that we heard raised across this country are now being used to move the passage of a bill as amended by a majority of the committee and which has now been stripped of the provision providing for a drug prices review board. Yes, I was surprised, and in fact, I fail to understand the logic behind this amendment. I have followed all the Special Committee's sessions. I have heard hundreds of witnesses begging the Committee to give the Drug Prices Review Board more powers to ensure it would be an effective body with major powers and thus able to prevent excessive price increases. I never heard a single group ask us to get rid of the Drug Prices Review Board.

Whether we are talking about drug manufacturers, generic companies or innovative companies, consumer associations, the Canadian Legion or whatever, no one ever asked us to strip the bill of an element I have always considered to be essential.

I promised Senator Bonnell I would not let my speech run longer than his, and I will try to keep my word.

[English]

I believe I first spoke to this bill in May of this year. I then pleaded for its adoption on basically three principles. I thought that it was a well-balanced piece of legislation and that it achieved three things. It achieved appropriate protection for intellectual property; it protected the consumer through the Drug Prices Review Board against excessive increases in the prices of drugs; and it achieved a very important objective, namely, creating funds for research and development in this country. I thought that was the objective of the government. Bill C-22 in its original form achieves that delicate balance.

At this point in time we have a report that does three things. It recommends minimal protection for intellectual property, namely, four years. More importantly, it takes away two very important features of the initial Bill C-22. It takes away the Price Review Board, which would protect the consumer against excessive rises in prices, and as a result of yesterday's kerfuffle and bungle, or whatever you want to call it, it takes away any mechanism that would redirect money towards research and development.

We started out with a three-fold, reasonably well-balanced piece of legislation, and today we are looking at a piece of legislation that is so bastardized that Dr. Eastman would not even recognize it as his brain child. We are left with one minor aspect of the bill, and God knows what will happen to the other two aspects. Honourable senators, as recommended by the reporting committee, the piece of legislation becomes so imbalanced and out of kilter that it would fail to meet some of the very major objectives that the government had in mind when it first introduced the legislation.

Therefore, I plead with you—I especially plead with senators from Quebec—that we send Bill C-22 back to the House of Commons in its original form.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, we have listened to an astonishing response by the sponsor of the bill, the deputy chairman of the committee, on the resolution before the Senate today. My colleague started by downgrading, denigrating and insulting the committee for being unfair, for being biased, and for not allowing witnesses to be equitably treated. I am rather surprised at this, because I am looking at the deputy chairman who sat in at every meeting, with one or two exceptions. Never once did I hear him say that the committee chairman was unfair; never once did I hear him criticize the way the committee was run. As a matter of fact, I leaned over to some of my colleagues and said, “Our chairman is so fair that sometimes I’m almost embarrassed at the fact that he is bending over backwards trying to protect these witnesses who are in support of the bill against some of the criticism that might have been levelled by questions from this side of the house.”

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Buckwold: The fact is that this is a brand new approach we are hearing. This is what we hear when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs gives us his Orwellian philosophy: rich is poor, hot is cold, up is down. This whole thing is ludicrous.

A bill has been given to us with three objectives, as we have just heard. The objectives are: One, to protect patent rights on intellectual property; two, to create a Drug Prices Review Board to control and protect consumers; and three, to have funds for research. My colleague did not mention the first reason for the bill, namely, a response to the multinational drug companies’ pressure in Washington to get Canadians on side with them.

Senator Cogger: That is your opinion.

Senator Buckwold: That is not my opinion. That is the opinion of the general public of the country and those who know the scene.

Senator Frith: And witnesses before the committee.

Senator Buckwold: And witnesses before the committee.

Senator Argue: And Clayton Yeutter.

Senator Buckwold: And Clayton Yeutter. They all know this. When the minister was before us, he said that he had not been asked. Then one of his advisers leaned over to him and said, “Well, there was a little discussion in Quebec City with the Prime Minister about this.”

The fact is that your number one reason is to get on side with our fat-cat multinational drug companies, using their immense pressure in Washington so that you can talk about free trade.

Senator Cogger: There is not a shred of evidence to that effect.

[Senator Cogger.]

Senator Buckwold: If there is not a shred of evidence, why don’t you sue every newspaper that is using this information in column after column? We all know what the facts are.

Let us look at what has happened. As I say, we had the minister tell us that rich is poor. He says that prices will not go up, that they will go down, and with the same breath he provides a token $100 million in the legislation over the next four years to assist the provinces in meeting the increased cost of drugs as a result of this bill.

● (1540)

Senator Frith: It will protect them against something that will not happen!

Senator Buckwold: Yes, and on the other hand, they say: “Don’t believe anybody who says that the prices are going to go up.” The fact is that we all know that pipeline drugs—and there are now, I understand, over 50 of them ready to hit the market—will not be available and lower-price generic drugs will not be for sale.

I have received a letter from one of the generic drug companies indicating that a drug which is now on the market, but which was not by June 1986, will not now be allowed, that it will be withdrawn from the marketplace. The absence of that one drug could cost Canadians in the next year $6 million extra. That is a great deal of money to us; perhaps it is not so much to those sitting opposite.

Senator Frith: That is in Bill C-22, not in the amendments.

Senator Buckwold: Yes, that is in Bill C-22. Of course, one of the proposed amendments is that we eliminate that aspect of the bill, the retroactivity aspect, which was, I gather, put in by the government again as a result of pressure from the multinationals. That was not contained in the original bill, but the government backtracked and made sure that those drugs, as of June 1986, would not be on the market, resulting in an extra cost of $100 million to Canadian taxpayers. We should get applause from our friends on the other side, because we have just saved, through this proposed amendment, the people of Canada $100 million. I suggest that if the members of the committee are sincere about putting money into research they take that $100 million and give it to those people who conduct drug research, and there are many qualified people who do conduct research. They should be able to use the $100 million for research. That will not change the budget by one cent.

On the other hand, what has been done? Since 1984, although this government claims it supports research and says that Canada must keep its scientists in Canada, it has reduced the budget of the National Research Council of over $500 million by nearly $125 million. That is how this government encourages scientists in this country.

There is a National Research Council branch in Saskatoon. The representations made to me by scientists in that office indicate that what this government is doing to the research and scientific community as a result of reduction of funds available for research is abominable. It is insulting to the intelligence of any honourable senator to say that this is a government that takes research as its priority when we have this kind of evidence.

Honourable senators, where is the money coming from? When multinational drug companies say that they are going to give $1.4 billion to research, that they will increase the amount devoted to research to 10 per cent of sales, keeping in mind that promotion costs will still represent 21 per cent, where is the money coming from? This is all part of the hocus-pocus. Do any of us really believe that out of the goodness of their hearts the generous multinational corporations will provide $1.4 billion over the next ten years for research? Where will that come from? It will come from increased prices. Canadians are not that dumb; they are not that stupid. That is why the bill is so unpopular.

I say to my honourable friends that the public of Canada is not being duped. The public of Canada is subject to the same kind of pressure that was applied in 1969, when a courageous Liberal government at that time saw fit to reduce the highest drug prices in the world, and brought in a program which is used as an example for many, many countries, and which has even been looked at by a committee in the United States reviewing outrageous drug prices.

We in Canada had the courage to fight those multinationals and bring down drug costs to the extent that, as Dr. Eastman has indicated, we saved Canadian consumers $213 million in 1983.

We have heard evidence from a variety of provincial drug-plan people who represented their respective provinces. The Province of Ontario said that it could cost, over the next ten years, up to $1 billion in extra costs. We have heard that from many of the provinces, although Quebec did not send a delegation opposing this legislation.

Let me tell Senator Cogger, when he appeals to Liberal senators from Quebec to support Bill C-22, because it has received great support in Quebec, that the results of a poll taken by the Toronto Star on June 4, 1987, indicate otherwise. To his amazement he will find that the greatest opposition to this bill came from the province of Quebec. I will give him the figures.

Senator Flynn: What was the question?

Senator Buckwold: I will be glad to read the question. The question was:

Do you support or oppose the new legislation on prescription drugs giving patent protection for new drugs developed in Canada?

The opposition was: British Columbia, 48 per cent; the Prairies, 52 per cent; Ontario, 53 per cent; Toronto, 45 per cent—Toronto seemed to like it—Quebec, 56 per cent; Atlantic Provinces, 52 per cent.

If senators from Quebec want to support the people of their area, then they should recognize that the majority of the people from the province of Quebec are opposed to this legislation, which has the ringing endorsement of our friends across the way.

Now, let me deal with the importance of research. I went back to some of the records of 1966 when, as I said, a courageous government did something about high drug prices. Here is some of the evidence given by representatives of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association of Canada. They stated:

It would be unrealistic to claim that we can ever be the authors of the major proportion of the prescription drugs used in this country, but we can be worthy collaborators in an international venture. This must remain an international industry, with the main foci on endeavour in those countries where the major companies have been long established.

It has not changed since 1966. We know where drug research will be carried out.

Senator Cogger: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator Buckwold: I would appreciate questions after I have finished so that I do not lose my train of thought.

This is the kind of propaganda we received from the drug companies in 1966. They admitted then more truthfully than they do now that, internationally, Canada is not going to be a great player in this serious work of drug research. It is to be hoped that we will do more and more. I am delighted to see that we will raise our research level one way or another in order to bring about development of that important field in this country.

I looked at the third criterion; that is one of drug price control. The chairman of the committee has said that competition is a very good way to do that, but let us keep in mind the other aspects of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board. We went through this on numerous occasions when the committee travelled across the country. Those of us who looked at it realistically are satisfied that there is absolutely no way that the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board can be effective in controlling the prices of drugs. Added to that, of course, is the question of the constitutionality of that board. That was raised by some of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. In fact, as most honourable senators are aware, the Government of Canada cannot move into an area of provincial jurisdiction in this particular case unless there is a national emergency, as was the case when price controls were introduced a few years ago.

So what did the government, in its wisdom, do? They said, "The penalty will be that we will take away two patents of a company that does not obey the law." Honourable senators, I can tell you that that becomes meaningless, because by the time you go through the procedures, by the time a generic drug is processed—which is a minimum of five years from the date the original drug comes on the market—and by the time you go through these long studies to try to get information on what the drug companies are spending on research in Puerto Rico, or wherever it may be; what they are selling drugs for around the world; and what the consumer price index is, which is just one part of the whole scene, I suggest to you that it is ineffective. The reason—and my colleague is aware of this—why the Drug Prices Review Board was removed was because it would be meaningless with a four-year protection period. When we, through Dr. Eastman, recommend a four-year period, by the time the new drug is on the market there is no more protection.

Senator Frith: Competition.

Senator Buckwold: The whole Patented Medicine Prices Review Board becomes completely redundant—at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, I presume. If you say that you are just throwing it open to the wolves, the fact is that the situation will be basically what it is today—

Senator Frith: Competition, that is right.

Senator Buckwold:—where, in fact, competition has resulted in prices in Canada that are considerably lower, even for the patent drugs, than they are in the United States.

So, honourable senators, having said all that, and having expressed my indignation to my colleague, the deputy chairman of the committee, for downgrading the work of that committee—which, in my opinion, was probably one of the most effective, cross-country studies—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Buckwold:—of an important bill—

Senator Flynn: What did you learn that you did not know in advance?

Senator Buckwold:—and spending most of his time today saying that we did not give people a chance; we did not listen to people who were in favour, I think that that was not a reasonable way of protesting against the proposed amendments to the bill.

Senator Flynn: That is not what he said.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I believe that if the government is looking out for the interests of Canadians in the future; if the government really is dedicated to providing drug prices at a reasonable rate for the people of this country; if we are really interested in the health of the nation; in making our health dollars go as far as we can; in providing research in a reasonable way; in encouraging the development of Canadian drugs and Canadian manufacturers, then you will support the amendments. The government itself should take a careful look at them, along with the important part dealing with the patent law in this bill. We have not talked about that. Those parts of the bill referring to general patent law probably should have been dealt with in a separate bill altogether. But again, I think a bit of smoke screen was used to put it all in with the drug bill. Suddenly, it became a drug bill rather than a patent bill. In fact, the House of Commons did not spend much time on this complicated business of patent law. We had many witnesses who looked at this and pointed out significant changes that are required. Those have been drawn to the attention of the government in this report.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Looking it all over, I compliment the chairman; I even compliment the deputy chairman, because he was an effective person there. I even compliment Senator Barootes, who kept us entertained—not that we learned very much, though. Having said that, honourable senators, I beg all of you to look carefully at this—not in the interests of any political party; not in the interest of gaining marks but in the interest of the people of Canada, who deserve the best at the lowest possible price for the health of this nation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Efstathios W. Barootes: I am prepared to defer to Senator Cogger in case he has some questions for Senator Buckwold.

Senator Cogger: I will pass.

Senator Steuart: They were all answered.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, in joining this debate it is not my intention to speak about the rules of order and legal precedents. The debacle in the house yesterday was enough to convince me that there are others in this house who are best able to bring about disorder.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Barootes: Nor shall I discuss the—

Senator Frith: What a thing to say about your colleague, Senator Flynn!

Senator Barootes:—general amendments to the patent law, since there is agreement—

Senator Flynn: I do not know who else would do that but you!

Senator Barootes:—that these are highly desirable and long overdue, having been endorsed by the professionals practising in the field, as well as by the Institute of Patents and Trademarks.

I shall not comment further on the glaring and obvious absence of Quebec Liberal senators from a committee in which Quebec's vital industrial interests are at stake, but I hope to hear from those senators from Quebec, as they fulfil their senatorial duty as representatives of regional interests.

It has been reported by the chairman that the committee members on this side strongly opposed the drug patent amendments that were proposed in Bill C-22. I hope to explain our reasoning in that regard.

Senator Frith: You mean proposed in the report, not in Bill C-22. You did not oppose that.

Senator Barootes: Thank you. I stand corrected by my senior member over there.

I hope to explain my reasons. I intend to do this by demonstrating our views on the effects consequent to the original Bill C-22, comparing them to the results that would follow if the present amendments were adopted. I shall also make a few observations on how health care in Canada may be affected by this. I will do that and present for your attention a motion that may be able to alleviate these problems.

Let us turn for a minute to how drug patent provisions in Bill C-22 affect us. The objective is to encourage Canadian firms to undertake more pharmaceutical research and development in Canada by providing a more favourable climate for that investment. The Bill C-22 regime would give Canadian pharmaceutical firms seven to ten years of patent protection on new medicines, depending on certain criteria. Although this proposed patent protection period is still far short of similar periods in most industrialized countries, it is an incentive for Canadian companies to research, invent, develop, manufacture, promote and market new drugs in Canada, with some better degree of protection for their creative and intellectual properties.

In turn, these innovative drug companies are held to increasing their research and development expenditures in Canada from 4.5 per cent to 10 per cent of their gross sales by 1996. This amounts to approximately $1.4 billion, and is estimated to create 3,000 new jobs in the high levels of technical scientific and research categories. In fact, honourable senators, in anticipation of the passage of Bill C-22, over $800 million is already committed by 16 of 66 innovative drug companies and by provincial and university research units. The benefits of this massive undertaking will likely be lost if the amendments suggested by the special committee are adopted, since there is no mechanism to compel and no economic reason why these drug firms should invest that promised $1.4 billion in Canadian research under the new amendments.

Moreover, this major commitment of funds for research is not destined to be spent exclusively by these pharmaceutical firms. Four hundred and twenty million dollars of the $1.4 billion will be invested and distributed directly to Canadian university faculties of medicine and pharmacology, to teaching hospitals, and to private research facilities in Canada. Add to this, if you will—Senator Buckwold please take note—the many cases for which matching grants are mandated to be supplied by the Medical Research Council of Canada. This gives you some idea of the enormous enhancement to scientific drug and medical research that we should experience in Canada. Such enhanced research will enable Canada to benefit further from new world technologies in the field of biotechnology, medicine and, indeed, health care.

In that respect, I wish to bring to your attention an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail of August 6, 1987, written by Patrick L. McGeer. Doctor McGeer, a former provincial science minister, teaches medicine at the University of British Columbia and sits on the board of directors of Pacific Pharmaceutical Ltd., a subsidiary of the Terry Fox Medical Research Foundation. I quote and, in part, paraphrase him. He said:

Pharmaceutical companies are expected to assume all the risk and bear all the cost of clinical research into new therapeutic agents—an estimated $100 million before a new drug is approved. . . . No pharmaceutical company can be expected to support research into drugs that are beneficial only for rare disease, nor can they be expected to investigate drugs that can be manufactured so cheaply that the costly research outlays will never be recovered.

Later he goes on in a more optimistic note when he states:

The techniques of molecular genetics are permitting for the first time custom-made proteins to be produced in quantities sufficient for therapeutic use.

He goes on to explain this by saying:

These natural body proteins are the first of many that will appear as a result of the powerful biotechnology revolution. If priorities change, Canadians will not only be among the first to enjoy the health benefits of the new agents, they will gain from their commercial development. If priorities remain as they are, Canadians may be among the last to benefit.

Honourable senators, dare we forsake these kinds of research opportunities? Do we wish to remain medical beggars, dependent on the alms of our western industrialized neighbours—with our highly educated researchers and scientists continuing to emigrate as unwilling refugees to foreign countries where their training and talents can be better exploited and appreciated? Does Canada, in the field of drug research and discovery, wish to be relegated to Third World status, or do we wish to be in the forefront, the cutting edge, of medical, pharmaceutical and biotechnical progress? If we forfeit or reject this golden opportunity at this time, I am sure that Doctors Banting and Best and other researchers must certainly be restless in their graves.

Linked to this thrust for a stimulus to investment in Canadian research in Bill C-22—and which, parenthetically, I might just add, is quite different from the measure of R&D of recent memory which raped the Canadian Treasury and which many of the members here will recall—is a strong element for consumer protection by the creation of a Patented Medicine Prices Review Board. It will be chaired by the well-known economist, Dr. Harry Eastman, whose report is so favourably accepted by my friends on the other side.

This board will monitor and control drug prices of all existing prescription drugs on the market, limiting increases to the inflation index or less. In recent years drug prices in Canada have been increasing considerably beyond this level.

The board will also be able to put a lid or a ceiling on the introductory prices of new drugs as they come on to the market, using a variety of six national and international yardsticks which are mentioned in the bill.

Some critics, including my friends opposite, have wondered if this board has teeth. We keep hearing this: Do they have the power to compel roll-backs of excessive prices and to penalize the offenders? Indeed, Bill C-22 authorizes the board, with the strength of a higher court, to issue orders for roll-back of excessive increases and to control the introductory prices of new drugs. Failure to comply with a report of this nature will result in a patent exclusivity of that offending drug being removed. Not only that, one other patent exclusivity on another one of their products will also be removed—double jeopardy, if you will. This very harsh economic punishment is one that no drug company would like to suffer. There is no appeal from this board except on points of law.

Furthermore, this board will review and survey and report to Parliament and to cabinet annually on the performance of the drug industry in regard to their commitments for R&D and for conformity to board rulings. Cabinet will have the ability, at the end of four years, to review the statute, and Parliament is obliged to review and, if necessary, change or repeal the act in ten years.

I say to you, honourable senators, few consumer protection statutes or regulations in the past, in my memory, have carried this kind of strong and laudatory feature.

It is of some importance for the nay-sayers to note a survey that was done at the height of this controversy. I must refer to the survey that my friend, Senator Buckwold, has quoted, and some of his other statistics. I borrow a story from him which is that statistics, as he says, are somewhat like a lamp post to an inebriated person. I think he says that they use it more for support than for illumination. We have heard that repeated many times. It is of some importance to note that a survey at the height of this controversy shows that 81 per cent of Canadians agree that these additional consumer safeguards, the research commitments, and the employment opportunities assured by Bill C-22 will be, in their opinion, of significant benefit to Canada. I have quoted my set of competing statistics, if you will. To compensate for this horrendous loss of money that the proposed amendments to the bill would inflict is the recommendation that the House of Commons establish a pharmaceutical royalty fund by exacting an additional 10 per cent of royalty from the generic drug companies. This could, of course, serve to elevate the consumer's cost of generic drugs by approximately 10 per cent, if these generic firms wish to maintain the same profit level. That is obvious to most people. The amount to be collected through this 10 per cent of the new royalty would, in 1985, have been approximately $7.5 million at a maximum or, at a minimum, $3.5 million to $4 million. That sum is a drop in the bucket compared to the $1.4 billion that would be going into research and development under Bill C-22. The choice for me is quite easy.

● (1610)

This relatively small number of dollars would then be refunded to the innovative pharmaceutical firms on the basis of the amount of research they did that year. This is determined by a formula that is so complicated that Einstein himself, if he had to deal with it, probably would have given up mathematics and opted to be a shoe salesman. I have taken the liberty of circulating that formula to senators so that they can see its complexity. There are no words to describe this formula that was devised by my friends opposite, except to say that it is an arithmetic abortion. It is a credit to the legislative draftsmen that they could possibly express in words what the formula is meant to do, although no one could conceivably have any concept of what those words mean. Moreover, the distribution of these few million dollars in the royalty fund to be passed along a year or two later would not be mandated for future researches by those companies. No, indeed. What they would do is simply add that to their bottom line, which is not the sort of thing that would induce more research.

The amendments proposed by the Special Committee on Bill C-22 would do away with the Price Review Board, leaving the consumers at the mercy of those multinational pharmaceutical companies. Gone is the control over rising prices of prescription drugs; gone is the lid or ceiling that might be put on the introduction of new drugs in Canada. The industry, in the terms of some critics—and we heard this today from members opposite—could increase the cost to the disabled, the disadvantaged, the chronically ill, the sick and the elderly for all the traffic could bear. Yes, my dear friends, they might well raise their prices considerably. Instead of having seven to ten years to recover their initial heavy investments on research, they would be limited to a much shorter period of time in which to do so. There is much less protection from the generic copies of their best selling products, because these best selling products are the very drugs that have the mass sale appeal that the generic companies will copy.

As we have noted, it costs up to $100 million to research, develop and put a drug on our market. It then takes several years and hundreds of millions of dollars more to promote the drugs and to educate the profession so that doctors will have familiarity and confidence in the use of the new medication. It is at this point in a developed mass market that generic companies enter to compete. Usually they do so by importing the active ingredient or fine chemical from abroad, obtaining a notice of compliance from the health branch, and marketing this product at a cheaper price than that of the inventor, who originally made the huge investment in that drug.

Honourable senators, let me summarize what Bill C-22 in its original form would do. By giving patent holding pharmaceutical firms a guaranteed period of protection, the bill would put $1.4 billion—not $3.7 million, not $7 million but $1.4 billion—of new money into Canadian research and development.

The bill would create 3,000 high level scientific and technical positions in this country, half of which, I might add, would go to Montreal. It would strengthen consumer protection by monitoring and controlling prices of drugs on the market and new drugs to come on the market. Contrary to the scare tactics of some critics, no drug presently on the market would increase in price, and any future changes in price would be much lower than has been the case over the last seven years.

Generic companies operating under compulsory licence to copy patented drugs would be retained and would continue to compete and to bring benefit to our consumers. It has been shown that for the 3.5 per cent of drugs copied by compulsory licences of generic manufacturers, prices tended to drop anywhere from 20 to 50 per cent in the course of a few years. This will continue despite the objections of our international trading partners.

The bill as originally presented to the Senate also provides the impetus for our fledgling fine chemical manufacturing industry in this country. It provides encouragement to the biotechnical scientists and to their companies to expand and compete in this exciting new world of science, to which Dr. McGeer referred in his Globe and Mail article. Finally, as I mentioned, government and Parliament would have the opportunity to review and alter this legislation if it were found not to accomplish the purposes for which it was meant.

One anomaly arises during the transitional phase-in period of Bill C-22 as a result of this guaranteed period of patent. It applies to a number of drugs for which there is currently an application for a compulsory licence, but which have not received notice of compliance. These are the so-called "pipeline" drugs. Potentially and theoretically, some of these could be delayed, in terms of reaching the market, by as long as four years. Provincial health drug plans, which may have anticipated future savings from these drugs, could be affected by their late availability. In a worst case scenario, this future loss to the provincial plans amounts to no more than $90 million. Therefore, the government is providing extra security to these provincial drug plans by appropriating $100 million over the course of the next four years as pro rata compensation—a figure which far exceeds what I believe is necessary, because many of these applications for compulsory licences and notices of compliance may be delayed or dropped by the generic firms, or may not be economically feasible to market. In my opinion, only a few of these pipeline drugs seem to have the volume of mass market appeal that the immediate future would make attractive for a generic competitor. This anomaly would be corrected by the proposed amendments that have been brought to this house today by changing the operative date of amendments from June 26, 1986, to the future date of proclamation of this act.

The new amendments which have been brought to our attention duplicate an omission of the Eastman report in that no advantage or inducement is afforded to the manufacturing industry of the active ingredient of drugs in Canada. This is, indeed, a body blow to the fine chemical industry which Canadian scientists and Canadian chemists are beginning to develop. Moreover, it virtually eliminates any possibility of developing our exotic biotechnical industry and its progress, which was beginning to thrive recently under the brilliance of a small cadre of outstanding scientists such as Dr. John Evans and the people who support him. It is on this segment of science that the hope of future cures for incurable diseases lies.

Perhaps, honourable senators, we should give some credence to the plaintive pleas of sufferers and families of those with incurable diseases such as muscular dystrophy, Alzheimer's, cancer, AIDS, cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis, heart disease, many forms of arthritis, and mental illness. I could go on with other diseases that are not yet curable.

The people with such diseases, and their families, beg not for cheaper drugs but for the discovery of any new drug which might bring some amelioration of their lethal disease.

We have received many pitiful and pathetic communications from such people from Prince Edward Island right over to Vancouver and Victoria. I should like, with your permission, to read one of the sensitive and helpful letters. It was addressed to the Honourable Senator Bonnell. It is dated July 6 and comes from Vancouver. I will read the name of the writer at the end. The letter is beautifully written. I will not read the whole of it, but I will take an excerpt from it, which I hope will be as touching to honourable senators as it was to me when I read it. It is enough to bring tears to the eyes of even a Liberal.

Senator MacEachen: Tears?

Senator Steuart: Break out the violins!

Senator Barootes: The gentleman writes as follows:

Just over 27 years ago, on June 20, 1960, my wife and I were blessed with the birth of a fine, healthy, young son. We were very proud, and as any parents had the highest hopes and dreams for him. On October 13, 1960, less than four months later, our dreams perished, with our son. Many years later in 1967, my best school friend died at the age of 32 in the very prime of his life.

My son and my friend shared two things.

This best conveys the message that I want to present. The letter continues:

Both of them died prematurely and both of them perished for lack of the drugs that would have saved their lives. It was not the fact that drugs were expensive but the drugs did not EXIST. Since those tragic events I have always had a burning desire to see new drugs invented. At no time did I expect them to be cheap or free.

Here is the pathetic part:

I had to borrow $1,000.00 from a bank to bury my own son... Could anyone seriously believe that my late friend's wife and family would care what profit margin there would have been on a new drug appearing in time to save his life?

He goes on to say:

Myself and others already owe our lives to such creators in the past. I should like to emphasize the word "creators" of the new drugs, for it is they I wish to applaud not the second-handers and the copiers which inevitably follow.

He closes a three-page letter with a touching statement:

Nearing the close of my appeal it is important to clarify my vested interest in Bill C-22. I am not a shareholder of any pharmaceutical manufacturer. I am not an employee of any pharmaceutical manufacturer. Furthermore, I am not a card-carrying member of any political party. My vested interest is my life and my love of it and the lives of my family and friends. I want new life-saving drugs.

In closing, Honourable Senator,—

It is addressed to our chairman:

—please visualize and consider the following. I see the faces of those I know who have died. I am thinking of the faces of "life". I see the face of a brilliant young surgeon on the cover of Life magazine as he performed open-heart surgery in an American hospital. I recognized his face because he graduated from my high school with honours and many of us appreciated the great potential of this young Canadian. I no longer wonder why he took his great brain and left my country. Do you?

It is signed Rodney Wilfred Steere.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes: I think that is the message that we could drive home anywhere in Canada.

The advocates of these new amendments, and some consumer groups, base their case and concern on their fear of inordinate rises in the cost of drugs, no matter how reassuring is the logic and the reasoning to the contrary. This is nonsense. Those critics prefer, as they have said repeatedly today, to rely on drug prices being kept down by competition from generic drug firms using the compulsory licence provisions of the act. That position bears a little scrutiny. First, compulsory licences will continue. The transitional temporary phase will disappear, and they will still have the effect of the generic companies. Second, we must realize that generic copies affect only 7 per cent of the drug sales in Canada, and less than half of that 7 per cent is due to compulsory licence. In fact, more than half of that 7 per cent is for drug products for which the patent has already expired, so that a compulsory licence is no longer necessary and a royalty no longer need be paid. How then, I beg of you, could this minuscule maximum of 7 per cent of drugs safeguard the consumer from the prices of the other 93 per cent of uncontrolled sales that are on the Canadian market? It is ridiculous. Compare that, however, to the authority of the Drug Prices Review Board with its stringent protection over not 7 per cent, not 93 per cent, but over 100 per cent of all of the drugs in Canada.

Dr. Eastman found in his study that the average time for the introduction of those generic copies was eleven and a half years. It is now somewhat less. Bill C-22 allows for the introduction of manufactured copies of drugs in seven years and imported copies in ten years. Dr. Eastman also reported that compulsory licensing for generic companies had saved consumers $211 million in 1983. I have to correct the $213 million that was mentioned by Senator Buckwold. It is $211 million. Using the same assumptions, the same methodology, and the same data as Dr. Eastman's model, if Bill C-22 had been in effect since 1969, when the present law was authorized, it is estimated by those same figures that $266 million to $366 million would have been saved to Canadian consumers, chiefly as a result of the controls of the Drug Prices Review Board. This is a watchdog committee, which the Special Committee of the Senate says is no longer necessary and will be done away with.

• (1630)

In addition, the regime of Bill C-22 would have injected an additional $70 million of new money into research and development in that same year, 1983. Are we buying a pig in a poke? For the sake of some kind of contrived political expediency, are we going to adopt a report which is throwing the baby out with the bath water? We have to be reasonable and look at this.

[Senator Barootes.]

Honourable senators, this reform of the Patent Act, and in particular of the drug section, was initiated back in the mid-1970s by the Honourable André Ouellet. His successor, the Honourable Judy Erola, also concerned with revision of the drug section of this act, appointed a Commission of Inquiry into the Pharmaceutical Industry under Commissioner Harry Eastman, an eminent economist from the University of Toronto, who delivered his report in, I believe, 1984. It may have been 1985. It is now 1987. The Honourable Judy Erola, in giving testimony to our Senate committee on, I believe, May 5, 1987, indicated that draft enabling legislation similar to Bill C-22 today to extend the period of drug patents was being prepared in her department. So don't tell me that all of a sudden the people opposite have changed their opinions. I would like to quote from the minutes of that meeting. Mrs. Erola was asked if the former administration had planned specifically to change the Patent Act. Mrs. Erola answered "Yes." The questioner then asked:

Senator Barootes: Can you tell me, was it to shrink the period or expand the period of patent?

Mrs. Erola: It was definitely to expand the period of the patent. The minister who preceded me and I both felt very strongly, with the support from our caucus and cabinet at the time, that the protection of intellectual property in the area of pharmaceuticals was discriminatory and unproductive in that we had evidence to show that there had been a decline in research and development in Canada in this field.

In fairness to her, I should add the next sentence:

However, we wanted to ensure that there would not be a rise in prices; that indeed there had to be some mechanism in place to ensure that Canadians would have access to reasonably-priced medications.

A couple of questions later, I asked if there was anything further in the form of support from the Department of Health and Welfare that could be added. I suggested that so often, when studies of this nature are done, the administration in power will prepare what we call enabling or draft legislation without specifics as to dates, time, extensions, restrictions, and so on, and asked whether any such legislation was undertaken or any draft material presented. Mrs. Erola answered "Yes." I then asked:

Was it indeed the intention of the former administration to proceed with a bill similar to this, which expands the period but which gives protection to the consumer?

Mrs. Erola answered "Yes." So, this is not something new. It was in the mind of the former Liberal administration and had been for almost a full decade.

Now, let us turn to the testimony of Dr. Harry Eastman, the economist, when he appeared before our committee on May 12, 1987, and see how he felt about this point. Here is his voluntary statement given before the committee:

I concluded a couple of years ago that we needed to modify our policy. When we come to Bill C-22, I consider that Bill C-22 modifies our policy in an acceptable manner.

That was a statement made of the doctor's own volition. Later on in the hearing I said to Dr. Eastman:

But you also ask: "Do we need to modify our policy? Bill C-22 does this in an acceptable manner." I am going to ask whether you feel that Bill C-22 is a fair and justified modification of the present status as we know it.

Dr. Eastman: I do, senator.

I went on to ask him whether it was fair to researchers, innovators, scientists, consumers of the product, and so on.

Senator MacEachen: These are leading questions.

Senator Barootes: In each case he indicated his concurrence that it was a justifiable and proper thing to do.

Senator Frith: Senator Cogger, would you call that a leading question?

Senator Barootes: I do not think that anyone in our committee was able to lead either Dr. Harry Eastman or Mrs. Judy Erola along. They are very strong-minded and, shall I say, very notable people.

Senator Flynn: Good reply.

Senator Barootes: So, I say to you, honourable senators, that we know from the testimony of Dr. Eastman and of the Honourable Judy Erola that they feel that Bill C-22 is acceptable, fair, justified and operable. If that is so, do you think we can do any less in this chamber?

Honourable senators, as this debate over Bill C-22 has raged it has, frankly, surprised and puzzled me. All honourable senators and parliamentarians realize that a huge proportion of taxpayers' money goes to pay for our health care costs and programs in Canada. One third of provincial budgets and one quarter of the federal budget is designated for health expenditures. Prudent spending, cost-savings and reasonable control, without loss of quality and accessibility, are the objectives of every interested party. It strikes me, however, as excessive to be so concerned about the drug component of this health care dollar when it constitutes about 5 per cent of the health expenditure. I put the question, would it not be more effective to expend our efforts on the major cost components rather than this one 5 per cent segment? This is particularly so when one realizes that 85 per cent of all consumers of drugs are covered by some drug plan.

In the more vulnerable areas, such as high consumers of drugs, 100 per cent of all seniors and of all social needs groups are covered by provincial plans. I feel it is much more important to realize that new drug discoveries, however we decry their excessive or perceived costs, save hundreds of millions of dollars for the treasury, and maybe billions of dollars. How do they do this? They do it by negating the necessity of expensive hospitalization and doctors' fees. For example, the ulcer medications Zantac and Tagamet alone have saved literally millions of days of hospitalization and have figuratively taken the knife out of the surgeons' hands, saving millions more dollars in physicians' fees. This is an economic benefit of pharmaceutical and medical research, not to mention the untold misery and illness which is alleviated and the many millions and millions of days of lost working time which it saves industry.

Therefore, it seems to me sensible, as guardians of the public purse and health matters, that we not unduly denigrate the cost of medicines but perhaps work together to institute a climate in which these new discoveries to relieve humanity from suffering, to prolong useful life, and, at the same time, to save costs in institutional hospitalization and medical fees can be undertaken. We can do this by encouraging innovative pharmaceutical research in the future. The deadly and incurable diseases which are killing our citizens will only be prevented and cured by a regime such as the one proposed in the original Bill C-22.

• (1640)

Honourable senators, for all these reasons I cannot support the latest amendments recommended by our Special Committee on Bill C-22. I urge you—nay, more strongly, as a physician who has long been associated with health economic matters in Canada, I beg you, honourable senators, to oppose these amendments and plead with you to accept Bill C-22 as originally submitted. To that end, I propose a motion in amendment:

That all the words after the word "Report" be struck out and replaced by the following:

inasmuch as it proposes amendments to the said Bill, be not adopted but that the Bill in the terms it was originally received by the Senate be placed on the Orders of the Day for a third reading . . .

MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, in amendment it is moved by the Honourable Senator Barootes, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle:

That all the words after the word "Report" be struck out and replaced by the following:

inasmuch as it proposes amendments to the said Bill, be not adopted but that the Bill in the terms it was originally received by the Senate be placed on the Orders of the Day for a third reading . . .

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I indicated to the Chair that I wanted to seek clarification from Senator Barootes as to the amendment before raising a possible point of order as to the regularity of the amendment. I do not have a copy of the amendment, but I listened to it attentively. May I ask Senator Barootes whether the effect of his amendment is to delete Part I of the report and leave the remaining parts in the report? In other words, it is not an amendment that quashes the whole report; it simply quashes Part I.

Senator Flynn: It deals with Part I.

Senator MacEachen: It deals with Part I only, and if the amendment were adopted, Part I would be deleted—

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: —but the remainder of the report would stand.

Senator Flynn: It would stand or fall, yes.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Yes, that is the intention.

Senator MacEachen: Senators Barootes says that is the intention, therefore, I have no comment to make on the regularity. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the regularity of the motion. However, I may have some comments on the debate.

Senator Barootes: I think I can confirm that my intention was with respect to those amendments which are recommended to be adopted by the Senate and not those which are observations, and so on, for the minister and the House of Commons.

Senator MacEachen: In other words, if I understand it, Senator Barootes could easily have put his motion in the form that the report be adopted, except for Part I.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question as to the regularity of the motion. I am referring to Beauchesne, page 205, paragraph 658(2), which states:

A report from a committee may not be amended in a substantive manner by the House; it must be referred back to the committee.

I wonder how that paragraph relates to this situation.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: The motion in amendment says only that part of the report should not be adopted. It does not change it.

Senator Frith: It is a pretty substantial part.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but what I mean is—

Senator Frith: If that is not substantial, give us an example of something that is.

Senator Flynn: —there are three parts. Of course, the report is quite irregular in that it contains recommendations for amendments as well as observations, et cetera. In this respect, it is not regular in that it is not normally done; it is a practice that has grown in recent years and has come to us, I suppose, under the inspiration of the present Leader of the Opposition.

However, if we only had the report with the amendments, of course, the question would be: Why say no to the pious hopes of the report which are not dealing with the bill itself and which are, in fact, outside the scope of the bill? Of course, if they had been embodied as was first intended, they would have contravened sections 53 and 54 of the BNA Act and would have been outside the authority of this chamber.

Now the committee has reduced the amendments to questions that are within the powers of the Senate, and it is only to this effective report that we want the question to be put. In other words, we are asking the Senate not to adopt the report, inasmuch as it proposes amendments to the bill, and that, therefore, the bill in its original form—

Senator MacEachen: The bill as it came to the Senate?

Senator Flynn: Yes, the bill as it came originally to the Senate, be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading. If the Senate wishes to adopt the rest of the report, that is another question, as the Leader of the Opposition has said.

Senator MacEachen: Senator Flynn will understand that if the motion made by Senator Barootes were adopted, Part I would be deleted, but the Senate would be recommending to the House of Commons the establishment of a royalty fund.

Senator Flynn: It would be a recommendation if, in turn, this is adopted, yes.

Senator MacEachen: So that the Leader of the Government and his colleagues are endorsing—

Senator Flynn: No, no—

Senator MacEachen: They are endorsing the establishment of a royalty fund and recommending that it be adopted by the House of Commons. In other words, Part II would be adopted by the Senate and supported by the members of the government, but Part I would not be adopted. That is what I understand the impact of the amendment made by Senator Barootes to be. Senator Flynn has made that clear.

I am seeking clarification rather than trying to raise a point of order. Our colleague, Senator Molgat, has raised a point of order, and it is up to him to decide whether he wishes to press it. However, I am not raising a point of order.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, if I may say so, I think I can speak for the supporters of the government on this matter. As the honourable Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, the report is in several parts. The concern of the government and of its supporters in this chamber is to defeat the amendments that have been proposed by the committee. With respect to the part with its recommendations which have no impact on the bill, we have no objection to that part of the report going forward as being an expression of the views of the majority of the committee. Especially do we not have objection in view of the fact that the report already contains the statement that the report represents the views of the majority of the committee, and that the members who support the government are in strong disagreement with the proposed amendments to Bill C-22.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the impact of the Leader of the Government's comment is to lead in the direction of stating that the amendment is not a very serious one because they oppose the whole report. There is no solace in quoting the last sentence. Before us is a report from the committee. Senator Barootes has moved that Part I of the report not be concurred in, and that the Senate, as a whole, concur in the remainder of the report, which includes a recommendation from the Senate to establish a royalty fund.

It is no relief to the Leader of the Government to say that there is a dissenting view.

If Senator Barootes' amendment were accepted, we would be saying that we do not want to amend the bill ourselves, but we strongly and enthusiastically endorse an amendment by the House of Commons to establish a royalty fund. The government is putting itself in a very odd position. I am not trying to press any irregularity against the amendment, because its impact is rather absurd.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think the Leader of the Opposition recognizes the dilemma that the government and the government supporters are in. We are, of course, opposed to the amendments that have been brought forward by the committee. Members of the committee have made it clear in their dissent that they are opposed. As I have said, the important thing is to register our disapproval of the amendments themselves and to attempt to defeat those amendments.

Rather than trying to amend the motion, the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that we should simply vote against the adoption of the report. However, I state quite flatly that I have not been able to ascertain, in consultation with various experts, what the effect would be of voting against the adoption of such a report if that vote were to carry. Would it mean the end of the bill? I do not know the answer to that question.

We are at the report stage, and this is a stage of the legislative process, as I understand it. If honourable senators had decided to vote against the bill on second reading, that would have been the end of the bill. If a majority of honourable senators voted against the report of the committee, would that have the effect of only defeating the amendments proposed, and could we then proceed to third reading, or would it have the effect of defeating the bill? That is the dilemma that the government and the supporters of the bill in its original stage are in. In frequent and repeated consultations with people whom I believe to have some expertise in the matter, I have not been able to get a satisfactory answer to that question. Therefore, we have hit upon the device of an amendment which registers our disapproval of the proposed amendments.

In this vote we will have an opportunity to vote down those amendments. At the same time, we can allow to go forward, as an expression of the opinion of the majority of the committee, with the dissenting votes recorded, the narrative, if you like, that is contained in the rest of the committee report. I do not see any other course to follow, unless somebody can satisfy me as to the procedural problems that I have raised.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the motion that is before us now does not solve the problem raised by Senator Murray. Senator Murray raised this problem with me, and I am not one of the experts. He has said he consulted others and experts, and I do not count myself as an expert. I was not able to answer the question either.

I do not see that this helps much, because if this motion is defeated, then you are right back to square one and have to consider what happens on the motion to adopt the report.

However, I am sure that we can find a way to oblige each other in this matter.

Senator Murray: The position is analogous to the situation that my friends were in last year, and may be in again this year, when, having made their point by amending a bill and sending it to the House of Commons, when the majority in the other place returned the bill, honourable senators accepted the inevitable and accepted the will of the majority in the other place. The supporters of the government and those who share our views—

Senator Frith: I do not know what brought this up. That has nothing to do with what we are doing now.

Senator Murray: I think the positions are analogous. We will have an opportunity to register our views with these amendments and to make our point. That will be sufficient.

Senator Flynn: The point raised by Senator Molgat should be cleared up first. If you refer to Beauchesne's, Fifth Edition, section 652, it says:

[Translation]

652 (1) When a motion is made for concurrence in a committee report . . .

This is what Senator Bonnell has proposed . . .

. . . it is competent for the House to adopt it, reject it, or refer it back to the committee.

So he talked about referring it back to committee, but what we find in Beauchesne is a specific ruling. Here we can do anything. We can adopt a report in whole or in part.

What we are suggesting is not to adopt a part, and then for the rest, the recommendations, the amendments and the remarks, there can also be a vote. Possibly if the second question is put separately for the rest of the report we will be able to say "on division" and that will be the end of it.

The effect of the first question put by the amendment is: Is the bill to be adopted on third reading as originally drafted? In other words, we are against the amendments. If the Senate says no, the question can be put with respect to the rest of the report.

[English]

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I do not have an objection to Senator Flynn's analysis. He is reluctant to vote in favour of that portion of the report which recommends changes by the Senate to the bill. That is clear. However, Senator Barootes is, by more than implication, prepared to accept the remainder of the report, which calls upon the House of Commons to adopt a royalty fund. That is the clear impact of the amendment, and Senator Murray has raised the dilemma faced by supporters of the government. I think the dilemma will become crystal clear when the motion to adopt the report is put.

● (1700)

Supposing Senator Barootes' amendment is defeated? Then the question will have to be put on the main motion. If members on the other side voted against the main motion, and if we agreed with their position and joined with them, Senator Murray then asks what would happen to the bill. I must say that one can make a certain preliminary observation, and that is that the bill would be in serious difficulty. Indeed, the government would have put the bill in jeopardy, because the committee to which the bill has been committed will have been extinguished, and the report bringing the bill forward will be defeated, and the bill will never appear on the order paper unless some other action is taken, such as a motion to reinstate the bill at second reading. I suppose the government could put a motion asking that the bill be reinstated at second reading, and we could start over again.

If the government votes against the adoption of the report, it is making a more savage attack on this bill than we Liberals are making, because we are not putting it in limbo. We are keeping it in circulation. But the government is prepared to put the bill in limbo and leave to us the obligation, as they have done in the past, of keeping government legislation in motion.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not necessarily accept the verdict of the Leader of the Opposition. I had suspected all along that that could be the case, but even if that were not the case, honourable senators opposite have the numbers to make that happen. The dilemma is one that would confront any government in a minority position in this chamber. I candidly admit that while reserving the right to seek a second opinion, if I may.

However, I may say that to avoid that problem and to ensure that the House of Commons has an opportunity to pass judgment on the amendments that are being proposed by a majority of senators, we, of course, will not take any action that would halt the bill in its tracks.

Senator Frith: Not knowingly, anyway.

Senator Murray: To facilitate the bill's progress, we will certainly not vote it down.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Those in favour of the motion in amendment please say "Yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Those opposed to the motion in amendment please say "Nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, let me first say that I was impressed, as I am sure we all were, and as I have always been, with Senator Barootes' concern for the sick. Having known Senator Barootes for a long time, I know that he has spent most of his adult life helping the sick, attending the sick and curing the sick. I might say, speaking for a great many Liberals, a tremendous number of NDP—unfortunately a growing number—and even some Tories, we sincerely wish that he had carried on looking after the sick and left the politics to someone else. Perhaps even the Conservatives would have been better off had he done that. However, I should like to point out that Senator Barootes, good as he is with the sick, and the Conservatives do not have a monopoly on concern for sick people and those who need to use drugs in Canada.

Senator Flynn: Nobody ever said that!

Senator Steuart: No one ever said that, but I was going to raise that, Senator Flynn, in case you were thinking of it. You were looking very pious over there. I also remind Senator Flynn that Bill C-22 will really hit the people the Conservatives are so concerned about, the sick people, because, unfortunately, they are the ones who use drugs on a frequent basis.

I also point out that Canada only accounts for approximately 2 per cent of the world market. So what Canada does or does not do will not substantially affect the amount of research available for new drugs. Having said that, there is nothing to stop the government, as has been suggested by the committee, from increasing the royalties by a large amount so that that money can be spent on research for new drugs here in Canada.

Honourable senators, Senator Cogger said something to the effect that the Liberals decided to work against Bill C-22 from the outset. He implied that they were following along like so many sheep. If that is true, I wonder why he did not say anything about the Conservative senators on the committee. If Liberals are sheep, I suggest that the Tories are Judas goats, leading the poor, the sick, the lame and the blind to the slaughterhouse of high drug prices.

One thing that strikes me as being strange is why the Conservatives are being so generous to mostly large American drug companies. The Americans have lately hit Canadians from one end of Canada to the other—shakes and shingles, pork products, red meat products, fish products, softwood lumber and, now, Saskatchewan uranium. Why are we handing the Americans these gifts before we get down to the nitty-gritty of free trade? I think the Americans can be excused if they think that Canadians are a bunch of patsies for giving away all the chips before the poker game has really begun.

What I will now talk about is the attitude of Saskatchewan, the province that I represent and the province that Senator Barootes represents, to Bill C-22. From the committee meeting held in Saskatchewan, and from correspondence and talks I have had with people from all over that province, I can say who is against Bill C-22. I think most of the consumers, most of the senior citizens, most of the poor—in fact, the vast majority of the people in Saskatchewan—are against Bill C-22. But who is in favour of it, besides Senator Barootes? Premier Devine and the Saskatchewan Conservative government are in favour of Bill C-22. They did not take an opportunity to appear before the committee, but that is not new. If they are against Bill C-22 and the high drug prices for the Saskatchewan people, that has been a well kept secret. They are not against it, or if they are they are not saying anything. I say that because Premier Devine and the Conservative government of Saskatchewan never say anything against Brian Mulroney and the Conservative government in Ottawa. For some reason they are afraid that if they do they will sell their farmers out. The Saskatchewan farmers are down the drain already. I do not know who sold them out, but they are certainly not being rescued by the government in Ottawa.

I suggest to Premier Devine—and I do not think he will take the suggestion—that if he does not soon speak out for the people of Saskatchewan he will go down the drain right along with the federal Conservatives and Brian Mulroney as soon as the people of Saskatchewan get a chance to go to the polls, which will be in a very short time.

Senator Flynn: You may go down the drain.

Senator Steuart: No, I cannot go down the drain; I have what is considered to be an almost life-time contract.

● (1710)

For your information, Senator Flynn, I am here until age 75 or death, whichever comes first! Sometimes I think it will be a close call!

Senator Flynn: What about Premier Bourassa?

Senator Steuart: Senator Barootes challenged the Liberal senators of Quebec to remember their region and speak out for their region. Well, I could turn the tables around. Why is he not speaking out for his region?

Senator Olson: Yes.

Senator Steuart: If there was ever an issue that will hit the people of Saskatchewan—the sick and poor people—it is this increase in drug prices. It is a strange thing: they have already been hit with an increase in drug prices. The government that Senator Barootes supports in Saskatchewan has already changed the drug plan, starting July 1. It means that all of the people of Saskatchewan will be hit with substantially higher drug costs. On top of that, they will be hit with Bill C-22—another increase in drug prices.

Senator Guay: Shame!

Senator Steuart: They could not afford it at any time, but with the condition that the economy of Saskatchewan is in, they certainly can ill afford it at this time.

This proposal brought forward by the committee will not roll back all of the price increases, but it certainly will have a great effect. Again, I challenge the Conservative senators from western Canada and from Saskatchewan to remember the region they come from and why they are sent here. It is to represent their region. I challenge them to get up and speak out against this unwarranted increase in drug prices.

We are now told by the drug companies—most of them are American; and I am not against that—that they will do great things for Canada.

An Hon. Senator: Baloney!

Senator Steuart: They will spend tremendous amounts of money on research; they will produce hundreds of new jobs in Canada. Not, I might point out, in Saskatchewan—but then we always feed the cow and someone else always gets the milk.

I would suggest to the maritimes that they will not feed it and they will not get the milk, but they will get something—it depends on which way the cow is facing.

However, why did these drug companies not do all of these wonderful things years ago? That was one of the reasons the Liberal government, ten or fifteen years ago, took away their free ride—their patent protection—on the people of Canada, because they were not spending enough and they were not doing what was right for Canada. So the Liberal Government of Canada struck out for Canadian people.

Senator Guay: Right.

Senator Steuart: Someone said that Judy Erola said that the Liberal government was thinking of changing it. I wonder when she changed her mind. It certainly was not when she was a member of the Liberal government.

Senator Guay: The job!

Senator Steuart: It may have been lately. I think I know why, but I will not mention it.

Senator Barootes also mentioned that great research had taken place in Canada. Doctors Best and Banting are great Canadian heroes, and so they should be! They were not working for any international drug company, they were Canadians who developed this research in Canada—and I suggest without any help from the multinational drug companies. I also suggest that even if this amendment and report is accepted by the Government of Canada—and I do not think that it will be—it does not mean that they have to shut the door on increased research in Canada. They have the right, and we are suggesting that they raise the royalties and then send the message to the drug companies that the increase in these royalties shall be spent on research and shall be spent in Canada.

Finally, I want to come back once again to why we are giving this away to the Americans on the eve of free trade. I find it totally unbelievable, just as I find it unbelievable that we have been hit unfairly by the Americans with potash; we have been hit by the Americans with lumber—and we deal in lumber—unfairly; and we will now be hit unfairly by the Americans through our uranium; we have been hit by the Americans through our red meat products. Why in the name of God do we lie down and say, “Okay, we will let them ride roughshod over Saskatchewaners and Canadian consumers in the matter of drug prices,” when we will not get back anything in return? What kind of bargaining is that? I think that Bill C-22 is a bad bill.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: The government whines about spending $300,000 to go across Canada and hear what the Canadian people think. For God's sake, Bill C-22 will take hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars out of the pockets of sick Canadians because of higher drug prices in Canada. What is $300,000? If that is the worst $300,000 that this Senate ever spends or this government ever spends—hell, this government spills that much on the way to the bank every day—it is still well spent.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: I think that we should be proud of what we have done in this Senate. I hope that the senators, and then the House of Commons, support this recommendation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Does anyone else wish to speak?

Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cottreau, that this report be now adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say “Yea”?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion please say “Nay”?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the “yeas” have it.

Senator Roblin: On division.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: On division.

Motion agreed to and report adopted, on division.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Doody: At the next sitting.

Some Hon. Senators: Now.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the bill be read the third time now?

Senator Doody: At the next sitting, Your Honour.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill, as amended, placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE
HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, since it is getting late and given the fact that the Committee on Fisheries will be meeting very shortly, I will postpone my remarks, probably until tomorrow.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON BILL C-22

WEDNESDAY, August 12, 1987

The Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, (formerly entitled the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of Bill C-22) has the honour to present its

SEVENTH REPORT

The Committee, to which was referred back its Sixth Report on Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, has, in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, 11th August, 1987, completed its examination and now reports again on Bill C-22 as follows:

The Committee wishes to propose amendments to Bill C-22 in accordance with recommendations of The Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry (the "Eastman Report"). Because of procedural questions raised in the Senate, this Report presents the Committee's proposed amendments in two parts.

The first Part consists of amendments proposed to the Senate for adoption.

The second Part consists of amendments to be recommended to the House of Commons for adoption.

In addition, the Report contains observations, and recommendations on general patent law amendments.

PART I

AMENDMENTS

EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. Page 10, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 21 to 23 and substitute the following:

"41.1 In sections 41.11 to 41.15,"

- (b) Strike out lines 29 to 34.

- (c) Strike out lines 35 to 42.

The special definition of "patentee" in the Bill, which includes voluntary licensees, in order to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the "Board") is deleted.

This amendment would delete the requirement that a notice of compliance be considered to be first issued only in respect of a medicine that is an original and distinct chemical composition and not for an obvious chemical equivalent of a medicine for which a notice of compliance (NOC) has been previously issued. The deletion of subsection 41.1(2) removes an anomaly found in Bill C-22 that would, in essence, allow patents for certain medicines (that is, obvious chemical equivalents to medicines for which NOCs have been previously issued) to have unlimited protection against the operation of compulsory licences to import for their entire patent term.

2. Page 11, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 12 and 13 and substitute the following:

"been used; or"

- (b) Strike out lines 17 and 18 and substitute the following:

"duction of medicine."

3. Pages 11 and 12, clause 15: Strike out lines 19 to 49 on page 11, and lines 1 and 2 on page 12 and substitute the following:

"(2) The prohibition under subsection (1) expires in respect of a medicine four years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine."

4. Page 12, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 8 to 14 and substitute the following:

"(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of any licence pertaining to a medicine where on the date of the coming into force of this section, a notice of compliance has been issued in respect of such medicine."

- (b) Strike out line 45 and substitute the following:

"medicine is issued after the coming into force of this section, no"

5. Pages 13 to 26, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out lines 8 and 9 on page 13 and substitute the following:

"until the expiration of four years after the date"

- (b) Strike out line 15 on page 13 and all lines from line 16 on page 13 to line 11 on page 26 and substitute the following:

"that medicine.

41.15 No action or proceeding for any"

A four year period of exclusivity with respect to statutory licences to import will apply both for medicines consumed in Canada and exported. The Eastman Report did not propose separate treatment for exclusivity in relation to the domestic and export markets.

With this amendment a four-year period of exclusivity running from the issuance of the first notice of compliance would be guaranteed to patent-holding firms. No distinction is made between the period of exclusivity guaranteed against licences to import or to manufacture.

The new "regime" for importation of medicines would come into effect when these sections are proclaimed into law, but will not apply to drugs for which an NOC has issued by that date.

This amendment and amendment 6(a) provide that the four year restriction on manufacturing will apply only where the first NOC for a medicine is issued after the proclamation date. Where an NOC issues prior to that date, statutory licensees will be subject to the old regime.

This amendment parallels amendments 2 and 4(b).

These amendments would delete all references to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the "Board") from the Bill.

They would also delete proposed new section 41.16 which would grant longer periods of market exclusivity to drugs invented and developed in Canada. With these amendments all patented medicines under the new regime would have a four-year period of market exclusivity.

6. Page 33, clause 28: Strike out line 15 and substitute the following:

"arising under any of sections 41.1 to 41.15 of"

7. Pages 33 and 34, clause 30:

- (a) Strike out line 34 on page 33 and substitute the following:

"30. Schedule II to the Access to Infor-"

- (b) Strike out lines 38 to 43 on page 33 and lines 1 and 2 on page 34.

8. Page 34, clause 31: Strike out the heading immediately preceding line 3 and lines 3 to 29.

These amendments are consequential on the amendments to clause 15. They delete subsections (2) and (3), referring to the Board and re-number the remaining provision.

This amendment would delete clause 31 of the Bill. Clause 31 provides for the payment of $25 million annually to the provinces for each of the fiscal years commencing April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991. It is consequential on the amendments to clause 15, which relieve existing pipeline drugs from the retroactive imposition of exclusivity.

9. Page 34, clause 32: Strike out line 30 and substitute the following:

"31.(1) Notwithstanding anything in sec-"

This amendment renumbers clause 32 of the Bill.

10. Page 35, clause 33:

- (a) Strike out lines 3 to 8 and substitute the following:

"32.(1) The definition "priority date" in section 2 of the Patent Act, as enacted by subsection 1(2) of this Act, sections 2, 5, 7 to 13 and 16 to 25 and subsection 30(1) of this Act, or any of those sections or subsections, shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation."

This amendment would allow for greater flexibility in proclaiming into force the clauses of Bill C-22 that amend the general patent law.

- (b) Strike out line 9 and substitute the following:

"(2) Sections 41.1 to 41.15 of the Patent "

- (c) Strike out lines 12 and 13 and substitute the following:

"(3) of this Act or either of those subsections shall come into"

This amendment accommodates the renumbering of sections.

PART II

RECOMMENDED AMENDMENTS FOR ADOPTION BY THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

AMENDMENTS

EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. Page 10, new clause 14.1: Add, immediately after line 17, the following:

"14.1 Subsection 41(4) of the Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(4) Where, in the case of any patent for an invention intended or capable of being used for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine, an application is made by any person for a licence to do one or more of the following things as specified in the application, namely:

(a) where the invention is a process, to use the invention for the preparation or production of medicine, import any medicine in the preparation or production of which the invention has been used or sell any medicine in the preparation or production of which the invention has been used, or

(b) where the invention is other than a process, to import, make, use or sell the invention for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine,

the Commissioner shall grant to the applicant a licence to do the things specified in the application except such, if any, of those things in respect of which he sees good reason not to grant such a licence; and shall settle the terms of the licence and fix the amount of royalty payable to the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund."

2. Page 10, clause 15:

- (a) Strike out line 21 and substitute the following:

"41.1 In subsection 41(4) and sections 41.11 to 41.16,"

- (b) Add, immediately after line 28, the following:

" "participating patentee" means a patentee for whom a royalty has been paid into the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund by a licensee in respect of a licence granted under subsection 41(4);

"Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund" means the fund established pursuant to section 41.16;

Subsection 41(4) of the Patent Act currently requires the Commissioner of Patents to consider giving due reward for the research leading to the invention of a particular medicine when establishing the amount of the royalty to be paid pursuant to a compulsory licence. This amendment would delete this requirement and allow the Commissioner to fix a royalty payable to the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund.

These definitions refer to expressions used in the new section 41.16 which would establish a Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund as recommended by The Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry (the Eastman Report).

"research and development intensity" means the ratio of research and development expenditures incurred in Canada by a participating patentee in respect of prescription-type medicines to the total sales for consumption in Canada of prescription-type medicines by such patentee;

"royalty" in respect of a licence granted under subsection 41(4) is the royalty fixed and determined by the Commissioner from time to time; for the purposes of fixing and determining such royalty the Commissioner shall apply the following formula:

(a) the royalty shall be the product of the royalty rate multiplied by the net price of sales of prescription-type medicines sold for consumption in Canada by a licensee pursuant to a licence granted under subsection 41(4), at arm's length or at the equivalent to arm's length;

(b) the royalty rate is to consist of a first portion of 0.04 plus a second portion, being the ratio of the total expenditures of the world pharmaceutical industry on research and development for prescription-type medicines,

to the total annual revenues of such industry from sales of such prescription-type medicines throughout the world."

3. Page 26, clause 15: Add, immediately after line 16, the following:

"41.16(1) The Commissioner shall establish a Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund to be composed of royalty payments made in respect of any licence granted under subsection 41(4) after the coming into force of this section.

(2) Any royalty in respect of a licence granted under subsection 41(4) after the coming into force of this section shall be paid into the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund at such time or times and in the manner determined by the Commissioner.

(3) The Commissioner shall at such time, to such extent and in the manner that he deems appropriate, make a distribution from the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund to participating patentees in respect of a period designated by the Commissioner.

Prescription-type drugs refer to drugs of a type that would be sold under prescription in Canada but might not require a prescription elsewhere.

This royalty would determine both the size of the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund and the amount licensees must pay with respect to sales under licences granted under subsection 41(4).

The qualification on sales "for consumption in Canada" follows the Eastman Report recommendations that no royalties be payable by generic companies on account of export sales.

The first portion (0.04) is to reflect the value to compulsory licensees of current promotion expenditures of patent-holding firms. This 4% is not based on the same criteria as the 4% royalty currently paid by licensees.

The second portion would be set at 10% at the present time, on the basis of existing conditions in the world pharmaceutical industry. This portion would vary according to the ratio of world research and development expenditures to world sales of prescription medicines.

This amendment establishes the rules under which payments would be made from the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund to participating patentees. The Commissioner of Patents would establish designated periods during which payments made into this fund are disbursed out of the fund to participating patentees.

Disbursements from the fund for the relevant period would exhaust the total of all royalty payments into the fund for the period, including interest earned on those payments. Every participating patentee would be entitled to some proportion of the fund's monies. This proportion would be determined by the product of two factors.

(4) The amount to which each participating patentee is entitled under subsection (3) shall be the product obtained by multiplying the two factors set out in subsections (5) and (6), further multiplied by the sum of the total amounts paid into the Pharmaceutical Royalty Fund over the designated period and any accrued interest in respect of royalties to be disbursed from the fund.

(5) The first factor in the calculation described in subsection (4) is the ratio of

(a) the total of the sales for consumption in Canada made by all licensees of the participating patentee in respect of licences granted under subsection 41(4), during the designated period

to

(b) the total of all such sales in respect of all participating patentees during such designated period;

(6) The second factor in the calculation described in subsection (4) is the ratio of

(a) the participating patentee's research and development intensity during the designated period, plus 0.04

to

(b) the average research and development intensity of all participating patentees during such designated period, plus 0.04.

(7) The Governor in Council may make regulations defining, for the purposes of this section and section 41.1, the expression "research and development".

4. Page 33, clause 28: Strike out line 15 and substitute the following:

"arising under any of sections 41.1 to 41.16 of"

5. Page 35, clause 33: Strike out line 9 and substitute the following:

"(2) Sections 41.1 to 41.16 of the Patent"

The first factor is the total of all sales of compulsorily licensed drugs based on that patentee's patented drugs divided by the sum of all sales of compulsorily licensed drugs in Canada. Export sales are not included in this factor. This represents the patentee's nominal share of royalties that would normally accrue to him.

The second factor is calculated as the sum of 0.04 and the research intensity of the participating patentee, divided by the sum of 0.04 and the research intensity of all participating patentees in Canada. This factor takes into account a participating patentee's research expenditures.

Both factors compare the circumstances of an individual patentee to the industry. In factor two, the research intensity of the patentee is compared to the industry norm. In factor one, the amount of sales of compulsorily licensed drugs attributed to the patentee's patents is compared to the total sales of compulsorily licensed drugs. A firm's share of the fund increases as its research intensity increases in relation to the industry norm.

This amendment is consequential on the amendments to clause 15. It changes the numbers of the sections to which reference is made.

This amendment accommodates the renumbering of sections.

If the recommendations of Part II are adopted by the House of Commons, certain sections and cross references to those sections are to be renumbered accordingly.

OBSERVATIONS

The amendments set out in this report would, among other things, remove all references to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the "Board") from Bill C-22. This is done because the Board is not a part of the compulsory licensing and royalty regime being proposed in this report.

The Committee does feel, however, that it is appropriate to note that some concerns were expressed by witnesses respecting the constitutional authority of Parliament to vest the Board with the power to direct that excessive drug prices be reduced. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs responded to these concerns with evidence supporting the constitutional validity of the Board's powers.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON GENERAL PATENT LAW AMENDMENTS

Part of Bill C-22 is also directed to general amendments to the patent law. These amendments deal with revisions to the novelty requirements, procedures for granting patents, the term of protection and some changes to the effects of patents, after they are granted.

These amendments advance many desirable changes. Among these changes are the dating of patents from filing, with early publication of applications; the adoption of more stringent novelty requirements, with a special grace period for disclosures by inventors; and the introduction of the first-inventor-to-file system. The Bill also provides for the re-examination of patents before the Patent Office, and for the deletion of obsolete marking requirements and caveats.

These and other features advance the patent law towards becoming a more modern piece of legislation, and more in line with provisions in other industrialized countries.

However, the Committee is concerned that a considerable number of provisions in the law may have serious flaws. This is due to inadequacies of drafting and to deficiencies in the basic structure of the provisions themselves.

The novelty provisions fail to make an explicit requirement that applications be more than mere "obvious" variants on prior technology. The date for testing "obviousness" is not specified. This is a point that should be dealt with explicitly.

The novelty provisions appear also to be drafted so that applicants may file two, or more, applications for the same invention, and then theoretically obtain several patents for the same invention. The Commissioner may endeavour to prevent this from occurring, but the statutory language appears to permit it.

The provision to continue section 29 of the present Act so as to "deem" applications to have a filing date in Canada that dates back to a foreign priority date appears to have especially peculiar results. Foreign applicants claiming priority are not placed under the new regime by the Transition Provisions until up to one year later than Canadian applicants. The grace period may afford a one year longer period of protection to applicants filing on the basis of a priority claim than to Canadian applicants.

The Bill contains a "domestic refiling" procedure for Canadians which has the laudable objective of placing applications filed directly in Canada, on an equal footing with applications filed from abroad with a claim of priority. But as drafted, Canadians must give up their corresponding right to claim priority abroad, if they wish to benefit from the domestic refiling procedure. Canadians should have the full flexibility to file applications in Canada or abroad as freely as foreigners.

This domestic refiling section requires careful reconsideration as to its actual effects, and likely will require, along with many other provisions, subsequent amendment.

Submissions were made that portions of Canada's present law violate the Paris Convention, and that insufficient provisions are incorporated to allow Canada to adhere to the latest text of this treaty. These submissions merit further consideration.

The patent profession in a variety of submissions has raised a list of suggestions and concerns about the matters not dealt with in the Bill. These include requests that:

- an explicit limitation period be stated, to apply equally across Canada.
- provision be made to correct patents when some inventors have been improperly named, or omitted.

- patent claims be protected from being invalidated on the mere grounds that not all co-inventors participated in conceiving each claim.
- section 36 of the Act be amended so that the claims do not have to be recited twice, both in the body of the disclosure and at the end of the document.
- the rights of joint inventors to independently use, licence or sell their interests in a patent be defined.
- the intervening rights provision (section 58) be revised to define clearly the scope of immunity, and to limit it to bona fide cases of independent acquisition of the invention.
- provisions be introduced to extend a patentee's rights to control persons who contribute to infringement.

Objections were also made that:

- the Act provides no explicit criteria for determining the manner of calculating a patentee's damages.
- the Act lacks any provisions to apply where a patentee threatens infringement, without suing, and causes a business to suffer cancelled orders.
- the Act makes no provision for the effects of deferred examination on Canadians who wish to seek a licence to manufacture, under the present section 67, after three years from the grant of a patent. This period of delay should now date from filing.
- the transition provision for the 1935 revision (now section 80) needs to be repealed, as it extends to "any provision in force from time to time..."

All of these items listed deal with matters not referred to in the Bill. They merit consideration, and in many cases, incorporation into a revised patent statute for Canada.

The Committee has not had the resources to deal with all of these deficiencies by proposing amendments. Faced with the alternatives of not passing a large number of clauses dealing with general patent law amendments, or approving them with reservations, the Committee has decided to adopt the latter course. This is because the general patent law amendments may be relevant, to some extent, to the drug patent amendments, and the Committee does not wish to see a delay in the implementation of its recommendations in this regard.

Accordingly, in order to enable only those essential portions of the general patent law amendments to be proclaimed into force as may be deemed fit, a revision to the proclamation provisions contained in clause 33 of the Bill has been proposed as set out above.

It is hoped that the government will proclaim only those portions of the general patent law amendments that are necessary to ensure the early implementation of the other provisions of the Act. Then, it is the recommendation of the Committee that the government then take action to consult with the public and with practitioners in this field, in order to prepare amending legislation to deal with the concerns expressed in this part of the report.

Ultimately, the Committee would wish to see a patent law for Canada designed to encourage both invention and innovation, in a manner that would best serve not only inventors but all Canadians.

DISSENTING OPINION

This report represents the views of a majority of the Committee. The members who support the Government are in strong disagreement with the proposed amendments to Bill C-22.

Respectfully submitted,

THE SENATE

Thursday, August 13, 1987

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SENATORS AUTHORIZED TO ACT ON BEHALF OF COMMITTEE DURING ADJOURNMENTS OR RECESSES AND BETWEEN SESSIONS AND PARLIAMENTS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), moved;

That during any adjournments or recesses of Parliament, or any period between sessions of Parliament or between Parliaments, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or a senator named by him from time to time, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or a senator named by him from time to time, and a senator nominated by the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Internal Economy Committee in matters requiring action pertaining to the administration of the Senate, subject to report to the said committee upon resumption of its sittings.

He said: Honourable senators, this motion consolidates some diverse motions or orders that the house has with reference to what the committee or its representatives can do between sessions of Parliament, between Parliaments and during adjournments.

In the Internal Economy Committee today we brought forward the concept of uniting them all into one so that we do not have to continue passing them from time to time.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, in that motion we mention urgent matters to be considered by that committee.

Senator Frith: Yes, that is the reason for the word "requiring".

Motion agreed to.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND, AS AMENDED—THIRD READING

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, I move third reading of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relations thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, that this bill, as amended, be now read the third time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, since the speech I made on May 13 in this house, I travelled to our various provincial capitals with the members of the Special Committee, I listened to witnesses in Ottawa and I took part in the debate on the five different options that were finally submitted to us on July 28 this year. Three months later, again on the thirteenth—an ominous figure—I now have the privilege of recounting this experience.

It will come as no surprise to you that with my Conservative colleagues on the committee, I object to the Special Committee's sixth and seventh reports tabled by the Liberal majority in this chamber.

The information given to the media, to the effect that 90 per cent of the testimony was against the bill, was incorrect. According to my own figures, this should be closer to 60 or 65 per cent. Committee members spent over 100 hours examining the Patent Act and especially the part dealing specifically with the pharmaceutical industry.

Being unable to grasp all the intricacies and nuances of an extremely complex legal text, witnesses either agreed or disagreed with the various interpretations of this document offered by the media. Differences in statistics, extrapolations, comparisons, hypotheses, opinions, perceptions and ideologies were such that with a certain amount of mental gymnastics, it was possible to "genuinely" reach conclusions that were diametrically opposed.

I will mention briefly some of the categorical but nevertheless hypothetical conclusions that struck me most.

First, the fact that the government is prepared to transfer $100 million to the provinces over four years was for many senators and witnesses proof absolute that they expected a price increase. In fact, these payments are to compensate for the fact that a small number of generic drugs that would otherwise have been put on the market during the initial four years of transition will not be available.

Second categorical conclusion: Since the innovative pharmaceutical companies are multinational, they will automatically have a monopoly during seven to ten years, when they can accumulate "exorbitant" profits.

Third comment, since the drug prices review board is an instrument of the government, it will not be effective and in any case will not have sufficient powers to restrain the ferocious appetite of these multinational companies, a comment that prejudges these companies.

Fourth: Since no commitment for investment and employment is required of innovative companies in the act, such commitments will not be met because, again, these are multinationals.

Fifth, as in the past, these companies will continue to do fundamental research in their country of origin and the run-of-the-mill clinical research in this country.

Finally, investments and jobs will be concentrated in the central provinces which will be the main beneficiaries, while the other provinces will foot the bill for more expensive drugs.

These were the major objections raised.

All these arguments had already been made by similar organizations and federations during the hearings of the Commons committee and the debates in the other place. The special committee travelled to 10 provincial capitals only to hear the same arguments for or against the bill from branches of national groups and from various local organizations. For myself, what I most enjoyed was to get to know the committee members better and naively hope to convert some of them.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Such as the chairman.

Senator David: Thanks to the 14 weeks of pharmacological immersion I have gone through since making my first speech on this bill, I can now make a few additional comments.

Many witnesses stated that the legislation would benefit only the central provinces of Quebec and Ontario, where the investments and the new jobs would be. Inasmuch as this is partly true, I know for a fact that any legislation which stimulates the economy of one or several provinces benefits the entire Canadian economy which is only the sum of all provincial economies.

Time and again, the state of the pharmaceutical industry in 1969 was compared to its situation in 1987. At that time, drug costs in Canada were among the highest in the world and, apparently, they are now among the lowest. The only reason for this change is the competition of generic products. As evidence, the prices of drugs in the United States are compared with the prices of the same drugs in Canada. In the same breath, these people state that, except for the United States and South Africa, all industrialized countries have a price control agency which supports reasonable prices for drugs.

I think that it is important to recall that the United States also has a successful generic product industry, which takes away some of the credibility of this argument. We should perhaps look for other explanations, and especially compare the Canadian and American health systems. As the bill, without any amendment, would establish a prices review board with the ability to withdraw one or two patents from a company which has failed to comply with an order, Canada would thus have the desired control mechanism.

According to some critics, the potential for pharmacological research in Canada in 1987 would not be more favourable than in 1969. Some people have suggested that innovating companies would continue to carry out their fundamental research in their country of origin and to carry out clinical research in Canada, only after a notice of compliance issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare. This pessimistic statement reflects what I would describe as a pathological suspicion as far as multinationals are concerned and an inaccurate perception of the challenge offered to our Canadian scientists.

Clinical research is not, as many witnesses seem to believe, a lack-lustre branch of research or a kind of pseudo-research. This is not true. Clinical research must evaluate the effectiveness of a drug, verify its dosage and note all side effects. In view of the complex action of the new drugs and the spectre of the increasing number of legal proceedings, such research requires a sufficient number of patients to satisfy statistical criteria on the one hand, and to provide the necessary caution on the other.

Throughout Canada, our hospital departments provide much better structured human and technological resources than in 1969. With more substantial investments, the Canadian hospital system can, in my opinion, play a leadership role which will benefit the pharmaceutical industry, our clinical scientists and especially the sick.

It is an admitted fact that fundamental research is usually carried out in specialized laboratories and university pharmacological laboratories. Scientists are especially dependent on the investments of innovating companies to show their dynamism and ability. Universities are well aware that they will be judged on their productivity. They are willing to take up the challenges offered. This competition is not restricted only to the two central provinces as it relies on the innovative talent, the organization and the leadership of any university department, wherever it is located in Canada.

This explains the enthusiasm and the hope of academics who, in all the provinces we visited, without exception, expressed their support for the bill.

Many witnesses mentioned the figure of 2 per cent, which represents the share of the Canadian market in drug sales throughout the world. In this case, they say, how can our country hope to develop eventually a dynamic, original and profitable pharmaceutical industry?

Let me make two remarks which might illustrate the perversity of statistics!

Assuming that all inhabitants on this planet had as ready access to drugs as Canadians do, the figure of 2 per cent would be very high indeed: since the number of people on earth has just reached the 5-billion mark, China would be entitled to 20 per cent, the United States to 5 per cent, and Canada to a mere 0.5 per cent! In this context the 2 per cent figure simply but eloquently illustrates the fact that Canadians are privileged when compared with a number of less favoured nations.

Using this kind of subtle reasoning one might conclude that Switzerland, Belgium, Sweden and Holland would have no interest whatsoever in maintaining on their soil the head offices of major multinational pharmaceutical industries since their local sales figures are lower than our own figures and their population is smaller than ours.

To counter these perhaps debatable arguments I maintain that, with the non-amended version of Bill C-22, Canada is given an opportunity to develop a strong pharmaceutical sector which might eventually make a breakthrough on the international market. The innovating pharmaceutical industry is one of high technology. I fail to understand why anyone would turn thumbs down on such a scientific and economic opportunity.

There is another percentage—very significant, I think, and indeed I pointed this out last May 13—which apparently has failed to impress witnesses and senators alike. I am referring to the 5 per cent which represents the cost of drugs in total expenditures for health care in Canada. I would suggest that this cost of 5 per cent is the most profitable in the whole care system. By itself it can prevent sickness through vaccines, for example, cure pathologies which we all know used to cost a fortune—acute articular rheumatism, stomach ulcers, tuberculosis, and practically all bacterial infections—avoid long and expensive hospital stays for an untold number of patients suffering from such behavioural afflictions as nervous depressions. I maintain that any illness that can be cured by drugs is an absolute economic plus for society. Not relative, absolute. Any drug which enables an individual to function normally is an economic contribution which spares expenses far in excess of medication costs. All acute, subacute and chronic illnesses for which there is no known curative drugs contribute largely to the 95 per cent of the other health expenditures about which little has been said.

Finally, one must continually emphasize the checks provided in Bill C-22 to avoid eventual abuses. They are very well known and I will go over them briefly.

An exclusive patent is granted for a maximum of ten years. I would recall that all other countries which are our industrialized trade partners have set this exclusivity period at 17 years. In other words, this is a compromise which has been accepted by the drug industry.

This means a seven-year gain for generic companies as compared to all other similar markets.

A price review board has been established and will be chaired by the same Dr. Harry Eastman who has the confidence of senators opposite, since he is proposing the amendments in this legislation. He is the same economist with an established reputation who will chair that review board.

The review board must submit a yearly report, a copy of which is sent to each house of Parliament.

In four years' time, the government will review the impact of the legislation and can amend it. In ten years' time, Parliament must make a comprehensive review. During that period, all generic drugs now on the market are not affected and will continue to be offered.

I believe it is very important that these facts be put on record because they show the degree of caution used by this government in designing the bill in order to stimulate original production by innovating companies on the one hand, without abolishing imitative competition from generic companies on the other hand. That exercise imbalance shows this government's will to develop a high technology industry, which I support. Its humanist concern is to avoid any excessive increase in the cost of drugs for the people, which I support.

The operational keystone of that policy is the Drug Price Review Board.

It is the hope of all members of the Special Committee that the board be provided with the largest possible powers of investigation, action and enforcement. But members are divided on the matter of credibility of such a review board. On the assumption that everything has been going well since 1969, why change the rules and risk a price increase? Or then, which was the solution accepted by Liberal committee members, why not accept the Eastman report recommendations? I will come back to this later.

The promises made by innovating companies, you are aware of them: $1.4 billion over 10 years, the creation of 3,000 jobs, increasing to 10 per cent of their sales figure the percentage of research and development.

Those are the three extremely concrete commitments that led me to have a very favourable view of Bill C-22.

On May 13, I attempted to show the remarkable progress made by medicine over these last four decades. It seems I attempted in vain to illustrate the importance of drugs.

Discoveries on any illness are always the product of research wherever done, whether in our universities, our hospitals, or our laboratories. And I see no reason why Canada cannot join the other industrialized nations in that effort that is beneficial to our people and also the people in the Third World.

University departments emphasized their concern and difficulty in finding adequate resources to initiate new projects and even to continue existing ones. The hope of receiving the grants promised by the industry is most important to them if they are to keep their professors, prevent some of them from leaving, hire younger ones and show the scientific worth and vigor of their teaching and research personnel. The same reaction was found in university hospitals where clinical medical professors will have more resources to prepare evaluation reports.

All medical professors—I was one for a great many years—who get involved in research, whether in a university or hospital, develop a scientific attitude which improves the quality of care and of which the most direct beneficiaries are the sick in their area.

The debate dealt essentially with the drug prices futurology. On the basis of the 1960's experience, of comparisons between Canada and our neighbour to the south, of a hostile philosophy towards the multinationals which nevertheless are responsible for the progress of the pharmaceutical industry, they have elaborated an apocalyptic scenario of skyrocketing drug prices.

Without questioning the good faith of my Liberal colleagues, whose intuitions remain nevertheless supported, I must confess that I am tempted to believe also in the good faith of the innovative pharmaceutical industry and its commitments; in the good faith of Dr. Harry Eastman who has accepted to chair the board provided for in Bill C-22; in the good faith of a government which has surrounded its bill with a great many precautionary measures, and in the good faith of the medical profession whose compassion for the sick still remains an essential element of its practice.

I understand that there is in this house 24 seats for Quebec Senators which are occupied by 14 Liberal Senators, eight Conservative and one Independent. There is also one seat vacant. When I visited Quebec, I heard various testimonies and, except maybe for two, all were favourable to Bill C-22. We know that on three different occasions, Quebec's National Assembly has adopted unanimous resolutions calling on the federal government to amend the Patent Act. We have received a request from the City of Montreal and most urban communities urging us to accept Bill C-22. We have a request from the Chamber of Commerce in Montreal. While the committee was sitting, Minister Daniel Johnson, on behalf of the current Quebec provincial government, urgently asked the federal government to adopt this bill.

Well, if my figures are right, all these people represent the six million Quebec inhabitants. Under these circumstances, I feel it would be difficult and improper for a Senator from Quebec to go against the best interests of his province.

The Eastman amendments which were proposed or recommended by the Liberal majority within this committee would change the very essence of Bill C-22 and are, in my opinion, totally unacceptable. For in the final analysis, we would be presented with an entirely new piece of legislation.

The difference between the ten-year maximum protection of the patent provided for in Bill C-22 and that of four years suggested in the amendments is enormous. It is still more ridiculous if we compare it with the 17 years of exclusive rights granted by all the industrialized nations with which our country is doing business. Because of this, our country would maintain its image of hostility towards the innovative pharmaceutical industry, and its intellectual property, and this industry would continue to make its research and development investment elsewhere. The refusal of the negotiated and accepted compromise in Bill C-22 may result in a rupture which might definitely cause our country to lose the opportunity to develop a high technology industry, a rupture which might prove to be final. The fallout of the proposed retreat would have devastating effects on our scientific, university, hospital and medical environments. We will have neither understood nor heeded the voice of these enlightened interests as well as that of the medical associations who are just as concerned with public health issues as we are as parliamentarians. This amendment, which reduces from 10 to four years the protection afforded to intellectual property brings us back in fact to the status quo since it is a fact in practice that it takes at least four or five years for a manufacturer of generic drugs to copy a new product.

With regard to the 14 per cent royalty and the establishment of a common fund, this proposed amendment would force generic drug manufacturers to pay most of their 14 per cent royalties into a common fund administered by a government body which would distribute the proceeds according to some complicated formula. I do not know if it takes a genius to understand it, but I must say that I have yet to do so. Innovative firms would be judged on the basis of "intensity" of research in Canada, yet another criterion which would be extremely difficult to evaluate.

Personally, I must say that the purported incentive effects of such a proposal leave me quite skeptical.

In my mind, any royalty on a patent should rightly go to the patentee and in the absence of any negotiated agreement between innovative firms on the one hand and the government on the other, there is a very good chance that this recommendation will lead to court battles and, at any rate, be conducive to a very unfavorable investment climate.

I find that to remove the Patented Medicine Price Review Board is equivalent to taking the substance out of Bill C-22. The gap between the careful balance built into the legislation by the government and the proposed amendments is so great that it is totally unacceptable. I am also convinced that the Canadian population will foot the bill for the following reasons:

First, to make up for additional royalty payments which are to rise from 4 to 14 per cent, generic drug manufacturers will have to increase their prices by 10 per cent.

Second, to compensate for the loss of six years of exclusivity, innovative companies will have no choice but to raise their prices in order to make some profits in four years instead of ten. We know that 93 per cent of prescriptions and 70 per cent of the general market are for drugs manufactured by innovative companies.

Third, without a price review board, there will be no organization able to act.

Fourth, provinces will lose the 25 million compensation payment promised for the next four years.

Fifth, rejection of the agreements which are the basis of Bill C-22 will mean that innovative companies will be freed from their commitment to invest $1.4 billion, create 3,000 jobs and put 10 per cent of their sales into research and development.

For all these reasons I do not hesitate to oppose the amendments and amendment proposals recommended by the committee.

To conclude, for me, the last three months have been an extremely interesting parliamentary experience on the one hand, and a very disappointing one on the other. Interesting because it allowed me to participate actively in hearings and proceedings directly connected to medicine and health, an area where I spent some 40 years of my life; disappointing because fear of a possible price increase of drugs was practically the only topic of our discussions.

The amendments proposed or suggested, according to me, in no way improve the present situation. They go against the will of the majority of the elected representatives of our Parliament and against the will of two successive governments in Québec.

They remove the subsidies to faculties, researchers, scientists and physicians involved in research needed to promote a strong and aggressive Canadian pharmacology. They jeopardize the future of our economy which must accept the challenges of modern technology. The rejection of such an opportunity is a mistake perpetuating that of 1969 which runs counter to the development of medicine and the improvement of health care as I view them.

However, I have no illusions. All medical leaders who have testified before the committee approved the bill. They were not heard and I suppose I will not be heard either. Yet, we are experts whose sole objective is to relieve and cure those who are ill. Those are the experts whom you will eventually trust to take care of you. That day, you will listen to their therapeutic advice. Whether the pill is generic or new, I hope for the sake of Liberal senators that it will be more effective than my speech. The only way to dispel my doubts would be to vote for Bill C-22 without any amendment.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate Senator David on his well-prepared statement. I do not want to go over again the position of the committee majority and, I believe, that of my colleagues, in answer to his remarks.

I only wish to add a few words on two aspects of our position. One of the main thrusts of his intervention was the necessity of promoting research. I only wish to say, as was done previously, that we do not share his hopes concerning the commitment of multinationals to raise the level of research in Canada. Second, in the committee recommendations, we have already suggested to the House of Commons the creation of a fund to arrive exactly at the same result, that is to promote research through increased payments to corporations. There will be a distribution of those funds among the companies based on their activities in the research area.

[English]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I would like to comment on two aspects on which I do not pretend to have expertise since I was not a member of the committee. I heard Senator Cogger and Senator David speak with some fervour about the question of intellectual property. I know that this has been used by a good number of people to justify the possible or, indeed, the probable increase in drug prices.

As a layman, I am somewhat astonished to hear that the freedom of the pill makers should be greater than the freedom of the doctor who prescribes the pills. The logic of this would be that, when the surgeon is about to perform a remarkable operation, for example a hip replacement, that someone should then haggle over the price with the manufacturers of the steel or the plastic equipment that is used. In this country, during the last generation, we have seen that Canadian citizens have come to the conclusion that where their health is concerned, there can and should be some element of control so that citizens are entitled to equality of service without regard to their pocketbook. This is not an American or European experience. In fact, it is for this very reason that the debate on extra billing, which took place two or three years ago, was so important, and, in fact, the support was so strong that the present government swallowed itself and made it a unanimous vote in the House of Commons. I suspect the same thing was done here.

The question of health services and all related services, be it in the form of prescriptions, equipment or any other area involving people's health, is subject to the same collective feeling that money should not be and cannot be allowed to be, even in the name of intellectual property, the criterion for access to surgery, pills, orthopedic equipment, et cetera. When the auxiliary services to the medical profession understand that the Canadian people have now reached this conclusion, then perhaps we can have a saner debate.

Dr. Barootes, in his speech yesterday, used quotations from the testimony of the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Madame Erola. I wish he had pointed out that she now speaks on behalf of the pharmaceutical industry, which is her perfect right, and which she is free to do. However, this information should be made known. I have not had the time to check the chronology of the events that Dr. Barootes narrated, but on page 1714 of Hansard Senator Barootes says:

The Honourable Judy Erola in giving testimony to our Senate Committee on, I believe, May 5, 1987, indicated that draft enabling legislation similar to Bill C-22 today to extend the period of drug patents was being prepared in her department.

I can tell you that all former ministers, including the one who is speaking, have seen proposals come through their department which were given very short shrift when they appeared before cabinet or before caucus. In fact, I can think of a couple of horror stories that the Department of Transport proposed to us and were rejected, which were then adopted by the present government and have now become law.

Madame Erola should have told the committee that the same caucus which insisted on the ban on extra billing, and the same caucus which rejected interference with universality of social programs, would have given, I suspect, fairly rough treatment to her version of Bill C-22.

• (1130)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator LeBlanc: Certainly.

Senator Phillips: Is the senator proposing a national drug plan with the federal government picking up the tab? I ask that because he certainly left that impression.

Senator LeBlanc: If I left that impression, I did not intend to do so. Perhaps I should answer in French.

[Translation]

I would suggest that Canadians have concluded that anything having to do with their health—drugs, orthopedic instruments or other such devices—cannot or must not be the subject of speculation or determination on the basis of free trade or commercial criteria. Drugs and all objects closely related to medicine must be considered as being an integral part of the objectives of health insurance.

In other words, for want of state-paid drugs—and most are so paid in the case of senior citizens—we need at least some form of control so that the sick will not be exploited.

Senator Cogger: Would the honourable senator accept a question?

Senator LeBlanc: I will try to answer.

Senator Cogger: I listened carefully to the answer you just gave to the question of Senator Phillips. Frankly, this is the most eloquent plea I ever heard in favour of establishing a prices review board.

How do you account for the fact that, in a few minutes, you will be voting against such a board?

Senator LeBlanc: Experience has taught me that in most cases this kind of board—one might consider other industries where efforts were made with a view to exercising controls, or monitoring—is not very effective. I must say that every time this government has had to choose between free enterprise and the citizen's welfare over the past three years, I am afraid free enterprise came out the winner.

Hon. Norbert L. Thériault: Honourable senators, like all my colleagues, I am sure, I listened with great interest to Senator David's speech. Throughout the Special Committee's proceedings we appreciated the senator's sincerity and his medical expertise.

He has raised a few points about which I have some questions and comments. First of all, in the past three months I found it very difficult to understand the position taken by Conservative members on the committee. They said that if we accepted the amendments before this chamber today, which include dropping the appointment of a drug price review board chaired by Dr. Eastman, this might result in a further increase in the price of either generic or innovative drugs.

Since you seem to trust Dr. Eastman's judgment, perhaps you could explain why you did not agree with the recommendations made by the same Dr. Eastman following a thorough and complete study of the problem in Canada. We also have confidence in Dr. Eastman. We have proved as much, not just by making elaborate speeches but by urging acceptance of his recommendations.

Another point I would like to raise is the following. Dr. David surprised me this morning when he said, and I will try to reconstruct his argument, that if we accept the bill as amended, it is very likely we will see a price increase because the innovative companies will have to recoup their expenses and make part of their profits over a four-year period instead of a ten-year period, and second, generic companies will have to pay an additional ten per cent. As far as the generic companies are concerned, I agree that if we adopt the bill as recommended, these prices will have to go up by ten per cent. But where is the logic of your proposals and the promises by governments and companies that if we adopt Bill C-22 as it was presented by the government, those same companies would spend $1.4 billion within the next ten years on research and employment in Canada. Where will this one billion four hundred million dollars, plus the profits these companies have always made and will continue to make, come from? Senator David, your argument does not hold water.

I realize that at various times in our lives, we all have to go to our doctors and seek their advice. I am very grateful to the medical profession, of which Dr. David is an eminent member, because it is the main reason why I am here in this chamber today. But we must not forget that doctors are human like everybody else. Legislators had to pass medicare legislation against the collective will of our doctors. Last year in Ontario, the Liberal government was faced with a general doctors' strike in that province, because it wanted to control spending and ensure that health care would be available to all.

As my colleague, Senator Roméo LeBlanc, remarked, the same philosophy applies here. We are opposed to Bill C-22 because we are afraid that in the long run, people who cannot afford the kind of care that all of us here in the Senate and many others may need will be faced with the kind of prices that will keep them from getting proper care. Some people may have to do without, especially the poor. We have seen that in certain cases, children had to do without food because the money was needed to pay for drugs.

Honourable senators, we all agree with Senator David that we need research, and that the amount of research in Canada should be increased. Our amendments suggest ways of doing so. In 1987, I should hope that we in this country should not have to be at the beck and call of the big U.S. drug companies and the U.S. government.

This morning before coming to the Senate I was reading the paper, and I read that two people, a member of Congress and a member of the U.S. Administration, said quite frankly that they disagreed with what the Canadian Senate was trying to accomplish. Personally, as a member of the Senate of this country, I will never let my behaviour or voting habits be dictated by the Americans or by any other foreign country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator David: My dear Senator Thériault, that was a long speech to ask me a few questions which as far as accuracy . . .

Senator Thériault: Not as long as yours, Senator David.

• (1140)

Senator David: That is true, because I said nearly everything that I wanted to say.

I should point out that I had not hoped to convert you this morning. We have been enjoying each other's company for three months, and the arguments you have just made are about the same as your answers to our counterproposals.

However, I have enjoyed the sincerity and frankness with which we have been able to speak to each other during these long travels. I want to try to answer, without giving in to your arguments, because as you know, a dialogue should go both ways. There is none so deaf as he who will not hear.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator David: You refer to Dr. Eastman in relation to your amendments to the bill. Therefore you have confidence in him. We, Conservatives, also have confidence in him as we offered him chairmanship of the prices review board. As you can see, he is perhaps the only man to have the confidence of everyone here. Everyone supports him. In my opinion, Dr. Eastman is a very honourable man who deserves your confidence and ours. I therefore ask you to have confidence in him as chairman of the prices review board, even though we believe that what he proposed in his report is totally different from what is provided in Bill C-22. To follow his recommendations, we would have to start all over again.

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: He still said that he found Bill C-22 acceptable.

Senator David: You accept that the prices of generic products will increase by 10 per cent. I am glad that you do. This means that there will be a 10 per cent increase in the prices of the products which, according to everyone I have heard, are responsible for lowering drug prices in Canada. What you are doing is to increase these prices.

Why will the innovating companies increase their prices? They will do so in spite of their profits, and I should add that perhaps neither one of us has ever wondered what these companies do with their profits. It would perhaps be useful for their profits to be redistributed in Canada rather than sent back to other countries. This does not mean that the innovating companies are right to increase their prices. However, if they are not given an opportunity to do more in Canada, I really do not see why, faced with our hostility, they would not send their profits back to their own countries.

You say that doctors are human beings. In fact, I did not quite understand what you meant in asking this question. You say that they are human beings and, as such, probably have their own interests to defend while we Parliamentarians have other interests to defend.

The point I wanted to make is that those from whom we heard the least in the special committee were those who are the most familiar with medicine and medical and pharmacological research. They are the people who are most able to take care of us when we are sick. However, we listened very carefully to all other groups and heard nothing about the comments and complaints of the groups responsible for our health care.

That is why I concluded by saying that, when the day comes when you are in trouble, Senator Thériault, as you admit yourself, you will still put your trust in your doctor. I doubt very much that you will ask him whether his pills are generic or innovative.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I simply want to tell Senator David that I am in agreement with almost everything he said. However, in my case, I probably will not have to ask the doctor whether the pill is generic or innovative because I have been fortunate to be in a position to pay the price.

I still hold the view that the remaining 75 or 95 per cent of the people do not enjoy the same favourable circumstances you and I are in.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the incredible saga of Bill C-22 nears its end. We are now at the third reading stage, that of passing it with or without amendments, probably with amendments and a message to that end to the House of Commons. There will remain the final act once the House of Commons has decided, that of knowing what we will decide in turn. I must say that the scenario organized by the Opposition in the Senate has been based on exclusively partisan considerations . . .

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Flynn: Certainly Senator Guay for one can protest because not even once in his life did he show partisanship.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Senator Flynn, all I can do is laugh at what you are doing.

Senator Flynn: You are still funnier than anyone else in this place.

Senator Guay: Very funny!

Senator Flynn: The St-Boniface baritone, the St-Boniface trombone!

I said partisan considerations because we have seen . . .

Senator Thériault: All this coming from a non-partisan senator!

Senator Flynn: This is something I do not claim to be I make no attempt to camouflage my colors. But I am attempting on the other hand to argument, and do not bank on prejudice. I do not resort to demagoguery, even if you sometimes do not know you are doing so.

Anyway, as I said, it was partisan considerations from the start because there was a realization that there might be an opportunity to rouse the people.

For instance, we have seen those famous petitions circulating en masse, prompted by Senators Bonnell, Thériault and others with the same aims. And those people come and tell us: "Do not pass Bill C-22 because this will increase costs". Of course, if you ask someone: "Do you want to pay a little more for drugs?" He will answer: "No". But: "Do you want to pay a little more for a better drug?" I am sure he will answer: "Yes".

Are you going to ask him: "Do you want a tax increase?" What do you expect him to say? Come now! Senator Thériault refers to the poor fellow who cannot afford to buy such or such a pill. Come on! I do not know many people who could not afford to pay a little more for a better pill.

Those petitions in the background were meant to rouse Canadians. Thus the bill was sent to the Senate and the leaders of the Opposition decided that the issue should not be referred to a committee which would have considered it objectively but to one which would follow the strategy that was developed and continue to rouse Canadians.

Now, the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which Senator Olson belongs would surely have been objective especially as we know Senator Olson. We know that he would have brushed aside all partisan considerations while examining the bill.

Anyway, it was decided that the bill would be referred to a special committee. On the opposition side, Senator Buckwold of Saskatchewan who on several occasions had stated his opposition to the bill was chosen. Senator Turner who had decided that he was against the bill was also chosen. There was also Senator Thériault, of course, and we all know where he stands. Then there was Senator Bonnell who said: "I will chair the committee in order to help the government. We will help the government and try to deal with the bill before the end of June." We remember those lively times.

The special committee launched its campaign not to inquire about the real conditions, but to try to gather support and try and rouse Canadians once again through the media.

The committee did not learn anything that the committee of the House of Commons did not already know. The committee members did not learn anything that the other senators, including Senator Haidasz who is a physician did not know. That committee spent over $300,000 merely to try to increase ill-will against the bill. This is exactly what was done.

Moreover, a while ago, in his rather lame explanation, Senator Frith tried to convey some logic to the position of the Opposition, but he failed. How did the debate proceed? What did Senator Bonnell and all those who refused to support the bill say? They said that the bill will increase prices and that it is unfair for the poor. By how much, we do not know. They then raised the spectre of the multinationals. It was rather interesting. I heard Senator Stewart's speech. While listening and seeing him raise the spectre of the multinationals, he reminded me of his friend Tommy Douglas. It would have been the kind of speech made by Tommy Douglas. I think that he has followed in his steps.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: Senator Argue could also have made such a speech. We heard him refer to multinationals as exploiters; we have heard many comments on that line. Then Senator Thériault again fell into the trap this morning when he said that multinationals were gobbling us.

Senator Thériault: I did not mention the multinationals.

Senator Flynn: But you mentioned American companies.

Senator Thériault: Yes, American companies.

Senator Flynn: I agree. It is another way of saying the same thing. He says that he will not submit to the dictates of Americans; I agree. I suggest that when we refer to multinationals, we mean American companies most of the time.

The debate on the side of the majority of the opposition and in the committee was limited to trying to scare people: "You are going to pay more for your medicine, you will not be able to afford them, you are going to suffocate". Senator Romeo LeBlanc arrived this morning and wanted to change the subject by dealing with the health insurance scheme.

If you want to cover all drugs in the cost of this scheme, it is something entirely different.

It is not the subject matter of this bill. You went completely out of your way in an effort to possibly distract the attention from the very weak position adopted by the opposition.

Senator LeBlanc: I said that the sick have a right to expect that their government, whatever its colour, even a Conservative government, will not limit the bill in such a way that they will be at the mercy of those who could rob them blind.

Senator Flynn: Again, if you want that all medicines come under the health insurance plan, it is an entirely different matter. For the time being, however, they do not. I suggest simply that your argument is entirely out of order and that it is not in any way connected with what we are dealing with. This may distract slightly from the weak position adopted by the supporters of the official opposition and those who oppose this bill, but it is not connected any way with what we are dealing with now.

As to the committee members representing the government, I can simply read their remarks. They made reasonable speeches and used reasonable arguments and facts. They did not try to frighten anybody, except by saying: for goodness sake, do not prevent us from encouraging the innovative pharmaceutical industry and helping research. You may be right when you say this is appealing to sentiments. I think it is more logical than trying to frighten people by telling them that they will not be able to afford the medicine they need and that they will fall victims to the multinationals and be walked all over by the Americans. You said: "We are not going to let the Americans tell us what to do. Even if what they are saying is right, even if we are going to lose, we prefer dying to giving up".

With this fantastic story, the committee travels everywhere in Canada to pick up opposition to this bill. It returned to the Senate and said: "What are we going to do with this bill?" Then they invented the famous pharmaceutical research fund which was completely out of order. It is true that I attended only one committee meeting, but according to my information, nobody ever suggested this idea to the committee. I do not remember that. We heard only the testimonies of the scientific and medical communities and the pharmaceutical industry which were in part favourable to the bill. The consumer associations, which you were reported to collect in droves, stated that they were afraid of drug price increases. That was about it.

And what did they do with this information? It was used to draft the recommendations of the sixth report, which you had to rewrite completely. Not surprising, since you adopted conclusions that were more or less makeshift. You are giving us a situation which in my view doesn't make sense at all. You are giving a protection period of four years, which is against the principle supported by Senator Roméo LeBlanc and will make the innovative companies charge the maximum price during that period. You eliminate the drug prices review board which was supposed to prevent any unrestrained increases.

• (1200)

Senator Thériault: You don't understand what this is all about.

Senator Flynn: Not unless I can't read. I am sure I do understand a couple of things. Is it true that you are giving a protection period of four years?

Senator Thériault: We recommend the Eastman report which was recommended by all witnesses.

Senator Flynn: I am not talking about the Eastman report but about a four-year protection period. And what about Eastman?

Senator Thériault: I suppose you know who he is?

Senator Flynn: Of course I do. And I know his report. I don't care what Dr. Eastman recommends. Are you recommending a four-year protection period, yes or no?

Senator Thériault: Yes.

Senator Flynn: Is there a mechanism to monitor the drug prices review board?

Senator Thériault: We don't need one.

Senator Flynn: You don't need one. So during those four years, they will be able to change whatever they want to change?

Senator Thériault: The same as they are doing now.

Senator Flynn: It is worse, because right now we have nothing. You are recommending a four-year period. I don't know who doesn't understand what, but unless I can't read . . . I beg your pardon, the trombone from St. Boniface!

Senator Guay: First of all, if your government had appointed you to the committee you would have learned something. Second, you are getting away from your subject if you criticize other senators.

Senator Flynn: In any case, my party did not appoint me to the special committee, but it should have done, as you say, because I would have learned something. In your case, they did not appoint you to the committee because you would not have learned anything!

Senator Guay: On the contrary.

Senator Flynn: As a result, you have a situation which is worse than the present one and worse than the one which would have been created by the bill. I am certain that Senator Guay will rise in a few minutes and explain everything when he gives us his views, as he already knows everything and had no need to sit on the committee.

Senator Guay: It would serve no purpose to reply.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Flynn: I am trying to make you understand.

Senator Guay: You have problems understanding this yourself.

Senator Flynn: I do not know why you are getting angry! I am trying to reply to Senator Thériault.

Senator Guay: I find it amusing.

Senator Flynn: If you find it amusing, you can laugh, but you should not grumble!

Senator Guay: You are funny!

Senator Flynn: I find it a bit funny myself, but also a bit sad. This situation is created by these completely improvised amendments, because this is not what you intended. You were thinking about Dr. Eastman, as Senator Thériault has said. However, you have to look at the Eastman report as a whole. These amendments go beyond the bill. They are illegal and go beyond the authority of the Senate. You have come up with a bastardized and impractical system.

Under the circumstances, I do not see how the House of Commons, even the opposition parties there, can accept the amendments which you want to suggest to them. Without the prices review board, the payments to the provinces and the four years of protection and with no control whatsoever, I do not see how these amendments could be accepted in replacement of Bill C-22 as it was referred to us by the House of Commons.

Because of this, to allow all members of the Senate to express their views clearly, I move, seconded by Senator Roblin, that Bill C-22 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by deleting all the amendments proposed in the first part of the seventh report of the special committee on the said bill, and by restoring the text of the bill as received by the Senate from the House of Commons.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Flynn moved, supported by the Honourable Senator Roblin, that Bill C-22 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by deleting all the amendments proposed in the first part of the seventh report of the special committee on the said bill, and by restoring the text of the bill as received by the Senate from the House of Commons.

• (1210)

[English]

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order on the motion. As I heard it read, I think the motion is defective. It is defective in form, because the motion reads "that Bill C-22 be not now read a third time." Bill C-22 is not before us—it is Bill C-22, as amended, that is before us.

Senator Flynn: Then add the words.

Senator MacEachen: Therefore, I believe that the motion in this form is defective and cannot be put.

Senator Flynn: This is childish—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Flynn: It is childish. The senator is trying to have fun.

Senator MacEachen: No, I am just trying to get Senator Flynn to be competent.

Senator Flynn: This is only a matter of detail. I remember, when I became a lawyer about 50 years ago, that one could arrange to have an action rejected because somebody had forgotten a comma, or something like that. Senator MacEachen sounds exactly like that, himself. I accept, Mr. Speaker, that you include the words “as amended”, to please the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Senators: No! No!

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, it is not open to Senator Flynn to do this. The motion has been put in a particular form, and he cannot now amend that motion by saying to the Speaker, in a cosy arrangement, “Just change it to please a childish member of the opposition.” The motion is either in order or it is out of order, and I say that it is out of order, that it should not be put in that form, and that it cannot be changed without unanimous consent.

Senator Guay: He will learn.

Senator Flynn: That is completely in error. This is not the House of Commons that Senator MacEachen knew in 1953. This chamber has evolved and has become a civilized place, on occasion.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I have learned since coming to this chamber that we really do make up our rules as we go along.

Senator Frith: When it suits.

Senator Roblin: When it suits. It has never been clear to me that we have adhered with strict formality to the rules that apply in the other parliamentary chamber across the way. When I first came here, I thought that was a bad thing. I have since come to the conclusion, since our Speaker has his particular role, which is different from that of the Speaker of the House of Commons, that we did get along rather well by being reasonable and sensible in what we do here rather than adhering strictly to the rules that appear in Beauchesne.

The other day, for example, my friend, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, moved a motion about the use of television in this chamber. It was obviously a defective motion, because it would have had us do something which we had no intention of doing. So, I suggested to him that that was the case and that he should make a change to the motion by adding some words, which he obligingly did. No one in this chamber objected that that was a heinous offence against the rules and propriety of conduct in the Senate of Canada chamber. We accepted it.

Today we find ourselves in the same situation. I think the same courtesy that we extended to the Leader of the Opposition on that occasion could well be extended on this occasion.

Senator Flynn: I would not mind the Speaker making a ruling on that. We will have someone else move the motion, as amended, and we will try to continue in this fashion until we satisfy the caprices of the Leader of the Opposition, which are, I suggest, completely unreasonable.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I must say that I am impressed with the comments made by Senator Roblin that one must be reasonable. However, it is difficult to be reasonable in light of the attitude that Senator Flynn took when it was pointed out to him that his motion was defective. He reacted by accusing me—because I had noticed the defect in his motion—of a childish gesture. Then, ignoring all other senators, he asked the Speaker to fix it up. I think that if he requested the consent of all honourable senators to change his motion, he would receive that consent.

Senator Flynn: On a point of privilege, when I suggested to the Chair that the motion could be amended as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, I did not mean to give an order to the Speaker. I said that if His Honour the Speaker finds that the Leader of the Opposition is right in asking that those words be added, then I would accept that. I did not show any contempt for the Senate.

● (1220)

Senator Frith: You used the word “childish”.

Senator Flynn: I said that it is childish to have raised this as a serious objection. That is what I said—and I say it again.

Senator MacEachen: I cannot regard the absence of the expression “as amended” from the motion as an insignificant omission, because, had the motion been put as Senator Flynn moved it, and as it was put to the house, and if his motion were carried, then Bill C-22 would not be read—

An Hon. Senator: Exactly.

Senator MacEachen: —because the substantive part would be “that Bill C-22 be not now read a third time,” and the rest would be irrelevant, because the amended bill would not be in the motion.

So, I do not think it is childish. If we want to be serious about our work, it would be quite ridiculous to have a motion put asking “that Bill C-22 be not now read a third time” when the motion made by Senator Cogger is that Bill C-22, as amended, be read the third time.

I am rather thick-skinned about comments from Senator Flynn. I am not arguing the fact that he addressed those words to me, but I do not consider that the substance of the argument, or the point, is childish. There is a world of difference between a proposition which states “Bill C-22” and one which states “Bill C-22, as amended.” That is what I was drawing to the attention of the Senate, and I would have expected Senator Flynn to have taken a more apologetic attitude in light of his omission.

Senator Flynn: Concerning the word "omission", if the Leader of the Opposition reads the motion I made, he will find that I said, "Bill C-22, in deleting the amendments proposed in the Seventh Report." So it is obvious that I was referring to Bill C-22, as changed by the report. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition, but should not say, "Your remarks are without substance." That is wrong.

Senator MacEachen: If it is not of substance, let us not change it and see what the outcome is.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed that Senator Flynn may add to his motion the words "as amended"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Flynn: I have already done so.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The motion has been put.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will take only one or two minutes—

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am quite prepared to let Senator Murray have the floor now, but I want to return later not to a defect in form but to a defect in substance in the amendment.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will take only a minute or two of your time, because this may be the only opportunity that I will have in the course of our debate to complete very briefly the record of a procedural discussion which the Leader of the Opposition and I engaged in yesterday.

Honourable senators will recall that the Leader of the Opposition and I speculated about the effect of defeating a motion for adoption of a committee report on a bill such as Bill C-22. I raised the concern—or "the dilemma", as I put it—in which the supporters of the government found themselves. If we voted, and succeeded in a vote, against the adoption of that report, would that mean simply that the amendments to the bill contained in the report would be struck down, or would it mean that the bill itself was stopped in its tracks? I speculated about that, as did the Leader of the Opposition, although he was rather more categorical than I in his remarks. The Leader of the Opposition said—and this can be found at page 1717 of Debates of the Senate for Wednesday, August 12, 1987:

If members on the other side voted against the main motion, and if we agreed with their position and joined with them, Senator Murray then asks what would happen to the bill. I must say that one can make a certain preliminary observation, and that is that the bill would be in serious difficulty. Indeed, the government would have put the bill in jeopardy, because the committee to which the bill has been committed will have been extinguished, and the report bringing the bill forward will be defeated, and the bill will never appear on the order paper unless some other action is taken, such as a motion to reinstate the bill at second reading. I suppose the government could put a motion asking that the bill be reinstated at second reading, and we could start over again.

Honourable senators, since that time I have finally got my hands on a couple of precedents, which I would like to bring to your attention, and which prove that my fears were unfounded, and that Senator MacEachen's interpretation is wrong.

On December 17, 1951, the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce brought in a report on a bill with amendments. On the motion for the adoption of the report—

Senator Frith: What was the date?

Senator Murray: On December 17, 1951 the report was brought in, and on December 18 Honourable Senator Euler moved:

... that the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to the Bill (249), intituled: "An Act to amend the Canada Grain Act", be now concurred in.

After debate and—

The question being put on the said motion, The motion was defeated. So it was passed in the negative. Then:

With leave of the Senate,

The said Bill was, on division, then read the third time.

So the report of the committee had been defeated, but the bill moved to third reading and was resolved in the affirmative.

On June 10, 1959, Senator Hayden of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce reported Bill C-47 with several amendments. On that date Senator Hayden, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien, moved:

... for adoption of the Report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on the Bill C-47, intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act".

After further debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the negative.

In other words, the report of the committee was defeated. Then:

The Honourable Senator Brunt moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Horner, that the Bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for a third reading tomorrow.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

On August 3, 1977, Senator Argue—I would have thought that he would have intervened yesterday to help us with this procedural matter—brought in a report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture on Bill C-34, intituled: "An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans" and so on. After debate, Senator Hays, P.C.:

... moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat, that the Report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture for further consideration.

That motion was defeated. The question was then put on the main motion to adopt Senator Argue's report. The Senate divided and it was resolved in the negative. Then:

The Honourable Senator Olson, P.C.—

I am sorry that he did not intervene yesterday to help us with our procedural matter:

—moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Eudes, that the Bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for a third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

That question was resolved in the affirmative. So, honourable senators, in summary, if the report of the committee proposing amendments to a bill is defeated, the normal course, according to these precedents, has been to move then to consider the bill at third reading. That, of course, takes a motion, and my honourable friends could defeat it. But, then, they can defeat a bill at third reading anyway.

● (1230)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I do not think that the precedents that Senator Murray has cited are conclusive in any sense in dealing with this particular question. Presumably the Senate, by consent, can do anything, and presumably it acted in this particular case by consent.

Senator Murray: Not in one case.

Senator MacEachen: I must say, having reflected further upon the theoretical problem which arose yesterday—which was not realized because the members of the government were rescued from their dilemma by the members of the opposition—if that report had been defeated yesterday, the situation would be that Bill C-22 would not have received committee treatment or committee study, and a report on the committee's study would not have been made to the Senate as a whole. I do not want to develop the argument further, but I do not know how the Senate, if that report had been defeated yesterday, could overlook the fact that a report from a committee of the Senate had not been received by the Senate.

Senator Roblin: It had been received, and it had been approved!

Senator MacEachen: I am saying, what if it had not been received and approved by the Senate, because the intent and the purpose of Senator Bonnell was to report the bill from the committee. What would be the effect if the report was defeated and the bill was not reported from the committee? The bill would still be in committee. How you can overlook that point, and blithely say that it is automatic to move on to third reading, is beyond me.

Senator Murray: I just read the precedents.

Senator MacEachen: I say to Senator Murray that in his apparent reference to these precedents he has, in my view, revealed to all of us a very serious problem that is certainly not covered by these precedents. If the committee report had not been received yesterday, the Senate would never have had any report from any committee—be it the Committee of the Whole, a standing committee or a special committee—on the committee stage of the bill. We know that the committee stage is an essential feature of the passage of any bill—

Senator Flynn: No.

An Hon. Senator: No.

Senator MacEachen: —through any chamber of any parliament. I do not think you can just say, "Scratch that out, forget about the committee stage, and move on to third reading," when the Senate has never been advised about the results and has never dealt with the results of the committee.

Those are my comments to Senator Murray.

Senator Flynn: For what they are worth!

Senator MacEachen: Yes, for what they are worth. My previous comments were worth quite a bit in terms of having Senator Flynn admit that his procedural position was incorrect.

Senator Flynn: To the extent that I have indicated.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I must say that I find the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition less convincing than he usually is when he discusses this question of what happened to the committee's report. Let us be clear about it. The motion put by Senator Bonnell was for concurrence in the report of the committee. Therefore, to say that the committee stage had not taken place, which is the implication of the honourable senator's argument—in fact, he said it in so many words—is ridiculous.

Senator MacEachen: I didn't say that.

Senator Roblin: The honourable senator can read Hansard.

Senator MacEachen: The committee stage—

Senator Roblin: Get up on your feet.

Senator MacEachen: I am sorry, honourable senators. My point is that the committee stage is an essential part of the legislative process. The Senate must be apprised of that committee stage in dealing with the bill. Yesterday Senator Bonnell moved the adoption of the report. If that report had not been received by the Senate, the Senate would never have had the benefit of a committee study, which it approved. That is an essential step.

Senator Roblin: Which it approved?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Roblin: That does not follow at all. The Senate certainly had the benefit of the committee's report. What in the name of goodness has it been debating for the past two or three days? The committee's report—

Senator MacEachen: But it had to approve it.

Senator Roblin: —and the amendments it wanted to make to the bill. The Senate received the report. Not only has the report been received but the special committee has been dissolved. Surely that indicates that its proceedings have been completed. The committee's advice is before us. Its function is completed. The procedure of Parliament is respected. The report of the committee is before us, and we have been asked to concur in it. My honourable friend says that if we reject the committee's report, it means we have not had the committee stage. That is what he said. He said that if we reject the committee's report, we have not had the committee stage. He cannot mean that. Now he is going to tell us something else, because I see it in his face.

Senator MacEachen: No, we have had the committee stage. However, it is not a valid stage unless the report of the committee stage is received by the Senate.

Senator Murray: Adopted, you mean.

Senator MacEachen: If it is not received and adopted by the Senate, that committee stage has not been completed. That is my point. I shall not argue it further today, because I have another point to make. I was drawn into this debate quite by accident, and I do not want to pursue it. However, let me tell you that the citations made by Senator Murray reveal more difficulties than they solve.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is taking the position that unless the Senate approves the report, we have not received it. That is not the case. Obviously, it is not the case. The committee's function has been completed, the committee is discharged, and the Senate has been confronted with a resolution to debate the committee's report, and we have done so. The honourable senator says that if we do not want to receive the report, the committee stage has not been completed. I cannot agree with that point. Whether we accept or reject the report the committee stage has been completed.

I shall not go on with this argument, because we are not here this afternoon for that purpose, but I do want to make it clear that I do not accept my honourable friend's description of the correct parliamentary attitude toward this matter.

Senator MacEachen: That is all right, if you don't accept it. We can argue it again some other time.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Roblin. I do not accept the honourable Leader of the Opposition's interpretation of the situation. How can the Senate, as such, reject amendments that are proposed in a report coming from a committee? How can we do that at the report stage, if my honourable friend is suggesting that to do so means that we must vote against or kill the whole bill?

Senator MacEachen: I never said that.

Senator Murray: Well, I think that is the implication of what the Leader of the Opposition has said.

Senator Argue: Let's go to another item.

Senator Murray: Senator Argue wants to go to another item.

Senator Frith: Like the one that is before us, for example.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Murray: —but I will say that I do not understand how the Leader of the Opposition can dismiss these precedents as quickly as he does by saying that they raise more difficulties than they solve. The August 3, 1977, situation in particular is almost exactly similar to the situation we face today. A committee brought in a report on a bill. A senator moved to amend that report. That proposed amendment was defeated. Then the Senate voted on the main motion, which was to adopt the report. The Senate defeated the report from Senator Argue's committee, whereupon a supporter of the government, the Honourable Senator Olson, moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

• (1240)

He did not ask for leave. Apparently, he did not need leave, nor was it necessary in one of the other two cases I have cited. He moved that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate. The question being put on the motion, it was resolved in the affirmative.

I will leave it at that for the moment, except to say that I do not think we can leave it there. The honourable senator who is chairman of the Rules Committee should take this under advisement, perhaps on his own initiative, or, if he requires a motion at some future date, we can produce a reference for him. This kind of problem should be settled and defined in our rules once and for all, because there is clearly a difference of opinion between us on the matter which I would not like to continue unresolved.

Senator Frith: Meanwhile, back to the business before us.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, there are two motions before the Senate. There is a main motion and a motion in amendment by Senator Flynn. Is it your pleasure to adopt Senator Flynn's motion in amendment?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I regret that I am obligated to make a comment or two on the substance of this motion. I want to remind honourable senators that yesterday we had a division on the question of the amendments which were made by the committee. The Senate, of course, accepted those amendments. Today we are being asked to deal with the same proposition. We had reached a conclusion yesterday, and today we are being asked to reverse that conclusion.

On an earlier occasion, when we dealt with the Parole Bill, that same point was made by Senator Frith. In that instance His Honour gave his opinion and ruled that the amendment was in order. Senator Frith then expressed the view that, although he was not going to appeal His Honour's ruling, we on this side did not regard the situation as acceptable. I presume that the Chair, if pressed to make a ruling, would be consistent and reach the same conclusion as it did in a situation which was, if not identical, quite similar.

There is a further point with respect to this amendment, honourable senators. It asks us to amend the amended bill by deleting all the amendments which were approved yesterday. That is one aspect of the amendment which I am not contest-ing in a way different than the way it was contested by Senator Frith on the last occasion.

The proposition that is before us is to adopt the amended bill moved by Senator Cogger. Senator Flynn, in his amendment, says, "Let's take out all the amendments that were made yesterday." That is one proposition. However, there is a second proposition. If his amendment is carried, then automatically the original bill will be reinstated on the order paper. I suggest it is inappropriate to introduce that second proposition at this stage. We are dealing with an amended bill and not the original bill. To ask us in a single proposition to deal with the amended bill and the original bill is unacceptable.

I am not pressing for a ruling, Your Honour, but I am reserving my position on this matter, as well as the position Senator Frith took on an earlier occasion. I am reserving my right to raise this question again, if it does occur again, and seek a Speaker's ruling and, if necessary, a decision from the Senate itself.

I understand the difficulty of the members of the government. They are attempting to resolve this by introducing an amendment which will give them an opportunity to state their opposition to the amendments made yesterday. However, while their dilemma may be masked on this occasion, if, indeed, this amendment is defeated, when we come to the third reading proposition, which will have to be put to the house, the dilemma will be stark and real.

Senator Murray: Not really. I answered that yesterday.

Senator MacEachen: At that point the members of the government will be faced with voting for or against the amended bill. If they vote against the amended bill, and if we join them in that vote, then their bill will be defeated. Therefore, they have to make a choice between the bill and our amendments, and we intend to give them that choice on third reading.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I dealt with that matter yesterday. Very briefly, we will not stand in the way of having the House of Commons pass judgment on the amendments that are favoured by a majority of senators in this house. For that reason we are not going to vote against this bill, as amended, with the risk of killing the whole bill at this stage. We will let it go through, as we did before, so that the House of Commons will have an opportunity to pass judgment on the amendments.

Senator MacEachen: In the meantime the members of the government will have declared their support for the amendments made in committee when they have all voted to support third reading of Bill C-22, as amended. That is an excellent thing to discover, that when this bill, as amended, goes to the House of Commons, it carries the support of all members of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment of Senator Flynn?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

● (1250)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

● (1310)

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should now like to speak to the main motion, which is already on the floor. I just want to say a few words before the debate closes to tell honourable senators that this bill, Bill C-22, is a most historic bill for Canada. It is a bill that, in the minds of most Canadians, only has to do with drugs for our people. But let me tell senators that this bill will also raise the price of drugs for the veterinarians and the farmers in this country. Agricultural costs will go up as well.

Let me also tell senators that there is another aspect to this bill with which we should be concerned. As we travel from the east to the west of this land, we find that our farmers are in difficulty. We find that some of these multinational companies have a 17-year patent on the pesticides, chemicals, fertilizers and other things that are in use on our farms, in our forests and in the agriculture industry in general. This increases the farm costs of this country tremendously. If we are trying to help our farmers today, something should be done to control the monopolies on pesticides and chemicals that are held by these multinational companies.

It is all right to talk about controls for our sick—that is good, and we are doing something about it. We are trying here, as those senators who are really concerned about them know, to help the aged, the sick, the infirm, and the poor. Some people are not concerned, though most of us are. We saw that a moment ago.

I did not want senators to go home today thinking that there is no other great need for senators to be concerned about the Patent Act. Our entire forestry, agricultural and fisheries industries are concerned because of the chemicals they need to fight diseases. Canada is now going into fish farming, and our agricultural sector, of course, is also very important. These questions are not addressed in this bill but in the Patent Act itself, which we are discussing as a whole.

I hope that those on the government side will take direction from what I am telling them, and that they will bring it to their cabinet colleagues so they can do something to help our farmers in this country through the Patent Act. I hope that they will bring in amendments to the Patent Act to assist in that regard. When they pass Bill C-22, I ask them not to forget that they are hurting not only the sick, the infirm, the aged, the crippled, and the poor, and provincial governments, but that they are also hurting the agriculture and fisheries industries because of the cost of drugs and chemicals.

Honourable senators, we hear a lot about promised jobs—3,000 jobs have been promised. I am not saying that these multinationals would not do that—I have faith. I have faith in everybody. But let me say this: If Bill C-22 is passed, we are told that $2.5 billion will be taken from our economy in Canada over the next ten years—it will go to the multinationals, 85 per cent to those in America and 15 per cent to those in Europe. If Canada loses $2.5 billion from its economy, we will be losing 9,000 jobs. Perhaps those will not be lost from the drug industry—they could be lost in the farming sector, the fishery sector, grocery stores or some place else. But if our economy loses that amount, we will have lost 9,000 jobs. If we lose 9,000 jobs to gain 3,000, in my view that is a poor bargain.

Let me tell honourable senators one other thing and then I will be quiet. The committee did not find one soul in Canada who was not supporting research. We all agree that it is great. We need more research and development in Canada, whether it be in the drug business or in any business. In our recommendations we put an extra 10 per cent from the generic drug companies into research—that is done right in the amended legislation. In the original bill there is not five cents guaranteed to go into research—there is just a promise. But in our amended legislation 10 per cent of the sales will go into research. Further, we will save, under our amendments, $100 million that the federal government will not have to pay out to the provincial governments. That amount could be put into research. If the government put that amount into grants to the Medical Research Council and other organizations, we could be putting $200 million into research. In my view it is time research and development in this country was paid for by the rich, the corporations, the banks, and the working people, the people with money. For goodness sake, don't take it off the backs of the sick, the hospitalized, the infirm, and the aged by increasing drug prices. That is not the way to get your research. Yes, we want research, but let us take it off the backs of those who can afford it.

Honourable senators, think about the farmers, the fishermen, and the poor in the poorer regions of the country. Don't forget Prince Edward Island; don't forget New Brunswick; don't forget Newfoundland; don't forget Ontario; don't forget Manitoba; don't forget British Columbia and don't forget the Yukon, which came out and said to us, "Senators, here's a chance for you people to represent your regions."

An Hon. Senator: What about Quebec?

Senator Bonnell: Not too many times have we heard provinces come out directly to say that they are not being heard in the other place, that they are not being heard by the elected representatives. They have said, "You are representing the regions—do something for us." That does not happen too often. I tell honourable senators that Ontario alone said it will lose $1 billion over the next ten years if Bill C-22 passes.

Our committee heard from the aged, nurses' unions, the teachers' federation, the Royal Canadian Legion, the governments of five provinces and that of the Yukon Territory. Others wrote letters. This is something that concerns the people of Canada. I regret that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not in the chamber. However, let me assist him and his party to pull themselves up by the bootstraps for once in their lives and try to get a little higher in the polls by taking, for once, the advice of the Senate.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I had made a promise to myself not to intervene in this debate, because I was not one of those who was actually involved in the studies that produced the Senate report that results in the amendments that we are making to this bill. I had not intended to break that promise to myself until I heard the last speaker. There is something that I must have missed in this whole proceeding. I understood that the main thrust of the amendments, or the desire of the members of the opposition, is to protect people that they describe as the poor and the sick, those who deserve our compassion and our attention. That, surely, is a commendable exercise.

Honourable senators, I am not certain that this bill, as it was originally proposed to us, is a perfect piece of legislation. I suspect that it is not. I suspect that it is susceptible to improvement and to change, which we might, perhaps, suggest. But when I compare what we are now doing with our stated objective, I cannot reconcile the two. We are told that we are to accept the amendments to this bill, because they will save money for those who need our help. We heard about that particularly in the statement made by the previous speaker. Yet, what are we doing? The first thing that we are doing is that we are raising the levy from 4 per cent to 14 per cent. Surely that is bound to raise the price of generic drugs, and that will be reflected, I am sure, in the pocketbooks of all those people who buy generic drugs. So much of the drug bill is paid for through the various provincial medical plans, but not all of it. Certainly someone will have to pay the bill. It will either be the taxpayer indirectly or those who are consuming the generic drugs.

So we can see that there is a price increase there. We are now told, "That's all right, because it is going to go into research." Well, I do not object to that too much. And who is going to do the research? Well, no doubt these multinational companies of which we think so poorly will be doing the research, or most of it. We do not like them, but we are going to give them a little money anyway—but not very much, I suggest; and I rather doubt whether this 10 per cent increase in the price of generic drugs will induce the kind of research that we really want to see in Canada and for the welfare, primarily, of our people. I do not think that is likely to come about. If it does, I will certainly be glad of it.

We have this situation that the first step that the Senate is taking to relieve the poor is to increase the price of generic drugs. To me that does not make much sense. There are other ways of raising the money, and it was suggested in the original Bill C-22, but it is not in this amendment.

When I get back to Winnipeg, I am supposed to tell my people what I have been doing for them. I suppose I will have to go out and say, "Well, I was in the Senate and we have decided to protect you from the machinations of the multinational corporations, most of whom are Americans, about whom we are not very enthusiastic; we are going to save you from their power to increase drug prices, and the way we are going to do it is by raising the price of generic drugs to you by 10 per cent and hand that money over to them." That is going to be a hard argument for me to make.

But there is more to come, and it is worse. One of the other things that we tried to do in the original Bill C-22 was to protect the public against all kinds of unjustified drug price increases, both in the generic and patent drugs. There was a prices review board in there that was designed to do that job. It would control at two levels: first, as I understand it, at the introductory level—when new drugs are brought in, they would be subject to their examination; and then any price increases that were proposed for any kind of drug would also be subject to that prices review board.

When I heard Senator LeBlanc from New Brunswick speak this morning and tell us that the fact that we had been accustomed to having some kind of control over medical costs constituted a distinctly Canadian feature—and I suppose it is—I had to gather that he did not understand that the amendments were abolishing the drug price control. Because we were relying on competition, we would not need this kind of protection. So, we are abolishing the drug price control board. Why? Because competition would do the job for us.

Let us look at that rather seductive idea for a minute or two. Competition in what area? Competition in generic drugs, of course. But what proportion of the drugs that are sold, particularly the high-priced drugs, are generic? Very little. Most of the high-priced drugs are patent drugs, and we have deprived ourselves in this bill of any means of controlling the increasing price of patent drugs that are now to be set, presumably, at the will of those monopolists of whom we are so critical.

Senator Frith: Not after four years.

Senator Roblin: Senator Frith says, "not after four years;" but the point is that that is the way the bill is structured—and why we would remove this prices control board, no matter whether it is four years or 44 years, escapes me. There is some missing link—

Senator Frith: Because competition will protect us.

Senator Roblin: If competition will protect us, then why is it not protecting us now? That is what I would like to know. If you take the competition with patent drugs, most of them do not get to be made generic drugs. Where is the competition there? Most of them do not get to be made generic drugs.

● (1330)

Senator Frith: They are subject to compulsory licensing.

Senator Roblin: They may be subject to it, but they don't. So why would we toss out a perfectly reasonable price control mechanism when we had it already in the bill? So when I get back home, I will have to tell my people why we have increased the generic prices by 10 per cent right off the bat, and why we have deprived ourselves of this method of controlling drug prices in the patent section and the others. So, it appears that I will have a very tough argument.

But I know when I am beaten here. I know that I have lost the argument here; but I really cannot see the logic of this arrangement. I am sure that the committee could have made other recommendations to deal with this problem. I am not one who will say that Bill C-22 is a perfect bill. I do not believe it is; but it seems to me that we have not done a very good job of remodelling it in the interests of the people whom we say we are trying to serve, namely, those who will find increased drug prices a burden. We are certainly not doing that.

There is another thing that we are overlooking altogether. I suppose I should not get into this argument too deeply, because I know that it has no weight in this chamber. There is in my mind a lingering dissatisfaction that we are not willing to recognize that intellectual property has a value and therefore should have a right. If we were talking about someone who was inventing something else besides drugs, we would understand the value of intellectual property and we would have no concern about it. We would consider it to be a natural requirement. But we are now, apparently, turning our back on that argument altogether.

It is bootless for me to mention people of some repute—Dr. Polanyi, for one, whose name might be familiar in this chamber—who are engaged in research, or who saw some advantage in recognizing intellectual property, because this house obviously is determined that this form of asset deserves no real respect in Canadian legislation. Of course, its long-term effects are, I believe, perhaps unquantifiable but certainly are identifiable—because what is the advantage of a new drug? The advantage of a new drug, no matter how we get it, is to help people who are sick to get better. But there is something more than that about it. We know that the introduction of new drugs in this country, all from foreign sources, has been an important element in restraining the price of medicine, of doctors and of hospitals. We ignore that issue entirely as though it did not matter. I say that you cannot quantify it, but experience teaches us that the introduction of new drugs, which will help people who are sick of diseases which now we cannot treat, is not only of value to them but it also has an important application with respect to the cost of medicine in this country as a whole in keeping people out of hospital—which is the most expensive aspect of the matter—and so on.

I know that those arguments have been thoroughly canvassed and have been rejected by the Senate, so it is bootless to press the point. I simply say that on the basis of the bill that we have before us now, I do not really understand how it is helping the poor in the way that it is being presented as a help to the poor. I hope it is not harmful. I will not say that it is. I was not present at all of the discussions that took place in committee, and possibly my knowledge is somewhat limited; but I can simply say as a relatively impartial bystander—if there is such a thing in this argument—that the amendments we have proposed may or may not be good, but in my opinion they are defective, and I regret that this house seems determined to support them.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I rise to intervene briefly to express our appreciation to the members of the Special Committee who spent a great deal of time—particularly when some of the rest of us were away on summer recess in July—listening to the people of this country, from one end to the other, giving their views on the provisions of Bill C-22. In particular, I do so because of the speech made by Senator Flynn. He began his speech by imputing motives to the members of the committee, and, I guess, even to the supporters of the government on the committee, which he knows very well is absolutely against the rules. Nevertheless, he, the great champion of making sure that the rules are followed, begins his speech on the basis that there was no motivating concern, that it was strictly a political, partisan motivation that propelled the members of the committee representing the opposition.

Senator Flynn: I was never ruled out of order.

Senator Olson: No.

Senator Flynn: So try to understand.

Senator Olson: Anyway, you are always out of order—

Senator Guay: You are out of order now, Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: I could rise on a question of privilege, if you like.

Senator Guay: We are getting used to you anyway.

Senator Olson: I was not a member of the committee, but I can appreciate what the members of the committee have done, and particularly the timeframe in which they did it. I think the record ought to show that there are many senators here who understand that what has been reported by the committee, including the proposed amendments, is an honest and sincere response to what the committee heard across the country.

There is one other thing that should be on the record, and it is really why I am standing. I know that Senator Flynn really made his whole speech tongue in cheek.

Senator Flynn: In part.

Senator Olson: In part, yes. However, this attitude would not show up in the record as well as it does to me, as I sit right across the aisle from him. I would like people who read the record—and, by the way, several thousand do so—to understand that Senator Flynn was trying to take a politically partisan position by moving the amendment, which he knew was out of order.

An Hon. Senator: Now you are out of order.

Senator Olson: Now I am out of order! Oh dear, I am out of order, just as Senator Flynn was out of order. Senator Flynn knew very well what was involved, and he should not have tried to belittle the enormous effort made by the members of the committee, both by senators on his side of the house and senators on this side as well. Then Senator Flynn went on to belittle the amendments—which he should not have done—by saying, “Now, what is the House of Commons going to do with this bill, because it is imperfect, or, at least, incomplete, because the amendments do not provide, for example, for the royalty fund and other things?” Senator Flynn did not go on to say that he knows very well what the House of Commons ought to do with this bill and the recommendations. They should make amendments that only a minister is competent to make to complete the bill. Everybody in this house understands that, and so does Senator Flynn. Yet, he tried to raise the point that the bill was imperfect or useless because it was not complete. We know that. It seems to me that Senator Flynn should have at least made this point for the record. We know that the committee’s report was sent back to the committee to deal with that particular problem. He was aware of that, and he understands the process.

Honourable senators, I said I wanted to intervene briefly. However, Senator Flynn should not have made a speech that he knew was out of order from the beginning, even though nobody called him to order on it, and he should not have tried to confuse people reading the record by saying things about the process followed here that he knows very well are not the case.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. Senator Olson has said that I put my motion tongue in cheek. The motion is clear and reasonable, to vote the passage of the bill as it came to us. There is nothing wrong nor funny. There are no motives there. It is clear, and I do not know why he said what he said. Senator Olson suggests that the House of Commons will have to add to the amendments adopted by the Senate. It cannot do that at this stage, and he knows that very well. Or perhaps he does not. I do not think he does. Anyway, it would require a separate bill.

Senator Molgat: Is this a speech?

Senator Olson: Senator Flynn knows the process by which the House of Commons can accommodate the requirements to complete and perfect the bill. I will not explain them to him.

Senator Flynn: You could not.

Senator Olson: He knows them, as do I.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Would the Honourable Senator Bonnell accept a question?

Senator Bonnell: Yes.

An Hon. Senator: Let’s get on with the vote!

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, this is completely out of order, but if the house agrees, it is fine.

An Hon. Senator: Let’s have the vote now.

Senator Olson: They do not care what is in order. They do what Senator Flynn says.

Senator MacEachen: I will consent, but it is a bad precedent and bad practice.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, that the bill, as amended, be read the third time now.

Is it your pleasure honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say “yea”?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion please say “nay”?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion the “yeas” have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I do not expect His Honour to decide now on the question I am about to raise, but I think this should be considered by the Senate. The Senate should give consideration to whether it is proper for a senator to move a motion and then abstain from voting, which I think would invalidate the motion in the first instance.

I do not ask for a decision now, but I ask that this point be considered seriously, as it affects the procedures of the Senate. I cannot understand how a senator can move a motion, have the motion seconded, and then abstain from voting on the motion.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, unlike the House of Commons, there is provision in the rules of the Senate for honourable senators to abstain from voting in certain circumstances. The rules also provide that honourable senators may make a brief explanation of their reasons for abstaining.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, on a point of order: That rule is no longer in effect. The rule was amended, and a senator does not now have to explain why he is abstaining from voting.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if my honourable friend is correct, then I regret that I misunderstood the rule, but there is certainly a rule that enables honourable senators to abstain from voting. Indeed, the Speaker calls for abstentions after he calls for the yeas and nays on votes in the Senate.

With the indulgence of the Senate, I will simply state that the Senate should not be surprised, in view of the statement I made yesterday and again today, at the attitude of my colleagues and myself to this bill, as amended.

We have opposed the amendments that the majority in the Senate have attached to this bill, and therefore we are opposed to the bill, as amended. Nevertheless, the appropriate course is to let the bill emerge from the Senate so that the House of Commons may pass judgment on the bill, as amended. For that reason I and my colleagues took the decision to abstain from voting.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: With the indulgence of the Senate!

Senator MacEachen: Yes, with the indulgence of the Senate. I thank you for your help.

The Honourable Senator Murray stated that we ought not to be surprised at the decision taken. I must say that I am surprised, in light of the statement made just before the break by the Leader of the Government that it was not his intention to permit the bill to be killed, and that it was his desire that it be moved forward for consideration by the House of Commons. So, I am surprised at the reversal of the position in such a very short time.

However, I think what ought to be pointed out is that if all members of the Senate had taken the position taken by the members of the government—namely, to sit in their seats—of course, the bill would have been killed. The action they took would have had the effect, in the absence of responsible conduct on this side of the house, of killing the government bill.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the position of—

Senator Steuart: With the indulgence of the Senate!

Senator Murray: Yes, with the indulgence of the Senate. My position and that of my colleagues in abstaining on this vote was perfectly consistent with the statements I had made, namely, that we would not stop the bill from emerging from the Senate so that judgment might be passed upon it by the members of the House of Commons. The vote in favour of the bill made by my honourable friends opposite is perfectly consistent with their position. They, after all, had amended the bill to their satisfaction.

MESSAGE TO COMMONS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, with no indulgence—

Senator Frith: We must be careful not to overindulge!

Senator Doody: Too late!

Senator Bonnell: —I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Côtteau:

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House of the recommended amendments, observations, and recommendations on general patent law amendments as contained in the Seventh Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No. On division.

Senator Flynn: It is a bad precedent, but, out of courtesy and to obtain forgiveness from Senator Bonnell—

Senator Frith: We have done it before!

Senator Doody: To gain more indulgence!

Senator McElman: Since Senator Flynn has already requested a vote today, would he like another recorded vote on this one?

Senator Flynn: Pardon me? I did not get it.

Senator McElman: You did not get it? That is all right; you did not get a lot today!

Senator Flynn: Not from you, anyway.

Motion agreed to, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I will not impose any further on the time of honourable senators today. I ask that the item stand in my name.

Order stands.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Senator Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, at the last meeting of the Committee of the Whole we distributed a proposed report which had emanated from the steering committee and was proposed to the Committee of the Whole for consideration. There were a number of amendments proposed in that report, and at the moment amended copies are being distributed to you.

Is it your wish to proceed with the consideration of this report?

Senator Doody: Absolutely!

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Are there any discussions on the report?

Senator Doody: Yes. I have a number of problems with the report, Mr. Chairman, and one of them is the cost involved. Assuming that this carries—and things put forward by honourable members opposite usually carry—there will be a cost involved in this. I assume that the rules set forth by the Internal Economy Committee will apply to this suggested task force, which is an unfortunate name, I think, for a group of parliamentarians who are going forward. We had some problem with logistics a little while ago; I think this one is even more a militaristic than a logistical question. We might have some people who will hear some opinions; why they should be called a task force escapes me. Nevertheless, that might well be carried.

What is more important is the cost of it. When will the budget be prepared? Who will consider it? When will it be considered? And if we approve all of this today, will the Senate have some input into the budget approval? This is a Committee of the Whole, and I presume that in respect of a budget it is no different than any other committee—although perhaps it is.

I have never seen a Committee of the Whole being involved in interrogation or in an investigation before. The Committees of the Whole that I was involved in back in the legislature to which I belonged prior to coming here dealt with legislation only in a clause-by-clause examination. All of the things that we are doing here now are breaking new ground in terms of the work of a Committee of the Whole. How the budget is handled, who approves it, and how it is approved is a real question and a serious one.

Another item that bothers me is the second last item in the report. It states:

That the Task Force be authorized to continue its inquiry even though the session may be prorogued;—

In ordinary parliamentary parlance, as I understand it, if a session is prorogued, then all committees cease to exist. I know that there is a grey area in here as to whether or not that applies to the Senate, because obviously the Senate, in some respects, continues to exist—at least, I gather at the end of every month, when the cheque arrives, that the Senate must continue to exist. My understanding was, having been appointed until age 75, that that will continue—barring some act of God or the NDP!

In any event, the fact remains that—

An Hon. Senator: The act of the devil!

Senator Doody: That is almost synonymous! I just came from St. John's East.

I would like some clarification on that point. The thought of the committee continuing on through prorogation does not terrify me as much as the thought of the Senate once again implementing some order which is incorrect, or which we cannot legally or constitutionally justify. We should be clear on what we are doing in this area before we go forward with it. If Parliament is prorogued and a Senate committee does have the authority to sit, then surely it would be foolhardy for us to publicly proclaim that we will do it anyway. I would like some clarification on that point and some assurance from knowledgeable authorities that this is in order.

The idea of travelling north has been recommended by some senators who feel strongly about it; I am open on that. I personally do not think it is necessary, but then, again, I am not from the north. I am from another part of the country. These are my comments on the matter, Mr. Chairman, and I leave other senators to say what they wish.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I will respond to the two points raised by Senator Doody. Considering the first one about expenses, I believe that we have a consensus that senators prefer to give final approval on work of a committee or the establishment of a committee when they have some idea as to the cost. I can see no reason why we should not have it understood that if we adopt this report, and if it is accepted by the Senate, we will stand the order until we have a budget to look at. We will not vote on it until we have a budget. That is on the first point.

On the second point about committees surviving prorogation, there is no question that they do not. The only question is whether Parliament or one of the houses will agree that one of their committees survive prorogation. The only example that occurs to me on the spot is that there have been agreements regarding legislation. Legislation dies on the order paper in the case of prorogation, but there have been examples of the house agreeing, by unanimous consent, that bills will not be dropped from the order paper.

Honourable senators, I do not particularly want to have a set-to about this. I would suggest we finesse the whole thing by dropping the provision regarding proroguing until we have had a chance to look at the question. Later, if we decide that it would be all right to do so, we can put a separate motion authorizing the task force and the committee to continue its work even in the case of prorogation. I suggest, for the moment, that we do not do so.

On the question of costs, I suggest that we wait until we have seen a budget from the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. In the meantime I suggest we give the Committee of the Whole authority to prepare a budget, but that it be understood we will not actually adopt the report in the Senate until we have seen a budget.

Senator Doody: I thank Senator Frith for that. For me, at least, that is satisfactory, but there may be others who have other ideas.

[Senator Doody.]

On the question of the budget, I know that the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders laboured long and hard trying to differentiate between the budgets of standing committees and the budgets of special committees. Now we are into a budget for a Committee of the Whole. I do not know if we would want to call it a standing committee or not. It certainly has never been classified as such in the list of standing committees under our rules or any other set of rules. I think we are into a completely different situation with a Committee of the Whole. How the Senate chooses to deal with a budget of the Committee of the Whole is going to be interesting. Will all 103 of us sit around and discuss the budget, or should only the steering committee handle the budget? We are into an area that has never been examined. Every step we take takes us farther down the road of changing the use of the Committee of the Whole.

Honourable senators, I hate to say, "I told you so," but we embarked on this with the reference of the fisheries boundaries question to a Committee of the Whole and now we are discussing this constitutional matter. We are now getting into a deeper morass, and I think we are not using Committee of the Whole as originally intended. These matters should really be assigned either to a special or a standing committee and not to Committee of the Whole. Having said, "I told you so," I will sit down.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, at this stage I do not want to get into the general problems raised, because I know Senator Doody's feelings on that. That is, perhaps, as they say, "another show."

In the meantime I suggest we finesse the question of whether it is a standing committee or not by agreeing that we will apply the principle—that is, no vote by the Senate authorizing it until we have a budget.

Senator Flynn: I understand that some representatives from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are to appear before the joint committee next week or the week after. That is a fact which may have a bearing on the budget and even on the work of the task force. Perhaps we should wait until we know what has transpired in the joint committee before making a decision.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I have been in contact with many people in the Yukon on this matter. I would like to assure Senator Flynn that someone from the Yukon may be appearing before the joint committee, but there are many others who want to appear but who have been denied an opportunity to do so, which is the exact reason I want this committee to go to the north.

I would like to say to Senator Flynn that his people were represented at the signing of the Meech Lake accord by his premier; ours were not represented.

Senator Flynn: You were represented by the Government of Canada.

Senator Lucier: No, we were not. In fact, even the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is our representative, was not there.

Senator Flynn: The Prime Minister was there.

Senator Marshall: When we say, "a task force of the Committee of the Whole," does that mean representatives of the whole committee, or would the task force constitute the whole Senate?

Senator Frith: No, they would be delegated.

Senator Marshall: Could it be any number?

Senator Frith: The number eight is stipulated.

Senator Doody: Five Tories and three Liberals!

The Chairman: The task force will report back to the Committee of the Whole.

Honourable senators, perhaps we should consider things in order.

There has been a suggestion that we might drop the second last paragraph regarding the question of the committee operating during prorogation. I believe Senator Frith suggested he would be prepared to recommend that.

Senator Frith: Yes, I would be prepared to make such a recommendation.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the second last paragraph be deleted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: On the question of the budget, my understanding is that if you look at paragraph 5, which reads:

That the rules and procedures applicable in committees apply to the Task Force;

I presume that would mean that the budgeting procedures would be the normal budgeting procedures for committees—that is, if this is approved, then the steering committee will approve a budget; the budget will be submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration; if and when the budget is approved by that committee, it will come back to the Senate for approval; and then we can proceed.

Senator Doody: Are those the rules that apply to a standing committee or to a special committee? As I remember it, we have two sets of budgetary rules in the standing orders. One set of rules applies to standing committees and one set applies to special committees, or even a committee that takes on a special project. Surely this is a special project that is being taken on by the Committee of the Whole which falls into neither category. I am not trying to obstruct the proceedings.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, at this point can we agree to the following procedure: Once this motion is passed, a budget will be prepared and presented to the steering committee; if the steering committee agrees with that budget, it will then be presented to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration; and then it will be presented to the Senate for approval. Is that an agreeable procedure?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: I believe that follows the rules we have for special committees.

Senator Doody: I would agree on the understanding that this does not constitute the Committee of the Whole as a special committee, that we are not going backwards into a new parliamentary procedure.

The Chairman: No, this is a procedure to cover this particular decision of the Committee of the Whole. Is that an agreeable procedure?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Are there any other comments on the report?

Senator Frith: I move that the report be adopted.

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Lucier, that the report be adopted. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion.

Motion agreed to.

The Chairman: Is there any further business before the committee?

Senator Frith: I think not. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, respectfully presents the following report:

The Committee of the Whole to which was referred the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, recommends that a Task Force of the Committee of the Whole, to be known as the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, be established to hear representations thereon;

That the Task Force be composed of eight Senators, three of whom shall be nominated by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and five of whom shall be nominated by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate;

That the Task Force be authorized to send for persons, papers and records; to examine witnesses; to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by it;

That the Task Force be authorized to engage the services of such clerical, technical and other personnel as it deems necessary;

That the rules and procedures applicable in committees apply to the Task Force;

That changes in the membership of the Task Force shall be made pursuant to Rule 66(4) of the Rules of the Senate;

That the Task Force be empowered to adjourn from place to place in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories; and

That the Task Force be instructed to present its report to the Committee of the Whole no later than October 15, 1987.

The committee has also directed me to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Senator Frith: I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

• (-1)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, in order to permit the staff to prepare the budget, would the Senate be agreeable to the adoption of the report at this point? In that way work can carry on, and at the next meeting of the steering committee a budget could be presented.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I would like to go on record as saying that, yes, we allow this to happen and, yes, it is by some grace and a little indulgence.

Senator Molgat: With both leave and indulgence, then—

Senator Doody: And grace.

Senator Molgat: —I move that the report of the committee be adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to and report adopted.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON FEASIBILITY OF "SNOWBIRDS" VISIT TO NATO ALLIES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Third Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence (visit by air demonstration team the "Snowbirds" to Europe), presented in the Senate on 6th July, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Lafond).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few remarks on the subject matter of the third report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence, which was presented in this chamber on July 6, 1987, the particulars of which are to be found on page 1618 of the Debates of the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): This order stands in the name of Senator Lafond.

Senator Bosa: He yielded to me.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not want to be difficult, but this order does stand in the name of Senator Lafond. I think that Senator Bosa or somebody ought to give us some assurance that Senator Lafond agrees to having this step taken. Once again, we do not want to establish a precedent. If everyone were to stand up whenever he or she wished to speak on somebody else's order, we would have difficulties. I do not want to ground the "Snowbirds" at all, however.

Senator Bosa: I can assure honourable senators that Senator Lafond has given me permission to go ahead with these remarks. Besides, we can still stand the motion in his name after I have spoken.

Hon. Jack Marshall: As deputy chairman of the Defence Committee, I can say that I hear those words and I give them authority.

Senator Bosa: First, I should like to thank the chairman, Senator Paul Lafond, and the other members of the committee for having considered so expeditiously the request by the Senate to examine the feasibility, logistics and merits of a visit by the Canadian air demonstration team, the "Snowbirds", to our NATO allies in Europe in the near future.

I read the minutes of the committee and I am pleased that Brigadier-General Jean Veronneau, Director General of Air Doctrine and Operations at National Defence Headquarters, was able to provide the members of the committee with much pertinent information concerning this initiative. My profound regret is that I could not be present at the committee meeting when it took place, as I was at Friuli, Italy, at the time, to receive an award from the President of the UNICEF committee of that region.

General Veronneau outlined some areas of concern, such as the costs involved in moving the Tutor, the aircraft used by the "Snowbirds", to Europe by air and the difficulties in moving aircraft from seaport to airfield if transportation were to take place by ship. He also made reference to the fact that an absence for some weeks from Canada of the "Snowbirds" would disrupt the Canadian tour season. The general further stated that a European tour could be accomplished, but that it does not have the support at this time of the Commander of Air Command or of the Chief of Defence Staff.

I am grateful to General Veronneau and Major General R.W. Morton, Chief of Air Doctrine and Operations, with whom I first discussed this initiative, and all other persons who took part in studying this matter. I would like to ask the generals and the Commander of Air Command, General Ashley, not to close the file until they have had an opportunity to consider new information, which has come to light only today, concerning very attractive shipping costs and other logistical information which would make the proposition of the "Snowbirds" performing in Europe possible and reasonable.

I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the committee, Senator Paul Lafond, and he, too, along with all members of the committee, I am sure, would be interested in the response of the military to this new information. I am looking forward to discussing this matter with the appropriate officials in the very near future in order to bring it to a conclusion.

On motion of Senator Marshall, for Senator Lafond, debate adjourned.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22

MOTION TO GIVE SPECIAL COMMITTEE POWER TO ENGAGE SERVICES WITHDRAWN

On the calling of Motion No. 3:

By the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as are necessary.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): With leave, honourable senators, I should like to withdraw this motion. It has already been covered by the report of the committee that has been adopted by the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall be moving a motion to adjourn to September 15, on the usual understanding that if legislation of importance comes to us from the other place, then we will be subject to the normal recall to which we are always subject. I simply thought I should mention that.

Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 15, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 15, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, August 28, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL, 1987

CONCURRENCE BY COMMONS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-18, respecting national transportation.

CONCURRENCE BY COMMONS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-19, respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings.

CRIMINAL CODE

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS BILL, 1987

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-85, to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1988 (Sessional Paper No. 332-557).

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Fernand E. Leblanc: Honourable Senators, I understand from the Treasury Board that there is no urgency to consider the Supplementary Estimates (B) which have been tabled as the bill to follow will reach us only in December with Supplementary Estimates (C).

It is my understanding that the committee which I have the honour of chairing will be authorized to consider these estimates, but also that there is no urgency as the bill will not be tabled before December.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next, 2nd September 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF CONCERNS OF MILITARY FAMILIES— STATUS OF REPORT AND NATURE OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Perhaps he would permit me to preface it by congratulating the minister and his colleagues in the government on the appointment of Dr. Geraldine Kenney-Wallace as the new President of the Science Council of Canada. She is a distinguished professor of physics and chemistry at the University of Toronto, has a fine sense of organization and relations with business and other sectors, and is a first-rate person. I think it is an excellent appointment and that we will all benefit from her public service in this capacity.

My question concerns the committee which the government appointed this summer to study concerns of the families of military members. The committee was chaired by Professor Desmond Morton of Erindale College. The committee held hearings at several bases across the country and had some consultations. Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether the report of that committee has been received, and, if so, what is the nature of the recommendations?

Senator Marsden: I wonder if the Leader of the Government could find out, when he makes those inquiries, whether the report will be tabled here or in the other place so that we can see the nature of those recommendations.

Senator Murray: I shall do that, honourable senators.

REFUGEES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATIONS ON BILL C-84— EMERGENCY LEGISLATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. On August 12 I asked the leader about Bill C-84. In response to my question he said:

That bill has not been submitted to members of provincial governments nor have specific provisions been canvassed in advance with members of provincial governments.

I have since received notes of the honourable leader given to the Special Joint Commons and Senate Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord. On page 14 of his comments he stated, under the heading "Immigration":

Quebec also has a fundamental concern with immigration, which is an area of shared legislative jurisdiction with federal paramountcy.

Under its rules the other place was called back this summer on the basis of a national emergency. Did the government at any time, since it shares jurisdiction with the provinces, get any indication from the provinces that in fact the issue which provoked the bill, which was the entry into Canada of 174 people, was an emergency, and, since the introduction of that bill in the other place, has the leader received any confirmation that there is or was an emergency?

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question with regard to shared responsibility. The persons who prompted the bill were, after their screening, landed, if you will, in the province of Ontario. Does the Leader of the Government not think that, because of this shared responsibility, he should have at some point canvassed the issue with the Province of Ontario or the other provinces where some of these refugee claimants were subsequently landed?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the nature of the emergency is again a matter for debate. What we have here is a situation in which our practices, laws and policies relating to immigration—and indeed the rights of people who come here either as immigrants or as genuine refugees—are all being cast into some doubt by the unexpected arrival of boatloads of people, many of whom have no documents showing refugee status and claim that they have come directly from a particular country when, as it has turned out in other cases, they are not coming from that country but from a third country. Such matters threaten to throw the whole immigration regime into some confusion, to put it mildly. How urgent this matter is in the mind of the honourable senator or in the minds of the members of the government is a matter we can debate at the appropriate time. The government is not in any doubt as to the need to act quickly and firmly on this matter.

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, I still have a problem with the leader's answer. Is he saying that it is the intent of the Lang-Cloutier agreement, the subsequent Andras-

Bienvenue agreement and the Cullen-Couture agreement with respect to immigration that, for instance, the Government of Quebec should not have prior notice with respect to the entry of immigrants into that province? I do not follow the leader's reasoning that this is not a matter for the provinces.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend's several questions point up the need to discuss this matter in a more comprehensive way in the appropriate committee or, indeed, here in the chamber during debate on the bill. My friend is mixing up the situation with regard to immigrants and the situation with regard to refugees. My statement with regard to refugees is that in accordance with the law and in accordance with the agreements that we have, as it happens, with Quebec and the other provinces, it is the federal government that has the exclusive right to decide on refugee claimants in Canada, and that is what we are dealing with in Bill C-84.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987 CROP YEAR

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Minister of Agriculture has indicated his approval in principle of a proposal for a $3 billion deficiency payment for this year's crop. I am wondering if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could give us an indication—

Senator Fairbairn: A payment of $3 billion. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicate to us when we might expect a final decision on this matter, rather than a statement of principle from the minister or from himself?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must confess that I am unaware of the basis on which my honourable friend attributes that statement to the Minister of Agriculture. I have no doubt that she has some basis for the question, but I am not aware of the statement and would have to consult with Mr. Wise on it.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, indeed the basis for the statement is some comments that were made by the minister when meeting with farm leaders in Winnipeg yesterday. I would be glad to send the report of that meeting to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Also, I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate, on behalf of those of us from western Canada, if he would support a generous deficiency payment of this nature when that matter comes before cabinet, since this matter is of absolutely vital importance to the farmers of western Canada.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator knows better than to ask me to commit myself to advocate or support a particular formula for assistance to farmers when the cabinet is studying—as I am sure it will—various options. Again, I have not seen the statement attributed to my colleague, Mr. Wise, in which Senator Fairbairn quotes him as committing the government to a $3 billion payment. I think I would want to discuss that matter with Mr. Wise before replying further.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In order that the public at large and the farmers in particular may know, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate would advise us whether or not a deficiency program is under active consideration now by the government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in view of the statements that have been attributed today to my colleague, I think I should take that question as notice.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate can again take that question as notice, as he has been doing for the last four or five months, while the patient starves to death. The farmers would like to know whether this government intends to institute a program similar to last year's program. I am not asking about the amount, since it seems to disturb the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the amount is $1 billion or $3 billion. However, he will recall, I am sure, that the provincial premiers had a meeting in Humboldt, Saskatchewan, earlier this year, where, after consideration, they announced that the absolute minimum payment would be $1.6 billion, simply because the price of grain had deteriorated by at least that much since the 1986 crop year. I am now asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not the government is actively considering a program of this nature, the details of which, of course, can be announced when they are ready.

I might also tell the minister that the Province of Alberta has, in fact, restored the assistance that they provided in 1986 under the Crop Insurance Program. I will not go into the details of that, but it simply means that they have restored the level of the Crop Insurance Program for 1987, as they did in 1986 and 1985. Will the federal government have a program for the 1987 crop? Is it under active consideration? Surely the minister will realize that it is time the farmers were given some indication of whether or not this government is going to have a program.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the farmers will be given a timely indication of what the policy of the government is in this regard.

Senator Olson: Then the obvious question is: What does "timely" mean? The minister is probably not aware—and I would be very happy to help him understand—that we have now arrived at the harvest season of the crop and the price has not changed. In fact, on August 1 it went down a further 18 per cent. It was low enough before, but the government reduced the price by a further 18 per cent on August 1, and as much as 27 per cent on barley on the initial payments, which is the only floor price in existence.

Therefore, could we have some indication of what he means by "timely?" When can the farmers expect to know whether or not they are going to have this kind of program?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend cannot expect me to go beyond the statements that have already been made by Mr. Mayer and Mr. Wise on this matter. The Prime Minister has met with the farm leaders and the ministers have met with the farm leaders and with their provincial counterparts. When we are ready to announce a program in this respect, it will be announced. Meanwhile, I certainly intend to verify the remarks that have been attributed to Mr. Wise by the newspapers and by our colleague, Senator Fairbairn.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS CANADA DAY

PROVINCIAL/TERRITORIAL COMMITTEES—NOMINATION OF PRESIDENTS AND VICE-PRESIDENTS

Question No. 20 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall

26th May, 1987—With reference to News Release S-04/87-130 from the Office of the Secretary of State naming Canadians to serve as Presidents and Vice-presidents of the 1987 Canada Day Provincial/Territorial Committees, what are the names of those Canadians or organizations who are asked to submit nominees?

Reply by the Secretary of State of Canada:

Given that the Canada Day program operates on a decentralized model, emphasis is placed on the decision-making process being exercised at a regional level. The intent is to strengthen the role of the regions in the three key stages of development—planning, celebration and evaluation.

From region to region, the concerns and needs vary with regard to the planning and actual delivery of Canada Day events. Therefore, the position of president must reflect this reality and be able to draw on the strengths of the many communities within the province or territory. In this regard, the regional directors of the Department of the Secretary of State, who have daily contact with these client groups, are actively consulted and their views sought as to those individuals who could provide such leadership. In many instances, the presidents were reappointed, having served in the position in previous years.

In appointing vice-presidents, both the regional directors and the presidents were consulted. Once again, a key consideration is the strengths that he or she can bring to the committee with regard to encouraging as broad a base as possible for involvement from all groups and regions of the province or territory.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

BREAKDOWN OF FUNDING AND MONITORING OF DISTRIBUTION

Question No. 21 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Jack Marshall

26th May, 1987—1. What is the breakdown of funding for post-secondary education of $93.7 million by federal district in the Province of Newfoundland?

2. If the allocation of funding is directed to provincial governments, under what arrangement is monitoring of distribution of funds made to insure equality?

Reply by the Secretary of State of Canada:

1. Federal support is provided on the basis of clear respect for provincial jurisdiction in the area of post-secondary education. The Government of Canada recognizes the constitutional right of provincial governments to determine how educational institutions within their boundaries are operated and financed. Accordingly, Established Programs Financing transfers to each province in respect of post-secondary education are provided as part of a block contribution which is allocated by the provincial governments according to their own priorities. The following table provides a breakdown of the funding for post-secondary education provided to the Province of Newfoundland in the form of cash payments and tax transfers during the last four fiscal years:

Cash	56.1	59.7	60.6	60.2
Tax	37.6	40.6	42.9	47.1
TOTAL	93.7	100.3	103.5	107.3

2. In accordance with the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, the Secretary of State must present before each House of Parliament not later than the fifth sitting day of that House following the end of each fiscal year a report for the previous fiscal year. The Minister must report on: (1) cash contributions and total equalized tax transfers in respect of the post-secondary education financing program applicable to each province; (2) expenditures by each province on post-secondary education; (3) any other federal programs of support to or involvement in post-secondary education; (4) the relationship between such federal contributions, transfers and programs and Canada's educational and economic goals; and (5) the results of any consultations by or on behalf of the Secretary of State with the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada relating to the definition of national purposes to be served by post-secondary education and the means by which the governments of Canada and the provinces will achieve those purposes. The 1985-86 report on Federal and Provincial Support to Post-Secondary Education in Canada was tabled in Parliament on February 6, 1987.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I request that Bill C-85 be dealt with as the first order of business?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that we deal with Bill C-85 now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS BILL, 1987

SECOND READING

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations) moved the second reading of Bill C-85, to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable Senators, first, on behalf of the government, I wish to thank you for having accepted this unexpected recall so readily. I also want to beg your forgiveness for this fast recall.

As you may know, the negotiations between the parties involved broke off definitely only yesterday morning.

I therefore ask your indulgence in the knowledge that you will support the bill introduced by the government to put an end to this labour conflict.

[English]

Honourable senators, this bill is in four parts, which reflects the fact that there are four labour disputes between the national railways and their unions that have now reached a critical stage. One of those disputes has culminated, as honourable senators know, in a national rail strike.

• (1430)

This bill, on the day after it receives Royal Assent, will end that strike. It will extend the previous collective agreement which expired on December 31, 1986. It will provide arbitration of the collective bargaining dispute by an arbitrator, who will bring in recommendations on the outstanding matters within 60 days, recommendations which will be incorporated into the previous collective agreement with the amended agreement taking effect January 1, 1987.

This bill also contains provisions to settle the other three disputes, if necessary. Those provisions are the same as those which apply to the strikers—in other words, by arbitration. Those parts of the bill dealing with those three disputes will come into force not on the day after Royal Assent but following proclamation.

The four disputes comprise the main Associated Railway Union group, representing some 48,000 railway workers in nine separate unions and negotiating jointly with CN and CP. This is the group that is now on strike. Then there are two smaller groups of railway shopcraft employees represented by member unions of the Canadian Council of Railway Shopcraft unions, which is negotiating separately with each of the two companies. Finally, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is negotiating separately on behalf of its members employed by CN.

The Associated Railway Union group declared a strike at midnight, Sunday, August 23. This strike, as honourable senators are aware, has paralyzed rail transportation and placed key sectors of the Canadian economy in jeopardy. It is the conclusion of the government that, notwithstanding every effort and every assistance provided to the parties to encourage them to lead them to reach an agreement on their own, no reasonable prospect exists for a negotiated settlement to this current work stoppage. So the government had no alternative but to introduce this bill.

In the case of the shopcraft unions, the members of those unions have now acquired strike rights, although they have not exercised those rights. Their members are now subject to lay-off as a result of the shutdown of railway operations. With regard to the dispute involving the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, those parties will acquire strike and lock-out rights at midnight, August 31.

Honourable senators, let me briefly take you through a chronology of the events that have led to the strike with which we are dealing immediately. The previous collective agreement, as I indicated, expired on December 31, 1986. Following notices of dispute filed by the parties in January of this year, a conciliation officer was appointed. He endeavoured to assist in the resolution of the dispute, but no settlement was achieved. Then on March 4, Mr. Douglas C. Stanley of Fredericton and Ottawa was appointed as a conciliation commissioner. In the ensuing months Mr. Stanley did his best to conciliate the differences between the parties, again without success. On August 10 Mr. Stanley's report was released. It was definitive with respect to wages, rejecting the positions of both parties and, instead, recommending a monetary settlement that had been already agreed to in other segments of the railway industry, in VIA Rail and the Ontario Northland Railway. In other areas, notably contracting out and employee security, the commissioner was less definitive, but he still suggested some constructive avenues for pursuing the compromises and trade-offs that would be necessary to reach an agreement.

The initial reactions of the parties to Commissioner Stanley's report were somewhat encouraging. In fact, on August 13 the parties made a joint request for mediation assistance. On the very next day the minister, Mr. Cadieux, appointed Mr. M.K. Carson as mediator, pursuant to section 195 of the Canada Labour Code. Mr. Carson, as many honourable senators know, is an experienced mediator, especially in the railway field, and is a former railway employee himself. He commenced mediation meetings in Montreal on Monday, August 17, and worked constantly with the parties throughout that week. I am informed that some significant progress was made in the early part of the week, but that it became clear to him on Saturday, August 22, that a settlement could not be reached before the strike deadline that had been set by the unions for midnight, August 23. So Mr. Carson regrettably adjourned the mediation meetings.

Then on Monday of this week, in the face of the present strike, the parties were summoned to Ottawa for one final attempt at mediation. Mr. Carson's services were made available to the parties. In addition to that, the Associate Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. Bill Kelly, joined the meetings. Mr. Kelly led this week's meetings in characteristic fashion, keeping the railway and the union negotiators hard at work through Tuesday night and well into Wednesday evening. I am informed that no reasonable avenue for settlement was left unexplored during the intensive and exhaustive mediation sessions. In spite of the urgency, the parties did not take advantage of that final opportunity to settle their differences and end the dispute.

I may say that in the case of the three other disputes, for which we are providing an imposed settlement, if necessary, there is also a history of eight months of attempts to conciliate. Unfortunately, these efforts have not yet succeeded in achieving settlements. We do not wish to remove from the parties in these other three disputes the prospect, even at this late hour, of freely negotiating their own settlements, but the government and Parliament cannot ignore the potential for further disruption of the nation's rail services and of the nation's economy, which these disputes represent. Hence, if necessary, the provisions in this bill will deal with these three disputes, as the provisions of the bill deal with the strike that is under way, by having proclaimed at an appropriate time the three relevant sections of the bill.

Let me take just a moment to summarize the provisions of the bill. Initially, the bill provides that each affected railway company shall forthwith resume operations of its railway and subsidiary services; every employee shall forthwith resume his or her duties when so required; each affected union and officer or representative of those unions shall forthwith give notice to their members to facilitate the required resumption of railway operations and of employment duties; no railway company or any of its officers or representatives shall impede an employee from resuming employment duties when required or in any way discipline any employee for having been on strike prior to the coming into force of this legislation. These provisions are designed to fulfill the main purpose of the bill, to restore the rail service operations that are of key importance to our economy.

Beyond the resumption of rail operations, the bill, as I have indicated, provides for the extension of each relevant collective agreement and for the settlement of the collective bargaining disputes by arbitration. Initially, each collective agreement will be extended for two years, that is, to December 31, 1988, with the provision that this term could be extended at the discretion of the arbitrator for a period of up to one additional year.

The arbitrator, as I have indicated, will be required to decide all matters referred within 60 days, although there is discretion vested in the minister to extend this period, if necessary. The report of the arbitrator shall be prepared in a form that will enable its incorporation into the appropriate collective agreements and, as I have said, the amended agreement will be deemed to have effect as of January 1, 1987.

Honourable senators, I am sure I need not take your time to discuss at any length the importance of the railways to our national economy or the terribly disruptive effect that a rail strike has on our economy. Suffice it to say that in this country some 40 per cent of all freight tonnage moved is accounted for by the railways. More importantly, the producers of some commodities are virtually tied to rail transportation in order to move their products to markets economically. Western grain farmers are the obvious example of this. The producers of other bulk products in western Canada and in other regions are also seriously affected by a disruption of rail traffic. Manufacturers, exporters, importers and just about every sector of the economy are in some significant way harmed by a cessation of rail services.

Increasingly, commuters in our large urban centres have come to rely on rail passenger services to take them to and from their places of work. The situation in this respect is very serious, especially in Montreal and Toronto.

In addition to the direct impact of the halting of rail services, there is also the immeasurable harm done by the so-called ripple effect of a rail strike. Industries which cannot obtain parts or which cannot ship their goods are required to shut down production and lay off employees. This ripple effect is probably the most insidious and the most damaging to the overall economy. The longer a rail strike lasts, the more far-reaching the impact on Canadians throughout the country.

VIA Rail employees, who have already reached an agreement and renewed their collective agreements without any work stoppage, have already been subject to layoffs. Seafarers on the Great Lakes system and in our coastal waters could be among the next groups to feel the effect. Then there are longshoremen and other port workers. It may take somewhat longer for the impact to be felt in other areas of trade and commerce, but we all know that if a work stoppage is allowed to continue, the effect will inevitably spread throughout the production and distribution chain.

Interfering with the collective bargaining process is a very unpleasant duty that parliamentarians are sometimes called upon to perform. None of us likes it. All of us who are proud of Canada's record in labour management relations, including a pretty good record on the railways, regret the necessity to have to take this kind of action. Indeed, this is only the fourth time in 37 years that Parliament has been asked to terminate a railway work stoppage. Parliament—in those cases in the past, as in the present case—is called upon to act only after the parties to the dispute have been given every opportunity and every assistance to settle the dispute by themselves. Parliament—in those cases in the past, as in the present case—is called upon to act only when it is obvious that a continuation of the dispute would be at the expense of the national interest. That is what is at stake here.

Our colleagues in the House of Commons have acted expeditiously on this bill. It is because I am convinced of the urgency of the matter and of the reasonableness of the government's position with this bill that I appeal with some confidence to the Senate to do likewise, and I commend this bill to your support this afternoon.

I may say, honourable senators, that my colleague, the Minister of Labour, is on call—indeed, is in or near the gallery, and is prepared to come into the chamber at the invitation of honourable senators, if it is their wish to have this matter referred to Committee of the Whole this afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at the outset I will comment on Senator Murray's appreciation for our attendance, as I think he put it. I think we all know that there has been some doubt whether the House of Commons ought to have been called back some weeks or so ago with reference to Bill C-84, and whether there were other reasons for calling the House of Commons back. There can certainly be no complaint about Parliament being called back for the purpose of dealing with the emergency that is the subject matter of Bill C-85. Historically, this is exactly the kind of situation in which government finds it must recall Parliament.

As Senator Murray has pointed out, what we have—and I need only touch on it, because I am sure it is evident to all of us—is a clash of two important principles. That is what we are here to deal with. We have all heard the expression, "Two wrongs don't make a right," and, of course, two rights do not make a wrong. But two rights do create problems for legislators, and there are two rights in play here. One is the right of the public to the service of the railroads, and Senator Murray, in some eloquent detail, outlined the many effects of a rail strike. Probably no one person can imagine all the effects that a rail strike has. On the other hand, we have in our country a very important principle, and that is the right to settle industrial disputes by collective bargaining.

The last time these two principles were before legislators was in 1973. Exactly the same problems existed then. On August 31, 1973—almost exactly 14 years ago—the Senate was asked to pass emergency legislation to legislate railroad employees back to work. That was under a Liberal government at the time. From the research I have done I am bound to say that the Conservative opposition in the Senate was most cooperative then, as we Liberals intend to be now.

Another problem, other than the clashing of these two principles, relates to the question of time. Because there is emergency in these cases, the government always asks for fast action. The Liberal government did so in its time and the Conservative government is doing so today. If we have to decide that, on the balance of these two competing principles, the one that must yield is the right to continue collective bargaining, the additional problem that leaves us with is to decide how we, as responsible legislators, can give the workers some assurance that, in sacrificing the principle of continued collective bargaining, we are not excessively interfering with their position. As a matter of fact, that very point was raised on August 31, 1973, when a member of the Conservative opposition in the Senate said:

● (1450)

We are here, of course, because it is urgent for us to legislate an end to this strike, which is seriously damaging the economy and causing significant personal hardship to a great number of Canadians.

This problem should have been dealt with by the government many, many weeks ago. The situation we are now faced with is not new. We knew it was coming... We knew that there was not one chance in a thousand that this dispute between the railway employees and the companies would be settled in the ordinary process of conciliation and mediation. But the government waited and was telling everybody, "We will not interfere; we respect the right to strike. We do not want to do anything about it."

The government was not being sincere. I am convinced the government knew then that it would have to intervene at some time or another.

Honourable senators, that was the criticism that the Conservative opposition in the Senate had of the government of the day in 1973.

Senator Murray: That was before my time.

Senator Frith: I wasn't here either, so I don't know whether that criticism was justified. Since it was a criticism of a Liberal government, the chances are it was not. Senator Flynn, however, was here, and that is what he had to say at the time. He spoke with his usual prescience and his words might very well be applicable here today in criticism of his own government.

Senator Flynn: The minister has always said that he would intervene—that is quite different.

Senator Frith: Senator Flynn went on to say:

We are going to vote for this bill, of course, because we want to end the strike. But how do we know, how can we know, that the conditions under which we are asking the employees to go back are fair? We are just shooting in the dark.

Senator Flynn: That's right.

Senator Frith: The problem underlined by Senator Flynn is the problem that always faces us at a time like this—the dilemma that arises when we have to act quickly because we are facing an emergency, yet we need to know that we have examined the matter carefully enough to ensure that we act with a minimum of damage to the workers.

Honourable senators, there is one other aspect to the problems facing us which is different from the situation in 1973. It is rather ironic that Bills C-18 and C-19 will probably receive Royal Assent today, because those are the two deregulation bills. We know that if we are to take the union's word for it, deregulation is a factor in this strike. Yesterday in the House of Commons the Minister of Transport said that deregulation had nothing to do with this strike. As I recall his words, he said that it had as much to do with this strike as the member from Papineau has to do with the moon. I am not quite clear what particular literary or other reference might be drawn from the relationship between the member from Papineau and the moon, but I am sure the Minister of Transport meant to say that there was very little relationship between them.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Flynn: Well, he has a moon face.

Senator Frith: So does the Minister of Transport, for that matter.

The minister later modified that statement, indicating that he was not prepared to say that deregulation had nothing to do with this legislation but that it was not the sole factor in the strike. If we are to believe the unions, honourable senators, the deregulation program of the government has a great deal to do with this strike. Is that, therefore, an argument against deregulation? I am not advancing at this point any such argument, because those arguments were advanced when we dealt with Bills C-18 and C-19. But I think it would be fair to the unions, honourable senators, if the government were to accept criticism, which was put forward in the consistent and persistent suggestions that were made during the legislative history of Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 suggesting that the government bring in some worker adjustment policies to assist those being harmed by deregulation. Thousands of jobs are at stake here, and the government denies any connection between the absence of worker adjustment policies in its programs, the strike and the unfortunate need for this legislation, which interferes with the collective bargaining process.

Honourable senators, I know that some of my colleagues will have other things to say. Our principal concern is that we are having to interfere with collective bargaining when we wish we did not have to. We are disappointed in other aspects of government policies that may have contributed to the unfortunate need for legislative interference. In particular, however, I repeat that there is a big role played in all of this by the deregulation program, particularly the absence of adjusting programs between the effective date of the deregulation program, which is the first of next year, and the full implementation of it.

I will have some questions for the minister, honourable senators. Regretfully, and with no pleasure at all—except for that to be taken in solving a serious problem, I intend to support this bill.

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, let me first say that I will vote against Bill C-85. On August 4, 1941, I hired on as a CNR fireman. For ten years I shovelled coal, and I am proud of the fact that a blue collar worker is sitting in the Senate of Canada, the greatest house in the world.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Turner: For ten years I shovelled coal and ran automatic stokers, yard engines and passenger trains running between Toronto, Niagara Falls, Sarnia, Owen Sound, Belleville and all points in between. In those days we worked seven days a week. As Senator Sinclair knows, during the war we worked 30 and 31 days a month. If you got your 3,800 miles in and you wanted the day off, the boss would tell you to go to work or sign your resignation form.

Senator Frith: Shame!

Senator Turner: So we worked. I worked 30 and 31 days a month. We had no holidays, because in those days there were no holidays. We had to take a strike vote, as Senator Sinclair knows, to get one week's holidays. The old-timers on the railroad I fired for didn't know what to do with the holidays once they got them.

Honourable senators, I just arrived in town at 3.30 this morning and have not had time to read this bill. But I did receive a couple of calls this morning from the picket line in London, Ontario. The boys there are good, law-abiding citizens. As the late Donald Gordon used to say, "When there is trouble in London, Ontario, there is something wrong, because those boys and ladies are law-abiding citizens."

I have never been on a picket line as far as running trains is concerned, but in 1959-60 Senator Sinclair and I were on opposite sides of the fireman dismissal issue. However, Senator Sinclair suggested, and it was put into the bill, that no employee would lose his job. He had a heart, because he knew that the firemen who would be laid off would lose their homes, would have to leave their wives and families, and possibly many would never get another job because of their age. Senator Sinclair took care of the employees.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Turner: Senator Sinclair was tough—

Senator Leblanc: He still is.

Senator Turner: —but he was fair. This bill is not fair to the workers of the CNR, the CPR and the smaller railroads. That is one of the reasons why I oppose it.

This morning I was asked why the caboose issue was on the table during these negotiations. As you all know, the railways want to run trains without cabooses. The Canadian Transport Commission has held hearings across this country on the matter. Those hearings have been completed, and it is now writing its report. I ask Senator Murray why this issue is on the collective bargaining table. That is question No. 1.

Question No. 2 is: Why was Bill Kelly, who was the highly respected former union leader of the Canadian Trainmen's Association and who is now an Associate Deputy Minister to the Minister of Labour, not put into this dispute at least two or three months before the issue came to a head? Once the boss gets mad and once the union leaders get mad, it creates too much heat out in the country. By that point, and once the employees get thinking about the issue, it is pretty hard to control them.

There are rumours in south-western Ontario that this bill will take effect in 48 hours. If that is true, why the delay? There are other rumours that say that the bill would take effect in 12 hours. In a strike in which I was involved we went to work at midnight, soon after the legislation received Royal Assent.

This bill gives the employer the right to recall workers. Say that a department in London, or for that matter in any city, has 20 employees out on strike; once the bill is given Royal Assent and the strike is over, the companies will begin to recall workers. Suppose the company decides to recall only ten workers. What will happen to the other ten workers? They are not laid off. What will happen to them? Can they collect unemployment insurance? These questions have never been answered.

Another question is: Why are there no guidelines for the arbitrator? Any similar bill introduced by the former government covered the issues that could not be settled by negotiation so that they could be put before the arbitrator. In 1949 both railways struck, and the big issue was the 40-hour work week. What happened? The Prime Minister of the day put the 40-hour work week issue in the bill. It was the irritant, and he took it out of the negotiations and what was left went to the negotiator. Does that not make sense? At the time the railways said that they could not survive, that they would go broke. It is almost 30 years later, and both railroads—in fact, all railroads—are still operating. Why are there no blanket guidelines for the arbitrator? This is another issue which the boys back home would like to know something about, because usually such legislation includes guidelines for the arbitrator. We want them in this bill.

This matter has been going for some time. In September 1986 the unions submitted their demands to the companies. It is almost September 1987. Why has it taken almost one year to settle this dispute? Even at that, it had to go before the House of Commons and is now before the Senate of Canada. Where are the negotiating policies of this government with regard to the railway unions?

Railways will call up an employee and say, "We have to cut you off." That is the term used when they lay off an employee. If that employee were in the Toronto-Belleville-Windsor region, he could bump another employee at another terminal. That employee would have to leave his wife and family—and perhaps his kids are in university—and go from, for example, Belleville to Windsor to work. He has to pay room and board, which comes out of his pay—and let us not forget that the pay is not what you make but is what you take home that pays the bills. After about six or seven months, the employee is called into the office and told, "Sorry, you have to go to Toronto." What does he do with his wife and family? Expenses are high in Toronto. If he sells his house in Belleville and moves to Toronto, he cannot afford the payments on a house there. Rent in Toronto for a two-bedroom is about $1,000 a month. We in this chamber do all right. I look around and I see many distinguished gentlemen with distinguished business careers. I am sure that they would not like to try to live on $25,000 in Toronto. It just cannot be done. There are millions of people, including railway workers, who are trying to survive on a few dollars per year, and it cannot be done. All the employees in the CNR, the CPR and the other railways in Canada are asking for a just and fair deal. This bill does not give them that deal.

The railroad companies are dragging this issue on because they have no desire to settle the dispute that has been on the collective bargaining table for one year. Railroad employees are law abiding citizens, but they can only take so much. I say to Senator Murray and the Conservative Party: You had better make up your mind to amend this bill; otherwise you will not survive the next election.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to intervene briefly in this debate. The consequences of a railway strike and shut down of the railways are particularly disastrous in western Canada because of the bulk commodities that are moved by rail, and can only be moved economically by rail, such as grain, which is a well known story. However, grain is not the only commodity. There are coal, sulfur and lumber, and many other resource industries also depend on the railways to move their products. Of course, these industries are shut down immediately, or almost immediately, when the railways go down. I agree with those who spoke earlier that intervening in any labour dispute in the way Parliament is called upon from time to time to do is not a pleasant business. The conflicts that Senator Frith mentioned are certainly valid and trouble me as much as they do any other member of this chamber.

I would also like to point out that in some sectors of the economy as soon as the railways go back to work the crisis is over and further damage is at least avoided. However, that is not true in the case of a number of commodities. For example, in the grain trade, when there is such a tight and difficult world market for grain, the sales that are lost now will have consequences for a long time into the future. They will affect farmers' incomes for a year and perhaps longer, because we know that there is competition going on at the moment between the United States and the European Economic Community to gain a larger share of the world market. In fact, already some sales have been lost in certain areas, although I suppose an accurate accounting cannot yet be done.

For example, in several other commodities, such as dehydrated hay, which has become a very important export crop in many parts of my province, suppliers have lost significant amounts of money and there is no way of getting that market back. Supplies of those commodities must be available for steady customers every single day; and if those shipments are interrupted, the customers find some alternative source of supply.

In any event, I think most senators are aware of the long list of damages that can be done. Therefore, I want to say that I intend to support the bill in order to have the service restored, though I do have some of the same reservations as were expressed by Senator Turner a few minutes ago. For example, there are no guidelines in this bill for the arbitrators. I can remember that on at least two or three occasions in the other chamber when the restoration of railway service was contained in a bill and brought before that house, the bill was rejected until the government accepted an amendment that included some guidelines as to what the consequences of the arbitration would be. I see Senator Flynn wrinkling his brow as though that were not so, but I say to him that he is not remembering what happened.

Senator Turner: He has a short memory.

Senator Olson: I know that in one case a bill was brought in by the then Liberal government. I was not in the Liberal Party at that time—

Senator Flynn: It has changed a lot.

Senator Olson: Yes, it has changed a lot, but the principle involved in back-to-work legislation has not changed, and Senator Turner pointed that out very well. The problem is that this bill restores the previous agreement for a minimum of two years, and perhaps up to three years. However, if the railways can be the beneficiaries of a delay, that is not fair to the workers, and Senator Turner pointed that out very clearly.

I can remember on one occasion in the past that a bill was brought in which did not even guarantee to the workers that they would receive what the railways had offered. Therefore, it was in the interests of the railways to restore or extend the previous agreement for whatever term, and every day they made hundreds of thousands of dollars. In my opinion, that is not fair, and unfortunately that is the way this bill is also constructed.

Senator Flynn: No!

Senator Olson: It is the way in which this bill is constructed. Senator Flynn can say no, but, although I have not had any longer than anyone else here in this chamber to look carefully at this bill, I am sure that there are no guidelines to the arbitrator in this bill. It says he can do a lot of things, but it does not tell him that there is a minimum of improvements that must be taken into account.

Honourable senators, I will now get back to the point I was making a few minutes ago, and that is that there was a minority government in the House of Commons at the time I was previously speaking of, and the Liberal government could not get the bill passed without the support of some of the members of the opposition. Honourable senators, I am happy to say I was one of those members who supported the government after it proposed the amendment that made the legislation at least reasonably acceptable to the workers who had gone on strike.

Senator Frith: It is a minority government here in the Senate.

Senator Olson: Yes, I understand that, but I am not quite sure I can draw the same parallel.

Senator Flynn: It is not a government at all.

Senator Frith: Good. I hoped you would say that.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I say quite frankly to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that it is clearly a cop-out for the government to come back with a bill and say,

"We are ordering everybody back to work," without any undertakings as to what the consequences will be for the arbitrator to consider both sides of the argument. As I have said, I think the government could have been a little more forthcoming with some ideas of what is "reasonable" and "fair" and put those definitions in the bill so that the workers would know what those expressions meant. I know that there are all sorts of nice words in the bill, but it does not say that the workers are to have a 4 per cent increase or a 1.5 per cent increase; it does not say anything about job security.

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting that the arbitrator might decide to give the workers less than the minimum that was agreed to during the negotiations? Do you think anyone would be that crazy?

Senator Olson: No. Senator Flynn is the only one who is crazy. He is talking about some agreement that was reached during the negotiations. The reason this bill is before us today is because nothing was agreed to during the negotiations.

Senator Flynn: No doubt some offers were made on both sides.

Senator Olson: I understand all that, but I also understand that we expect competent people to be put in charge of the arbitration process. However, there is no assurance given to the workers that, by passing this bill, that will happen. In other words, they must take it as an act of faith that the government will appoint good competent people to do this job. However, no assurance is given, and I think that the workers have a right to expect that the government will put in some guidelines that will guarantee them the minimum improvement, however it might be based.

However, I do not want to have this argument with Senator Flynn, because he has changed course 180 degrees since the last time we debated this kind of bill.

Senator Turner: So what's new?

Senator Olson: I think Senator Flynn pointed out very precisely where he used to stand, and his stand today is 180 degrees different.

Senator Flynn: I still stand where I used to stand.

Senator Olson: You may stand where you used to stand, but now you are looking in the opposite direction. In any event, honourable senators, I did not enter into this debate in order to have an argument with Senator Flynn. The last time we went through this exercise Senator Flynn's advice was not worth very much and probably is not worth very much today. I say to the government that I think that workers have the right to expect that guidelines will be provided in the legislation so that they can take comfort in knowing that there will be a minimum guaranteed to them. That is simply not there in this bill.

● (1520)

Senator Flynn: The minimum would become the maximum. You know that very well.

Senator Olson: No, I do not know that. Honourable senators, I am not going to continue this debate with Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: You might as well.

Senator Olson: I think that there are some very serious weaknesses in this bill. There are things that have been left out by a government that ought to have taken the time and effort to construct the bill so that both sides in the dispute could take some comfort from the fact that they were provided for in the legislation. The legislation provides that they be ordered back to work, that the strike be declared terminated and invalid. There should be something in there, and it just simply is not there. That is an indication of some weaknesses and incompetence by the government that put this bill together.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Murray speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, for the record, let me state that since 1950 Parliament has enacted emergency labour legislation on 18 occasions. On all but three occasions Parliament has extended the life of the previous collective agreement either for a specified period or until the dispute settlement mechanisms that had been put in place had produced a report.

I make that point simply to underline the fact that the legislation that is before honourable senators now is perfectly consistent with the legislation that has been passed by Parliament on most previous occasions. I have said that on all but three occasions Parliament has extended the life of the previous collective agreement.

Let me also state that the dispute that we are dealing with today—I referred to this earlier—has gone from negotiation to very intensive conciliation efforts, and to mediation assistance requested by both parties as recently as two weeks ago. There can be no justifiable criticism of the government for acting too late or for sending in its top relief pitcher too late in the game. The parties themselves were asking for mediation assistance as recently as a week or two ago, and that was done.

It has happened in the past on four occasions, I believe, that Parliament has passed legislation that imposed some kind of monetary settlement. I wonder whether that is what my honourable friends opposite are suggesting today. I am not sure that it is appropriate in a dispute of this kind, where there appear to be quite a number of matters still in dispute, for the cabinet and then Parliament to busy themselves with the details of the settlement. I think that what is being suggested by Senator Turner, and perhaps by Senator Olson, is that we, as a government and as a Parliament, should immerse ourselves in the process so deeply as to substitute our judgment for the judgment that might be made later by an arbitrator as to all the items that are in contention. It seems to me that that is not an appropriate role for the government or Parliament and may create a great many more problems than it solves.

Senator Olson: I did not say that. I said there should be some comfort.

Senator Murray: I would like to make this point. I obviously have not been, nor to my knowledge has any member of the cabinet been, in the room where the negotiations took place or where the conciliation efforts under Douglas Stanley took place or where the mediation assistance under Mr. Carson and Mr. Kelly took place. However, we are informed that significant progress was made on various items. If the parties had made such progress that they could have signed off on a great many matters, then I suppose it would have been open to us to provide for arbitration in the few matters that were left. But that was not the case. The parties were not prepared to sign off, even on those matters where it appears some significant progress was made.

We are left with a situation that none of us likes, where Parliament is called upon to interfere, as it were, in the collective bargaining process, once the parties, after all efforts had been made and all assistance had been given, had found it impossible to come to an agreement. We have the option, as I indicated, of immersing ourselves so deeply in the details as to substitute our judgment for the judgment of a mediator that would be appointed or the option of appointing a mediator and asking that mediator to bring in a report within 60 days, which is the case.

With regard to the criticism made by Senator Olson, may I say that this is unfair to either party in the dispute. The fact is that the arbitrator will bring in his report within 60 days. The amended agreement will become effective as of January 1, 1987, the day after the expiration of the previous agreement. So, really, there is no question of either side—certainly not of the company—profiting from some delay in the implementation of, let us say, a wage increase. The arbitrator will be starting his or her duties almost immediately, as soon as the minister can appoint him or her. The arbitrator will not be completely ignorant of or insensitive to the history of the negotiations. He or she will study the matters and will bring in his or her report, which, if history is any guide, will be a report that company, unions and public can all live with and which will have the effect of reinforcing the decision that we make today to resume operations on our railways.

I need only support that part of Senator Olson's speech in which he referred to the very serious effect on our national economy of any disruption of railway services. It is a most serious matter for our economy, especially, as he points out, in the west where producers are already facing problems with grain prices, potash prices and world market conditions generally. They do not need this extra burden to carry.

The government, after exhausting every effort, has acted in a timely fashion and has brought in this legislation. The House of Commons has acted expeditiously. I do ask the Senate to do likewise and to hear immediately from my colleague, the Minister of Labour, in Committee of the Whole, if it be the wish of the Senate that we proceed in that way.

[Senator Olson.]

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

● (1530)

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, that this bill be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I would like to register my opposition to this bill. I would like that recorded.

Senator Flynn: You may say, "On division," and that is all.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: That can be mentioned on third reading.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, with great respect to my honourable friend, Senator Turner, I think his opposition to the legislation has been clearly articulated on two occasions this afternoon. We have had second reading of the bill and we have had passed a motion to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole.

With leave, I would like to move that the—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as long as it is understood that Senator Turner will have the opportunity to vote against the bill on third reading.

Senator Roblin: Certainly.

Senator Murray: Absolutely, although I hope and expect that the arguments that will be deployed by the Minister of Labour in Committee of the Whole will succeed in persuading Senator Turner to support the legislation on third reading.

We now find that Senator Sinclair is going to vote against the bill.

Senator Sinclair: No!

Senator Murray: I am pleased to hear that we can count on his support this afternoon!

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, with leave, I would like to ask that the Honourable Pierre Cadieux, Minister of Labour, be invited to participate in the deliberations of the Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Murray: I think all members of the committee are acquainted with the Minister of Labour, the Honourable Pierre H. Cadieux.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to introduce to you Mr. P. H. Cadieux, who has been the member in the House of Commons representing the Vaudreuil riding since 1984, and Minister of Labour since June 1986.

[English]

I also believe that members of the committee are well acquainted with his associate deputy minister, Mr. Bill Kelly.

I believe the minister has an opening statement, after which, of course, Mr. Chairman, he will be available to answer questions from honourable senators.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, I wish to welcome you to the Senate and the Committee of the Whole. I think it is your very first visit.

The Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): My second.

The Chairman: Your second. You are, therefore, one of our regulars. You have the floor.

Mr. Cadieux: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Chairman, it may be a little odd for me to give the following comments as an introduction, because they were my final comments in the House of Commons yesterday, after a long study of the bill, but I think they are fairly appropriate, and with your permission I should like to read them. They are as follows:

—it is never with great joy that as Minister of Labour I introduce in the House back-to-work legislation. Unfortunately, it is the second time that I have had to do this, and I do not find any joy in it.

I still believe that our collective bargaining system is probably one of the best in the world. To attest to this fact, and the fact that the parties usually use it to come to an agreement, last year out of 11,000 collective agreements that were reached and signed in Canada, 94 per cent were reached without one single day of strike or lock-out. Obviously, our system works very well. I am proud of the system that we have which falls under the Canada Labour Code. We are always there to provide the services of conciliation and mediation in order to assist the parties to achieve those agreements.

Unfortunately, in this instance it did not work. Because of the impact upon the public interest, and because of the stoppage of the most important transportation system in Canada, we indicated that we could not and would not tolerate such a work stoppage. We had to step in. It is never pleasant, but we had to do it. We did it, and hopefully we will not have to do it again.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Cadieux.

Honourable senators, I will introduce the procedures and then we will go into the bill itself.

Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole to consider Bill C-85, for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees.

Shall the title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 respecting the short title stand?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: We are now into the bill.

● (1540)

[Translation]

Senator Frith: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For clarification purposes, Mr. Minister, I should like you to answer first a few questions several of which were raised at second reading.

I noticed that you were present in the gallery. Some aspects of the questions raised during the debate provided your colleague, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, with an opportunity to provide some explanations and answers. I am asking these questions not to take sides, but to give you an opportunity to explain the government's position and especially your own position as the responsible minister. Several of these questions are based on a comparison between the 1973 bill and the one which is now before us.

Wage increases had been included in the 1973 bill. For instance, there were, for non-operating employees, a 34 percent increase effective January 1, 1973, and an increase of 6.5 per cent an hour, effective January 1, 1974, and so on.

Why is there no wage increases provided for in this bill?

Mr. Cadieux: Senator Frith, if you are acquainted with yesterday's debate in the House of the Commons, I think you know that we dealt at length with this issue and especially the circumstances of the strike we are faced with now. We are dealing with a conflict in the same industry as in 1973, and things have naturally evolved somewhat since then. The contentious issues may not necessarily be the same.

Without comparing each such issue we have here a negotiation which has been going on for quite a while and I think that—

Senator Frith: There is no detail.

Mr. Cadieux: I think that all senators who have spoken here today have referred to the efforts made to settle the dispute especially by the parties themselves, of course, but also through the mediation and conciliation services of the Department of Labour.

During the negotiations, there have been proposals made by both sides. There has been the contribution of conciliator and that of a commissioner. There has been also a conciliation report which was extensive enough and specific on certain points but rather vague on certain others, making suggestions on certain points, etc.

However, you must consider as a whole what has been done up to now and perhaps also the uncertainty about what has been agreed by the parties. Unfortunately, although the process has been going on for some time, there is no document to our knowledge that spells out that the parties agreed on such and such a point.

In order to give more flexibility to the arbitrator who will be appointed to settle the conflict, we have deemed it advisable to leave points such as wages and job security to the discretion of the arbitrator, indicating to him, of course, on his appointment that all those factors which are in dispute in this conflict should be taken in consideration, including wages, job security, contracting out, etc.

I think that it was in the interests of the parties and of the bargaining process as such to proceed in that manner.

Senator Frith: I imagine that answer also applies to other similar issues, for instance the job security program for employees who were included in the other legislation. Also, the matter of not changing work rules.

In principle, do you want to grant more flexibility in this bill than in the 1973 one?

Mr. Cadieux: You are right, Senator Frith. If I may, some colleagues put forward very specific amendments stating specific items which they wanted the arbitrator to look into.

The way the legislation is worded, the arbitrator shall look to all matters that are in dispute, including those you just mentioned, and those that were specifically suggested yesterday. In view of the inter-relation between all those items and the negotiating principle of trade-off, it is indeed to enable the arbitrator who will have to look into that specific situation to arrive at a fair settlement on all items by considering them all.

I assured the House of Commons yesterday and I am now assuring the Senate that when I appoint the individual who will be responsible for acting as arbitrator, specific indications will be issued in order that the Commissioner's report be taken into consideration. It includes suggestions and also recent precedents applying in similar industries. It referred yesterday for instance to settlements arrived at without work stoppage in the case of Ontario Northland Railway and VIA Rail.

Senator Frith: The provision in Bill C-85 that deals with the 60-day limit has been raised also during the debate. Your colleague, the government leader in the Senate, gave certain explanations on that provision.

Is there something you can add, because again there is a difference between the two bills, the 1973 one and the one now before us?

Mr. Cadieux: If I may make this comment, you know one always learns over time. That may be one of the reasons why this bill is slightly different. The 60-day time limit is relatively short. Should you care to read the whole clause you would see that, if necessary, the Minister of Labour is empowered to grant an extension.

The reason the 60-day time limit is specified is that, if you look at Canada Labour Code, section 157 or perhaps 173, pertaining to the arbitrator, you will find there is a similar time limit.

I would hope that within 60 days the arbitration might be completed in this case, precisely to limit the additional time this might take after the seven and a half months since the collective agreement has expired.

I think that the question of the time limit was raised in speeches in the House of Commons. I do not recall this point having been specifically mentioned during the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole.

Senator Frith: With respect to the issue of wages, it was noted during second reading debate in the Senate that there is no provision to guarantee that wages will not be reduced.

In response Senator Flynn pointed out that the reason is that we cannot imagine being in a position to cut wages.

Is that the only reason why you did not include this clause in the bill, for you know there is no danger? Is there another reason to eliminate this provision of the other legislation?

Mr. Cadieux: The main reason is the one I gave earlier when referring to job security. I want the arbitrator to have much more leeway so he will be able to examine all contentious issues. Wages are one such issue, as are clauses on job security, contracting out, and so on.

The arbitrator will rule on that. I indicated a few moments ago that I would recommend to the arbitrator that he look closely at precedents, including, among others, the 3 per cent Ontario Northland Railways and Via Rail negotiated settlements.

I believe a wage reduction would be highly unlikely.

Senator Frith: I have noticed that the fines are rather stiff. The maximum is set at $100,000 a day.

Are there reasons to fear some resistance to this legislation? Is this why the fines are so high or is it simply a matter of inflation?

Mr. Cadieux: First, I would like to point out that the fines set in Bill C-85 are identical to those in Bill C-24 passed by Parliament in 1986.

There was a very long debate on this specific issue. I remember Senator Lawson saying to me that, in his opinion, it was the first time in Canada that such fines were included in a bill. I pointed out that, being from Quebec, I was perhaps more familiar with this matter, but that in Quebec, such fines were included in most bills which have to be passed under similar circumstances.

I am not presuming that the parties involved will not comply with the legislation. I think that Senator Turner or Senator

Olson, or both of them, said earlier that we are in the presence of law-abiding citizens. I sincerely hope that all the parties involved will comply with the legislation once it has been passed and given Royal Assent.

Senator Frith: You have no information or evidence that we can expect illegal actions or a refusal to comply with the legislation. You have no specific or particular reason to anticipate such a thing.

Mr. Cadieux: You know that we are dealing today with a matter of absolutely vital importance for the Canadian public and our economy. We cannot tolerate a complete stoppage of the most important transportation system in Canada.

I believe that we must take all necessary action to ensure that work will resume after this legislation is passed. I believe that I made the same comments in November 1986 in this place, and I trust that we shall never have to impose such sanctions. However, they are there, and ignorance of the law is no excuse.

On the other hand, I should say that there was an additional clause in Bill C-24 adopted in 1986 which is not contained in this one. This clause referred specifically to prohibition, on conviction of course, from holding a management position either with the employer or with the union for a five-year period. We did not retain that clause in this bill.

Senator Frith: I have one last question, Mr. Chairman. It concerns clause 4 which reads as follows:

4.(b) Every employee shall, when so required, forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment with the railway company.

Senator Turner also mentioned this clause. In the phrase "lorsqu'on le leur demande", I think we can assume that "on" means management. There is no reason for using a term to indicate that persons other than the government can require the employee's return to work.

There is another aspect to this question. Could you provide an explanation for the use of the words "lorsqu'on le leur demande", which translates in English as "when so required"?

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, we had a long debate that on that point yesterday. You did not raise it, but since it was raised in debate yesterday, I can repeat it here. Yesterday, the point was raised that in the 1973 bill to which you referred earlier, the terms were not quite the same.

I will say what I said yesterday. It is quite true. However, we do find the same terms in Bill C-24, passed in November 1986.

Senator Frith: And here today.

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, the explanation is that there is a complete work stoppage. I am going to mention a point that was raised by Senator Turner earlier. Clause 39 provides that the legislation shall come into force the day after the day on which this act is assented to, but not before the twelfth hour after the time at which it is assented to. That is because we cannot be sure of the time when Royal Assent is given.

Today is Friday. Let us assume that the bill will be passed in this chamber and that Royal Assent will be given within the next few hours. According to the bill, work should resume tomorrow.

It is almost certain that operations will not fully resume tomorrow, so that the companies are going to recall people as operations resume. That is the reason for the words: "When so required". I assume that within a matter of days, volume will increase and employees will be gradually recalled. This is just to avoid a situation where everyone goes back to work tomorrow when operations would not justify this.

Senator Frith: Maybe Senator Turner would like to ask some more detailed questions about this bill, as he mentioned earlier in his speech. Thank you, Mr. Minister.

• (1550)

[English]

Senator Olson: I believe the minister heard my comments at second reading. I want to raise a question now specifically about the concern that I had at that time. Where in Bill C-85 are the workers and the union leaders going to look to find the assurance that Senator Murray tried to give us that there will be something reasonable and fair done? I assume that that will be the case, but is it simply an act of faith on the part of the unions that the arbitrator is going to be fair with them? I heard the minister say that the arbitrator will come to an agreement. Of course, if this is an agreement between the parties, there is no problem; I understand that. But we are writing the law now, and he is going to make some decisions whether the parties come to an agreement or not.

Clause 24 of the bill, which has to do with the extension of collective agreements, sets out that we have agreed to extensions up to two years, and I suppose up to a third year, if there is agreement to do so. There is no question about that. The collective agreement that will be extended is the same as that which expired, unless the arbitrator makes a decision to modify it. But then subclause (2) of clause 24 states:

The terms and conditions of each collective agreement, as amended by or pursuant to this Part, are effective and binding on the parties thereto for the period for which the agreement is extended by or pursuant to subsection (1)—which deals with the two-year term,

... notwithstanding anything in Part V of the Canada Labour Code or in the agreement,

That is a little confusing; but at any rate I do not think it reassures anyone that there will be a provision in this law ensuring fairness—or that there is anything but an act of faith. The workers just have to believe that the government will find somebody who will be fair and who will do things in their interest.

The point I am trying to make is that, except for the extension of the agreement that has expired, there is nothing in this bill to guarantee anything to the workers.

Mr. Cadieux: Senator, as I think we all indicated earlier and as I am sure we would all agree on, the best settlement is the settlement that the parties can make themselves for themselves at the negotiating table, with or without the help of conciliators, mediators, et cetera. In this particular case the parties had the opportunity to make sure that they got the best conditions possible by coming to an agreement themselves. They failed. They have abdicated their responsibility to come to this particular agreement, and it is now up to the government to solve the deadlock in which these parties find themselves. I do not think it is the role of this government or this house or this Parliament to write the collective agreement. We have the power to pass legislation and to appoint an arbitrator who will take into consideration all of the issues that the parties have been negotiating over which they are unable to reach an agreement. It is hoped that he or she will bring the parties to agreement. I am sure that any arbitrator in such circumstances would endorse it, and I, of course, would encourage the arbitrator to do so. Where there is a deadlock, however, somebody has to take that decision, and that will be the mandate of the arbitrator. I have no reason to doubt that the arbitrator will be fair.

Senator Olson: I have no reason to doubt that he will be fair, and I express a high hope, just as high as that of the minister, that he will be fair. But when the Parliament of Canada passes this bill into law, it will, in fact, make an agreement that is imposed. There has not been an agreement since January 1, 1987, when the previous one expired. Now we are going to bring that agreement back and impose it by law. Many workers are really aggrieved over this issue, aggrieved to the point where they could not come to an agreement with their employers. Where will they get the comfort that there is something in law other than an extension of what they have had?

Mr. Cadieux: I think the law is very specific. It indicates specifically that as of the proclamation of this particular act the collective agreement is extended and will be amended by the conclusions of the arbitrator within a period of 60 days. I believe that this arbitrator will be fair and will take into consideration the suggestions of the two parties since they started the negotiations more than seven and a half months ago; the arbitrator will take into consideration the recent or not so recent precedents, such as the settlements reached with VIA and the Ontario Northland Railway, where the parties reached agreements on increases in wages, just to use that example, and where, with regard to the Ontario Northland Railway, there was a package with respect to job security. I have no reason to believe that the arbitrator will not be fair. I think we have the most appropriate mechanism in the circumstances. It would have been more proper and much easier for everybody, and particularly the system itself, if the parties had agreed between themselves.

Senator Olson: I do not disagree with your final sentence. However, you say that the arbitrator will be fair. I think "fairness" in this case is a matter of perception, depending on which side you approach the argument from. I have not had a chance to read the bill thoroughly, but as I interpret it there is no provision in it to give any guarantees to the labour unions that they will be treated fairly, or that it is anything more than an act of faith?

Mr. Cadieux: I have read this bill very carefully.

Senator Olson: Of course you have.

Mr. Cadieux: I have come to the conclusion that the bill is fair and that it provides the appropriate mechanism in the unfortunate circumstances in which we find ourselves, where the most important transport system in Canada has come to a stop and the parties have abdicated their responsibilities.

Senator Olson: Mr. Chairman, I wish the minister well. I hope that all the hopes he has expressed about what the arbitrator will do, particularly the hope as to the actions of the arbitrator, will be perceived by both sides, and particularly the workers, as being fair. I wish him well in his pursuit. I know it is a difficult one. I think I have a slightly different view of what the pursuit should be, but I wish the minister well in achieving what he has just explained.

Senator Bosa: Mr. Chairman, before I put my question to the minister, I would like to elicit some information. How many strikes have the rail workers had since the last war, and how many times were they legislated back to work?

Mr. Cadieux: To my recollection—and I am sure that my associate deputy minister would have a better recollection than I—there have been three. There was legislation in 1973, in 1966 and in 1950.

Senator Flynn: Senator Sinclair might be the person to inform you.

Senator Frith: He would make a great minister, that is true.

Senator Bosa: But Senator Sinclair is not the minister on this occasion.

Mr. Minister, in at least one of these instances were the railroad workers legislated back to work?

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, they were.

Senator Bosa: Do you not think that it is rather hypocritical to give the railway workers the right to strike and to legislate them back to work every time they exercise that right? What is the point in giving them the right to strike when they cannot exercise it, or as soon as they do exercise it, they are legislated back to work?

Senator Frith: It is like the Senate—it can veto bills, but let it try!

Mr. Cadieux: In that period of some 40 years this very sensible industry has been legislated back to work three times. I think that is a very good record, notwithstanding the unfortunate situation we face today. However, since 1973 the parties have always agreed. I think that is a good indication that the system works very well.

Senator Bosa: But since transportation by rail plays such a vital role in the economy of Canada, has the minister ever considered classifying the railway service as an essential service and setting up a mechanism for providing these workers with an adequate method of compensation?

Mr. Cadieux: Do I understand that it is the position of the honourable senator that the right to strike should be taken away from this particular industry?

Senator Bosa: No. I think successive governments have taken the right to strike away from these workers. I am asking the minister, since this right to strike has been taken away every time they go on strike, whether the minister has considered making this service an essential one.

Mr. Cadieux: This minister has not yet looked at the possibility of making this particular service an essential service. I shall take the suggestion of the honourable senator under consideration.

Senator Bosa: Like Senator Olson, I have not had an opportunity to read the bill entirely. Does it contain a provision whereby the railway companies will be forbidden from firing any workers who were on strike?

Mr. Cadieux: Yes.

Senator Turner: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister is pretty naive. I know as a product of the depression that in those days you did not need a contract. The average taxpayer in Canada trusted his or her lawyer, doctor, minister or priest and bank manager. During the depression these were the people you consulted for advice. Things were tough. There was no money, nothing—no jobs. Now we are to the point where we have big companies suing big companies, governments and everybody else because they do not trust each other. After 40 years with the brotherhood, I can tell you, sir, that management does not trust labour and labour does not trust management. Both parties trust Associate Deputy Minister Bill Kelly. Why did you not put the associate deputy minister into the dispute at least 20 or 30 days before it started?

Senator Marshall: Kelly for the Senate!

Mr. Cadieux: I could say that it is because he did not give me the advice that he should get involved 30 days earlier. Obviously each case is taken on its own merits. In this particular dispute negotiations have been going on for seven and a half months. I believed that all the help required had been given to the parties and, as the minister involved in the particular negotiations, I thought very sincerely that with the help of Mr. Carson, who was the mediator I had appointed, there would be a settlement. Perhaps Mr. Carson—and I do not wish to make judgment values here—has not reached the notoriety of my associate deputy minister, Bill Kelly, but I believe that Mr. Carson is also a very able mediator. Unfortunately, he failed. When he failed and the parties requested more assistance or indicated that he had failed, I did not hesitate to send in Bill Kelly, who has indicated—and I am sure you have read about it in the media—that there was no stone left unturned in an attempt to come to a settlement in this particular negotiation. Unfortunately—and Bill Kelly is the last one who should have to admit it—there was a failure.

Senator Turner: I would bet my last dollar that if you had put Bill Kelly in at least 20 or 30 days ago, Bill Kelly would have gotten a settlement, because he has the expertise. He has a lot of experience in this area, and he is trusted by both sides. That is a plus.

● (1610)

Mr. Minister, can you tell me why the caboose issue was the subject of collective bargaining at this time? As I understand it, the CTC spent a year holding hearings across this country on that very issue and they are currently writing their report. Can you tell me why this matter was placed on the bargaining table at this time, since it has become one of the irritants in this dispute?

Mr. Cadieux: Senator, it is there because it was included in the Notice of Dispute.

Senator Turner: Mr. Minister, I am not a lawyer; I am just a railway engineer, but the CTC held hearings on this matter across the country and, as I understand it, the CTC would have the status of a court in the sense that if a minister is asked a question concerning a problem that is currently before a court, he will not answer that question. Why does this not apply to this issue?

Mr. Cadieux: Fortunately or unfortunately, Senator Turner, I am a lawyer, and right now I am the Minister of Labour and we administer the Labour Code in the way in which it is written, and when an item is included in the Notice to Bargain, it is included in the Notice to Bargain.

Senator Turner: I understand you appointed a conciliator, Mr. Douglas Stanley, who made several recommendations which were the basis for a settlement of this dispute. Why were those recommendations of Mr. Stanley not put into this bill?

Mr. Cadieux: Obviously, senator, the report of a commissioner is often used as a mechanism when we introduce back-to-work legislation. That was the case in Bill C-24 for most of the issues. Unfortunately, the difference in this particular case is that the conciliator's report was not precise enough on certain items and left too many doors open, and also left the doors open so that there would be the trade-offs that we were discussing earlier in this particular discussion. Therefore, those issues will be taken into consideration by the arbitrator.

Senator Turner: Currently you have many employees on the railway who have 25 or 30 years' service. The railways have stated their intention to contract out that work, and no doubt they will use non-union employees in those contracts. This is another irritant, and I wonder why you are doing this.

Mr. Cadieux: Senator Turner, inasmuch as I would perhaps like to be the chairman of CN or CP, I am not the employer in this case, and I know that that issue is being negotiated right now. However, it will be one of the issues that the arbitrator will be looking into, and I invite and encourage the parties to make their case before the arbitrator.

[Mr. Cadieux.]

Senator Turner: The employees today feel that the arbitrator has been handed a blank cheque and that whatever happens at the end of 60 days, the employees will have to live with it. Do you think that this is just and fair in a democratic society?

Mr. Cadieux: The arbitrator has been given a very serious responsibility, Senator Turner, and I am sure that he or she will accomplish those duties with all the seriousness, care and fairness that is required in such an unfortunate circumstance.

Senator Turner: Mr. Minister, let me tell you something: The labour movement across this country will take care of you and your government at the next election. Thank you very much.

Mr. Cadieux: I might just add to that that I am looking forward to that, senator.

Senator Sinclair: Mr. Minister, you have indicated in your answers to some of my colleagues—and particularly in answer to Senator Frith's question—that a considerable amount of material will be put before the arbitrator, including settlements in other railway disputes. Will each of the parties be given everything that is given to the arbitrator?

Mr. Cadieux: I am not sure I understand your question, but I understand that the arbitrator will be appointed to look into all other matters in dispute, and the matters in dispute are determined by the Notices to Bargain, which include all of the items that we have been discussing. I am sure that the arbitrator will be looking at everything necessary to make a decision or perhaps to bring the parties together to agree on these issues.

Senator Sinclair: I will put my question again, Mr. Minister. Let us say that an aide-mémoire was prepared by someone and given to the arbitrator. Would that be made available to both parties?

Mr. Cadieux: The government will not give the arbitrator any aide-mémoires. If the parties have any aide-mémoires that they have prepared and want to present to the arbitrator, then I think the arbitrator will decide whether they are relevant or not. My understanding is that there is some misunderstanding right now—not to say disagreement—on what may or may not have been agreed upon by the parties.

Senator Sinclair: Will a memorandum attempting to outline those agreements and disagreements be made available to the arbitrator?

Mr. Cadieux: In order that the arbitrator can form his own opinion, senator, I think it would be much more appropriate if the arbitrator started with the Notices of Dispute; with the parties, he will be looking into those issues that are in dispute and will make his own judgment.

Senator Sinclair: I take it then, Mr. Minister, that you are saying that what will be before the arbitrator, once he is appointed, are all public documents at the present time?

Mr. Cadieux: If by "public documents" you mean Notices to Bargain, yes.

Senator Sinclair: What about conciliation reports?

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, obviously.

Senator Sinclair: What about memoranda from Dr. Stanley?

Mr. Cadieux: I do not see the relevance of memoranda from Dr. Stanley. I presume that if there are memoranda from Dr. Stanley to the parties, then the parties may want to put them before the arbitrator.

Senator Sinclair: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

The Chairman: Senator Flynn?

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, I think Senator Sinclair's questions have clarified to some extent the point I wished to make in response to the concerns of Senator Olson and Senator Turner's angry reaction.

I would like to point out that clause 6 indicates very clearly that to the arbitrator will be referred:

... all matters relating to the amendment or revision of each collective agreement that, at the time of the appointment, are in dispute ...

Clearly, the complete record of negotiations is referred to the arbitrator. As the Minister of Labour pointed out, the collective agreements renewed with VIA Rail and the Ontario Northland Railways were among the documents referred to the mediator beforehand. I don't think there is any ambiguity as concerns the level, if you wish, or the minimum. However, as the Minister of Labour pointed out, this is a set of issues which may, if resolved on one side, affect the process on the other side. Senator Olson also mentioned that the delay might penalize employees. I think that was clarified in the bill, namely that the arbitrator's decision takes effect on and from January 1, 1987. For instance, if the arbitrator decides that wage increases of three, four or five per cent are to be introduced, they would take effect on and from January 1, 1987, and the employees would not lose a penny. All other clauses which can have a retroactive effect will be treated the same way. In this respect, I don't think the comments by Senator Olson and Senator Turner are justified.

Obviously, you don't know beforehand what decision the arbitrator will hand down. But you can always give him the benefit of the doubt and assume he is not an idiot.

[English]

Senator Olson: There is no guarantee in this legislation that that will happen.

Senator Flynn: There is a guarantee of common sense, if you know what that means.

Senator Turner: Would Senator Flynn put that in writing?

Senator Flynn: It is on the record, as is your word that you will vote against it.

• (1620)

Senator Turner: That is right.

Senator Frith: Mr. Minister, without detailing them, would you tell me how many amendments were proposed by the opposition in the other place?

Mr. Cadieux: I believe, Senator Frith, at least seven or eight.

Senator Frith: That is close enough.

Mr. Cadieux: There were seven or eight amendments from one party and similar amendments from another. Altogether it may have been ten or twelve, but basically it may have been seven or eight, including one by the minister and one that I suggested to one of the opposition parties.

Senator Frith: Because of the accelerated procedure I have not had time to go through all the House of Commons debates. Can you tell us the amendments that were accepted? Without going into the wording, can you tell us what the effect and purpose of the amendments were? I am talking now of the ones accepted.

Mr. Cadieux: I unfortunately do not have the amended copy of the bill, but I can tell you that in the definition of the word "employee," if my memory serves me right, there was an amendment. There seems to be some confusion or a loophole that employees that may be hired after the expiration of the collective agreement may not have been considered in the legislation. Therefore, we have amended that particular paragraph to make sure—

Senator Frith: I see the word "is" is underlined there. That is the idea, I take it.

Mr. Cadieux: That may be, senator.

Senator Frith: That is all right. I am not interested in getting into technical wording. I would just like to know the purpose of the amendment and its effect.

Mr. Cadieux: Another amendment that was accepted is included in clause 6. At line 18, after the words "December 31, 1988 and," we have added the words "with the consent of the parties thereto."

Senator Frith: Fine. You do not need to explain that any further, because I understood there was a problem about the extension, and you are entitled to extend but only with their consent. Those words were added.

Mr. Cadieux: There was no problem with the extension, senator, but we agreed to the amendment so that if there is to be an extension it will only be with the consent of the parties.

Senator Frith: Yes. I meant a problem in that sense of the need for consent for the parties.

Mr. Cadieux: Personally, I did not think it was a problem, but I agreed to the amendment.

Senator Frith: Yes. Next?

Mr. Cadieux: I believe those are the amendments that were accepted, senator, under reserve of verification. Of course, they are repeated in Parts II, III and IV.

Senator Frith: Yes, of course. I understand that, applying to the different groups.

Mr. Cadieux: To my knowledge, those are the ones that were accepted.

Senator Muir: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say how pleased I am to see our fine, handsome, young, new, comparatively new, minister here; but not under these circumstances. Of course, the same goes for Bill Kelly, who is younger than all of us as far as knowledge of the union movement and negotiations are concerned.

Now that we have the brains here, I thought I would pose a couple of questions. During the war years—and I am sure Senator Sinclair must remember this; like me, he is of the younger age group—we had such a thing in industry as labour management committees. I did not work for the government at any time, but I did work in the coal mines, and labour management committees worked very well. They did not detract from unions or the authority of unions, because the labour representatives were members of the unions and management had their representatives.

In between contracts expiring, they met on many occasions, possibly once a month, and they discussed problems that were taking place, something going wrong in one area, something going wrong in another area. As a result of those meetings, many problems that seemed to be gigantic at the time were smoothed over, straightened out, probably settled, or half settled, and over the period of the contract, two years, three years or whatever it was, many of these things did not roll up into one big problem. When negotiating time came, things were negotiated much more easily and much better.

Now it appears that in all industries there is little or no contact between labour and management, except possibly in an aggressive way. During the period of a contract things are building up so that, when the time comes to negotiate, there are tremendous problems. Perhaps there should be such a thing as labour courts—or call them what you will.

Have any thoughts been given by this government to something along those lines? I am sure that Bill Kelly is well aware of what I am talking about. I raised it in the other place on a number of occasions. However, they acted like my wife over there, they never listened to me and nothing was ever done about it. Have you any people in the Department of Labour who are skilled in that, and I am sure you must have, who are talking about these things and leading towards these things? I think it would be fantastic if this new Minister of Labour would try to get something like that going so that, when the time came to negotiate, we did not run into so many problems. A lot of the problems could be settled during the period of the contract.

Mr. Cadieux: Thank you very much for an excellent question and the excellent comments prior to the question, senator. I appreciate that greatly. I do not know if I will stay young very long in this business, but, nevertheless, I appreciate the comments very much.

[Mr. Cadieux.]

With respect to the committees to which you are referring, I believe Senator Sinclair will agree with me that this particular industry, the railway industry, has been a model in that particular movement. There are ongoing talks all the time.

In order perhaps to use my skills as a lawyer, whether it is appreciated or not, I think the record speaks for itself. When you have 11,000 collective agreements that are signed in Canada and over 94 per cent of them without one day of strike or lockout, it is because the parties speak to each other and come to an agreement relatively easily.

Senator Muir: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I am glad to hear that. As I have said, I have never worked for the government or any crown corporation or anything of that nature. I did not have enough influence with any of the parties. In private industry we did that, and that was during the war years when production of coal was very essential, just as now it is essential to keep the railways running to get the goods to market.

You say that you have these committees now. Could Mr. Kelly or yourself tell me why this has built up to such a tremendously big problem at this point in time?

Mr. Cadieux: Unfortunately, senator, notwithstanding the fact that there were more than 94 per cent of the 11,000 agreements reached without one day of strike or lockout, there are some that perhaps cannot come to those agreements with as much reasonableness within the process itself. Unfortunately, governments, like this one, have to intervene.

I do not intend to go into the specific reasons for this particular dispute. I have heard certain honourable senators here talk about that in their speeches. I do not necessarily agree with the entirety of those speeches, but I suppose that that will be left to the parties to reflect upon so that the next time collective agreement time comes, they will, we hope, come to a negotiated settlement which will deal with all of the issues that they think are important. The settlement that they arrive at by themselves, I believe, will always be the best settlement.

● (1630)

Senator Muir: I realize that governments have to step in, but they have not had to step in on many occasions; only in 1950, 1966, 1973 and now. But compulsory arbitration always leaves a bad taste in my mouth.

Mr. Cadieux: If I may just add, senator, back-to-work legislation leaves a bad taste in my mouth.

Senator Turner: Mr. Minister, when Royal Assent is given to the bill and the 12-hour period is up, will workers on recall notice be able to apply for UIC benefits if they are not called back to work immediately? And when will their lay-off date begin?

Mr. Cadieux: Unfortunately, senator, I am not an expert in every field, but I will refer your question, if you will permit, to my colleague, the Honourable Minister of Employment and Immigration, for his consideration. I am sure he will get back to you as quickly as possible.

Senator Turner: Thank you.

The Chairman: I see no other senator wishing to speak. Are honourable senators prepared to proceed with clause-by-clause study?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 15 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 16 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Frith: Are we agreed that all clauses carry?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have a brief question regarding clause 17. Is there a date on which the arbitrator will be appointed? It says "shall" be appointed. Is there a commitment for that? Is that contained in the bill?

Mr. Cadieux: That is not contained in the bill. The commitment I have given at the request of my honourable colleagues in the House of Commons is that I will obviously look at the suggestions they may make and definitely appoint an arbitrator as quickly as possible.

Senator Olson: Do you have any idea of what "as quickly as possible" means? Would that be within a week or within a month?

Mr. Cadieux: I will definitely be pursuing this with my honourable colleagues, particularly those in the Official Opposition and those in the New Democratic Party, to give me suggestions quickly, otherwise I will have to act without the benefit of their suggestions.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall all remaining clauses through clause 39 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the four schedules carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, the short title, carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

---

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-85, to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Charles Turner: Please register my opposition to this bill.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: So it is carried, on division?

Senator Turner: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker *pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons which reads as follows:

HOUSE OF COMMONS
Canada

ORDERED,—

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices.

More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows:

"(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purposes of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine.

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows:

"insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million

by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made,

by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

ATTEST

Robert Marleau,
The Clerk of the House of Commons

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): At the next sitting.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will take only a minute of your time on this matter at this time. Honourable senators have—

Senator MacEachen: I wonder whether this is a substantive motion which requires notice. My assumption is that it is a substantive motion which requires notice, but I want to ask Senator Murray to clarify that point so that we can see what rule we are working under.

Senator Murray: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition is getting ahead of me and ahead of himself. I do intend to propose a motion, which I hope will bring matters to a head on this question.

A message from the House of Commons has been received. I simply want to say that the message is clear that the House of Commons have considered the amendments which the Senate made to Bill C-22; they have debated those amendments at some length; and the moment of truth has arrived for the Senate. It is up to the Senate now to decide whether to exercise its undoubted constitutional right, which has been exercised rarely, if ever, in modern times, to insist on its amendments, or whether the Senate will bow to the will of the elected house. I do not intend to make any further comments as to the substance of the matter. I will bring matters to a head by proposing a motion, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips:

That the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 1(c) and (8) to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, without amendment;

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c), to which the Commons has disagreed; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

I take it that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is of the view that notice would be required for such a motion. My reading of the rule and precedents indicate otherwise, but I will wait for him to make his case first.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am not going to make a great fuss about this, but just for our own understanding it would appear to me that the motion is one which would require notice. I would presume that Senator Murray has given notice that he will move the motion tomorrow or that the motion will be moved on his behalf tomorrow. It seems to me that a motion which asks the Senate to send a message to the House of Commons is one which is substantive and which requires notice of at least one day.

I know that there is a rule which states that amendments to public bills can be moved without notice, but this does not deal with Commons amendments to public bills. This is more than an amendment to a bill. This is a message from the House of Commons which is manifestly substantive because it is asking the Senate to take a significant step.

I am not going to press this further, but I raise my own reservations that this is being moved without the necessary notice. If Senator Murray insisted on seeking leave, perhaps we would give him leave, but certainly I would adjourn the debate.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as opposed to the contention of the Leader of the Opposition, I would invoke rule 46(i) which states:

No notice is required of the following motions:

(i) for the consideration forthwith or on a future day of Commons amendments to a public bill;

Honourable senators, I would also refer to a couple of precedents which I have before me. One was on December 17, 1970, in which a message was brought from the House of Commons by their Clerk to return the Bill S-6, entitled, An Act to Amend the Anti-dumping Act. The message was that the House of Commons had passed the bill with one amendment to which they desired the concurrence of the Senate. There was a motion by the Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., that the amendment be "concurred in now." After debate, the question was put on the motion, it was resolved in the affirmative, and it was ordered that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House, and so forth.

A more recent precedent was set on July 24, 1986, when we received a message from the House of Commons somewhat similar to the one we received today, indicating that the House of Commons disagreed with an amendment which the Senate had made to Bill C-67, An Act to Amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act. The message was received on Thursday, July 24. That same day the Honourable Senator Doody moved that the Senate "do not insist on its amendment." After debate, and the question being put on the motion, it was resolved in the affirmative, on division, and ordered that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

In neither of these cases is it indicated that leave was necessary to present the motion that the Senate do not insist on its amendments.

In any event, I simply place that before honourable senators. If Your Honour finds that notice is required, then I will ask for leave, retroactively, to present the motion, on the understanding, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, that he, in any case, would wish to adjourn the debate until tomorrow.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not think any of us wants to prolong what might be a rather academic discussion, although it does have some importance.

Your Honour has to consider whether this motion falls under rule 45(1)(h), which is as follows:

45(1) One day's notice shall be given of any of the following motions:

(h) for the making of a substantive motion, which is Senator MacEachen's position, or falls under rule 46(i), which is as follows:

(i) for the consideration forthwith or on a future day of Commons amendments to a public bill.

One of the two precedents cited by the Leader of the Government took place in 1970. I point out to His Honour that in that case it was a Senate bill, Bill S-6, that had been returned from the House of Commons with an amendment. As Senator Murray has said, the record does not show that leave was requested. The second of his precedents was the parole bill. As I recall it, the motion put by Senator Doody was with leave and leave was granted. The motion was that, with leave, "the Senate do not insist on its amendments." I know there was a discussion about leave in that case because I remember Senator Hastings talking about it.

I think that the Speaker has everything necessary to make a ruling if a ruling is requested, but I wanted to make these comments on the two precedents cited and suggest that it is a question of which rule the motion falls under. My submission to Your Honour is that it is clearly a substantive motion falling under rule 45 and not rule 46.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is there any further discussion? There being none, honourable senators, I will place the motion before the Senate.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips:

That the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 1(c) and 8 to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, without amendment;

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9—

Senator Frith: Dispense.

An Hon. Senator: No, I want to hear it.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Dispense?

Senator Frith: I take it, Your Honour, that if you are putting the motion, you are ruling that it does not require notice. Otherwise, it could not be put until tomorrow. In fact, it could not even be moved until tomorrow.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If I am to reply, honourable senators, yes, it is my understanding that by putting the motion the Chair accepts the motion as being in order. That, I believe, is the proper course of action. I was not specifically asked for a ruling; therefore, I made no ruling. However, by putting the question I accept the motion as being in order.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I agree that once the motion is put a ruling has been made. The motion is before the house for debate and no one is rising to speak. I am adjourning the debate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Argue, that the debate be adjourned. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

OFFICIALS FROM NORTHERN ITALY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, may I draw the attention of honourable senators to the presence in the South Gallery of a group of officials from Northern Italy who are visiting the Parliament Buildings today and will visit some other parts of Canada later on.

The group is headed by the President of Trevisani Nel Mondo, Mr. Carlo Davi, by Dr. Ludovico Manfren, President of 14 townships of the region of Oderzo, and by a member of the Board of Control of the City of Oderzo, Mrs. Maria Rusolen Parpinelli.

May I, on behalf of all honourable senators, extend to the group our best wishes for a pleasant and interesting visit in Canada.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS

GRAIN EXPORT SUBSIDIES—REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO PRIME MINISTER OF FRANCE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which arises out of a visit to this country by Prime Minister Jacques Chirac of France. I would like to remind the Leader of the Government in the Senate and all senators that when President Mitterrand of France was here some time ago the Prime Minister of this country, as well as the Premier of Saskatchewan, raised with President Mitterrand, in a very forceful way, the need for France to modify its agricultural policies by way of amelioration or reduction in export subsidies. My question is: Has Prime Minister Mulroney raised that question with Prime Minister Chirac, and has he put forward a position asking that changes be made?

I think honourable senators are aware that there was an exchange between the government leader and myself on this question. However, under the French Constitution the substantive power really lies with the elected members and with the Prime Minister. Therefore, it would seem to me that our Prime Minister should have made a very forceful presentation to Prime Minister Chirac about the need for a reduction in export subsidies on wheat and other grains.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Has this matter been raised? I have seen no news media coverage of it; if I have missed it, I apologize, but I would like to know what the facts are.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I find that a disappointing and inadequate comment. I would disagree with the substance of what the Leader of the Government in the Senate has said in that I feel that the tone of the representations made by this government to the chief player in this field, the President of the United States, has not been strong and forthright. Therefore, that presence is not there. However, the Prime Minister of this country has raised the question of the fisheries dispute. That is important, and that has received a lot of attention.

• (1420)

I ask why the agricultural producers of this country should take a secondary role to the fisheries dispute. I am not saying that the fisheries dispute is not important. I do not detract from the importance of it at all. I am saying that it is unbelievable to me that the Prime Minister of this country should not be using the occasion of Prime Minister Chirac's visit to make a strong statement to him with regard to agricultural policy, because the premier of that country is in my judgment the most important player in the EEC.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is talking through his hat. He assumes that the matter was not raised in the bilateral discussions between Prime Minister Mulroney and Prime Minister Chirac. I have told him that I was not present at that meeting and do not have in front of me a report on what took place.

Secondly, he accuses the Prime Minister of Canada of not being strong enough in our representations, as he puts it, to the President of the United States. On two occasions now the Prime Minister of Canada has succeeded in putting that item in a prominent place on the agenda for the economic summits. He will certainly do so again, a third time. Canada is to the forefront in trying to arrive at an international solution, which is the only possible solution to these export subsidy and surplus related issues.

Senator Argue: I do not see any evidence myself of a strong statement from the Prime Minister of this country to the President of the United States. The Leader of the Government in the Senate says that the solution is in the international sphere. I think action by the Government of the United States to remove some of their policies would add between $1 and $2 per bushel to the price of Canadian wheat within 48 hours of the change of policy.

The real reason that the price of Canadian wheat to the farmers is low today is the fact that the United States has a policy of give away—a zero price on some of their grain going into the export markets. I would think that the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate is a powerful enough and influential enough and a well enough informed member of the cabinet that, if that had been in the memo or had been presented in a strong way, he would have known about it. However, I hope the Leader of the Government in the Senate will bring to the Senate some evidence of what in fact did happen.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT BY MR. REISMAN ON CONSULTATIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As we all know, Mr. Simon Reisman is a very competent negotiator and has done a good job of negotiating on Canada's behalf. After the meetings last week in Cornwall, Mr. Reisman, perhaps because of sun stroke or lapse of memory or whatever, incited some sheer panic in the hearts of Canadians by suggesting that the final point in the free trade negotiations, such as binding arbitration, might have to be dealt with by Prime Minister Mulroney and President Reagan.

In light of the fact that this Prime Minister has already given away the patent drugs, lumber, petroleum, potash, and now the wheat of Canada, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us if Mr. Reisman just had a temporary lapse of intelligence—or whatever? And could he assure us that under no circumstances will this Prime Minister be allowed to speak to President Reagan about anything that concerns Canada?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Other than the deep and non-partisan comments of the leader!

FRANCOPHONE SUMMIT

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS AS AGENDA ITEM—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate respecting the francophone conference in Quebec City. Amnesty International and other well respected human rights organizations in this and other countries are concerned with the persistent pattern of the violation of human rights respecting a number of the countries that are visiting Canada and are participants in this francophone conference.

● (1430)

In light of the government's very strong stance taken to protect and enhance international human rights, and in light of the government's policy of strongly speaking out against violations of human rights to the extent that emissaries from certain countries tainted with violations of international human rights have been kept from our doors, did the Government of Canada place this issue on the agenda of the Francophone Summit? If so, does the government intend to propose a very strong resolution in the final communiqué condemning the violation of international human rights with respect to those countries that are members of the Francophone Summit?

The Prime Minister has indicated publicly, within the last day or so, his determination to pursue these matters in his bilateral discussions with the heads of state and heads of government concerned during the summit.

Senator Grafstein: Is it not open to the Government of Canada to place an item on the agenda of the summit? Is the government not able to place an item on the agenda even at this late juncture?

Senator Murray: I am not privy to the details of the process, but, if the process is similar to that used for similar international gatherings, the agenda is something that is arrived at by negotiation and consensus.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT CONTRACT FOR CONSULTANCY WORK OF CERTAIN WITNESSES APPEARING BEFORE SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate discover an answer to the following question? I do not expect the leader to have the answer available this afternoon.

Has any of the following—each of whom has been a witness before the Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord—been a consultant to and/or received remuneration for contract or consultancy work with the Department of Justice, the Prime Minister's Office, the Privy Council Office or any other department of the Government of Canada between the dates of September 1, 1986, and September 1, 1987: William R. Lederman, Professor Emeritus, Faculty of Law, Queen's University; Richard Simeon, Director, School of Public Administration, Queen's University; Peter Leslie, Director, Institute for Intergovernmental Relations, Queen's University; and Gordon Robertson, former Secretary to the Cabinet, now of the University of Western Ontario?

Senator Haidasz: Ah ha!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think that is the kind of question that ought to be put on the order paper and replied to in writing.

I will not attribute motives to the honourable senator. I presume she is not suggesting, even if any of those people had been party to any contracts or consultancy agreements with the government, or any department of the government, that that influenced the professional or legal opinion which they gave to the joint committee.

I presume the question is whether any of those people have been in any financial relationship whatsoever with the Government of Canada, not just whether they have been in any relationship with the Government of Canada on the subject matter being studied by the joint committee.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN POTASH—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION BY GOVERNMENT OF SASKATCHEWAN—CONSULTATIONS WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question regarding the introduction of legislation relating to potash in the Saskatchewan Legislature this week. I should like to ask whether, before that legislation was introduced by the Government of Saskatchewan, the federal government was consulted with respect to the legislation or with respect to its impact on economic relations with the United States. If the answer to that is yes, did the Government of Canada concur in these particular measures to deal with U.S. trade in general and with the issue of trade in potash in particular? And if the answer to that question is yes, is the Minister for International Trade, or any minister of the Government of Canada, acting in any way on behalf of Canada and/or the Government of Saskatchewan in making representations to either the Government of the United States or private sector interests in the United States?

● (1430)

I understand that U.S. authorities have provided information on how they arrived at the methodology used in their determination. The government is examining the methodology carefully, in consultation with our own U.S. legal counsel and legal counsel of the Canadian companies directly affected, with a view to agreeing on points to be pursued further with the U.S. authorities. Again I can say that our approval was not sought in connection with the bill that was introduced in the Saskatchewan legislature the other day, although I am told that we were generally informed of the nature of the measures that the Saskatchewan government introduced yesterday.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question on the same subject for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate assure the Senate that the Government of Canada will not resort to the same solution to the potash problem as it used for the softwood lumber issue a few months ago, which set an unfortunate precedent in this type of thing?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the two are not comparable.

REFUGEES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATIONS ON BILL C-84— EMERGENCY LEGISLATION—JURISDICTION— REPRESENTATIONS BY GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, this question is a follow-up to the answer the Leader of the Government in the Senate gave me last Friday respecting Bill C-84. In the last part of his answer to my question he said:

... it is the federal government that has the exclusive right to decide on refugee claimants in Canada, and that is what we are dealing with in Bill C-84.

[Senator Austin.]

It is my understanding from some experts who have looked at this question that Bill C-84 applies to both refugees and immigrants. Therefore, there is concurrent jurisdiction in the context of this bill, and so this is a matter for consideration by the federal government and for the provincial government in its concurrent jurisdiction.

Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate can clarify this, because he seems to import that the full measure of Bill C-84 applies only to refugees, and therefore would be only, and clearly exclusively, in federal jurisdiction.

Now, if my friend is asking the question based on an interpretation of the bill, I am loath to attempt to deal with it in detail at this moment. I expect that Bill C-84 will have cleared the House of Commons later today, and that either today or tomorrow our colleague, Senator MacDonald of Halifax, will be presenting the bill in this chamber. My friend will have an opportunity to deal with it at second reading and to ask his questions of the minister or the appropriate officials in committee.

Senator Grafstein: Just so that the minister or the senator who will be responsible for this bill has the issue clear, it was my understanding from the purport of his answer last week that Bill C-84 related purely and almost exclusively, if you will, to refugee claimants either outside Canada or within Canada. Therefore, he included in his logic to us that the provinces have no interest in this question, because this is an area of exclusive jurisdiction for the federal government.

On a reading of the bill following his response, I asked some experts whether or not that would be their view of that bill. Their view was that the bill was much broader than just the narrow issue reflecting the rights of refugees either within or without the country, and therefore the provinces did have an interest in this particular question. The question I put to the minister at the time was: Why were the provinces not consulted prior to declaring this a matter of national emergency?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have never stated—and I hope I have never implied; I have never intended to imply—that the provinces have no interest in this or any matter related to immigration. Whether they are immigrants or refugees, these people who want to settle in Canada have to live, for the most part, within provincial jurisdiction, and the provincial governments are responsible for services, and so forth. So, the provinces have an obvious interest. That does not mean that on a matter such as Bill C-84, which is an attempt to regularize what has become a confused and dangerous regime with regard to refugees, it was necessary to engage in extensive consultation with the provinces. A number of the affected provinces had demanded that the federal government act urgently on the matter, and that is what we are doing.

My friend is making an interpretation of this bill which I want to consider further before I comment on it.

Senator Grafstein: Could either the Leader of the Government or the senator responsible for the bill tell us—either today or tomorrow—whether or not the Province of Ontario, by direct or indirect representations, suggested that the 174-odd refugee claimants were the source of a national emergency to justify the advance of this particular piece of legislation? I am asking this vis-à-vis the Province of Ontario, whether or not the Province of Ontario, directly or indirectly, made a representation to the government suggesting that this was a terribly urgent matter, an emergency matter, which needed immediate and urgent redress.

Senator Murray: Whether they did or did not, honourable senators, the emergency does not arise from the fact that 50, 100 or 174 refugees arrive at a given time. The emergency arises from the loopholes, if those exist in our practices, through which boat loads of people from a particular country claim refugee status—in this event it turns out that they came from a third country—and when boat loads of people, who may be better described as economic migrants, come into the country claiming refugee status. The emergency arises from loopholes that may exist in our policy, our law and our practices, not from the fact that there are 50, 100 or 174 refugees arriving on a given day.

My friend should also examine the record on this matter over the past year or so. He will see that the problem is of a magnitude rather greater than the 174 in the case to which he refers.

Senator Grafstein: I have not questioned that there is a serious problem with respect to the processes under the Immigration Act. The narrow purport of my question is whether or not an emergency occurred this summer. What the Leader of the Government is now saying to us is that this emergency was not an emergency; it is a matter that has gone on for some period of time and the government chose the summer vacation to act. That is much different than the Government of Canada calling back the other place on a question of national emergency. It is entirely different!

● (1440)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if such loopholes on policy and practice exist in our law, surely it is an urgent matter to correct those problems. I think the honourable senator will find that the action taken by the Government of Canada has broad support in this country generally.

Senator Muir: Right on!

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when we can expect the Canadian government to take seriously its obligation to protect the health of Canadian citizens and follow the leadership of certain western countries by bringing in stringent measures to stop the galloping epidemic of the tragic disease called AIDS.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, if I am not mistaken, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has already made some announcements in that regard. I shall be glad to update the information that we have and bring it into the chamber at the earliest opportunity.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I know that the government has been trying for the past three years or so to contend with this epidemic of AIDS by coming forth with some educational pamphlets and by giving federal grants for research and epidemiological studies. However, it has not taken any stringent measures, such as certain western countries have done, to control the spread of AIDS by, for example, examining the blood of potential immigrants for the HIV agent and thus following its own example of testing potential immigrants for TB and syphilis.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I take it that the honourable senator has made some representations, and I shall bring them to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

CANADIAN POTASH—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION BY GOVERNMENT OF SASKATCHEWAN—CONSULTATIONS WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIONS IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to the question I asked earlier with respect to potash. Could the minister advise us when the Government of Saskatchewan communicated to the federal government its intention to enact production management legislation? Was it the position of the Government of Canada that this type of legislation was the appropriate way to deal with the potash issue, which arose as a result of United States regulatory action? Did the Government of Canada seek to persuade the Government of Saskatchewan to deal with the issue by a different method?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, all I can tell the Senate at this time is that the Government of Saskatchewan kept us, as I said, generally informed on the nature of the measures that they presented. We were not asked whether or not we approved of their bill.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, would the minister obtain information for the Senate as to whether the Government of Canada counselled the Government of Saskatchewan to follow the particular method of dealing with the issue I have described or whether the Government of Canada gave other counsel with respect to the issue?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer to that question is, "Of course not." For one thing, the matter involves possible constitutional questions; for another thing, the Government of Saskatchewan took the measures it took, having tried unsuccessfully on some occasions in the past to persuade us that export controls were the answer.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I am a little surprised by the minister's answer inasmuch as the question is now one of shared jurisdiction. The province, of course, as owner of the resource has the powers given to it in the 1982 constitutional amendment, but the federal government retains the responsibility for international trade and economic relations with other countries. I cannot believe the literal answer which the minister has given, that the federal government has sat on its hands and has neither sought nor taken any responsibility, nor given any advice, and intends to do nothing of any sort on this issue.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not entirely certain of what my honourable friend is suggesting that the Government of Canada ought to do.

Senator Austin: I am suggesting that in dealing with this particular issue there are methods of representation to the United States government, to the United States Congress and to the United States private interests in the agricultural and chemical industries that should be pursued aggressively by the Government of Canada. These methods of representation involve resources which are not within the ability of the Province of Saskatchewan to employ. It seems to me that the old American admonition of speaking softly while carrying a large stick is not a bad policy. Once you brandish the stick you show what power you have, and your opponent's leverage in the discussions seems to evaporate.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I told the Senate on a previous occasion that the Government of Canada has made all those representations to the United States administration and will be making more.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Would the Honourable Leader of the Government be prepared to tell us a little more about the nature of those representations and of the U.S. response to them?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, not today. I may say that we are presently dealing with our legal counsel in the United States.

Senator Gigantès: But was their first reaction pretty cavalier? Did they brush you off with the back of their hand, or did they sort of say, "Yes, we are going to consider your points. We have some sympathy for what is happening, and we are trying our best." Were they demonstrating their usual elephant-like attitude and rolling over in bed and crushing us, or were they being a friend?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not think it would be helpful for me to characterize the response of the United States administration or the United States authorities to the representations that we have made from time to time. I simply make the point once again that this case is a graphic illustration of why the government has placed such a high priority on negotiating a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States to provide better rules for the conduct of our two-way trade.

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Philippe Dean Gigantès: Honourable senators, as I understand the very stingy pieces of information that have been given to us on the free trade accord—and it has been like pulling teeth to get anything on the matter—it seems that the original intention of the government is still the intention of the government, to stop the Americans from applying their current protectionist fever to Canada; it seems that essentially the bottom line for us is some form of arbitration, some way of settling disputes. Would the Leader of the Government assure us that if this kind of binding arbitration is not realized, we will walk away from such an accord?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think we have made it clear that we attach a great deal of importance to obtaining a secure access to that large American market and to obtaining a method of arbitration, as the honourable senator puts it, with a binding dispute mechanism on trade matters between our two countries.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, the Honourable Leader of the Government is well aware that some U.S. senators have said, "Consultation, yes, but not a binding mechanism." What is the leader's reaction to that particular American attitude?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the negotiations are still continuing between the U.S. administration and our negotiators. I do not think it is at all helpful for me, or for anybody, to comment on remarks that are attributed to various legislators in the United States. They will have an opportunity, as my friend and our colleagues will have, to discuss the trade agreement when we have one.

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, earlier I indicated to the leadership opposite that my presence was required in the maritime provinces for the next day or two. Therefore, with apologies to honourable senators, I must cut short Question Period today to catch an airplane to go to my destination.

Senator McElman: Is that in New Brunswick?

Senator Murray: Moncton, as a matter of fact.

An Hon. Senator: Give my regards to Richard Hatfield.

Senator Frith: And we were just about to wish you a bon voyage.

Senator Murray: I can assure honourable senators that it is not a political mission. I am dining tonight with the board of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Tomorrow at noon I am speaking in Saint John to the annual conference of the Institute of Public Administration in Canada, and nothing could be less partisan.

Senator Frith: Then we shall wish you a bon appetit.

CRIMINAL CODE IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976 CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act.

He said: Honourable senators, let me take you back for just a moment to six years after the beginning of the Second World War and the day following the signing of the Japanese surrender terms; the Prime Minister of Canada went for a walk at Kingsmere. In his diary he wrote the following:

I suddenly saw rise out of the grass some twenty yards away, a huge black bear . . . Looked enormous. I could hardly believe my eyes . . . Thought I was very brave going near to him.

That evening the bear was seen again in the orchard and the game warden was sent for and told to bring his gun.

There were other beasts roaming free in those heady, joyful first days of peace—beasts vicious beyond the imagining of most Canadians sheltered as they were from the human cattle trains, the experimental laboratories and the death factories of far away, beleaguered and conquered places.

For a while, in a tentative way, we went after bear. In Europe the Canadian Armed Forces held four trials for crimes committed against our servicemen. Six other trials involving 28 accused were held by the British Forces on Canada's behalf. We were told by the Deschênes Commission:

In 1948, a stop was put to war crimes trials as a result of a secret suggestion made by the United Kingdom to seven dominions—a suggestion to which Canada responded that "it had no comment to make." Canadian policy on war crimes during the next third of a century was not worse than that of several western countries which displayed an equal lack of interest.

In short, we hoped that time would finish the wretched business, but it did not.

The passing 30 years brought so many of the victims or kin of the victims of the terror to our shores and to our neighbourhoods, we were not permitted to forget what had happened. If we thought that we could ignore the business of Canadian grandchildren growing up and wondering what we had done to those responsible for the crimes, we were wrong. The catalogue of unresolved "cases" considered by the Honourable Jules Deschênes made it clear that a number of the unpunished were still alive and some of them might still be living among us.

Honourable senators, Bill C-71, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act, is the government's response to recommendations central to the Deschênes Report, a document painstakingly compiled in an atmosphere of controversy, not unexpected in the highly-charged climate of its purpose.

Amendments to the Immigration Act, 1976 provide that persons who are reasonably believed to have committed war crimes or crimes against humanity within the meaning of the Code will not be granted admission to Canada or may be deported if they are here.

Amendments to the Citizenship Act stipulate that persons who are under investigation by the RCMP, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service or the Department of Justice for, or are charged with, on trial for, convicted of, subject to, or a party to an appeal relating to an offence under amended section 6 of the Criminal Code will not be able to acquire or resume citizenship.

It should be emphasized here that persons now in Canada who are already Canadian citizens will not have their status changed by the amendments to these two acts.

The centrepiece of the legislative revision is to be found in the amendment of the Criminal Code which provides Canadian courts with jurisdiction to prosecute war crimes and crimes against humanity.

It defines "war crime" and "crime against humanity" in accordance with international law at the time of the commission of an alleged offence.

It extends the application of Canadian offences to such crimes committed outside Canada when at the time of commission such acts would, if committed in Canada, constitute an offence under Canadian law.

It extends the jurisdiction of Canadian courts to war crimes against humanity when at the time of the offence:

(1) the offender is a Canadian citizen or is employed by Canada in a civilian or military capacity;

(2) the offender is a citizen of, or is employed in a civilian or military capacity by, a state engaged in an armed conflict against Canada; or

(3) the victim is a Canadian citizen or a citizen of a state allied with Canada in an armed conflict.

It extends the jurisdiction of Canadian courts to war crimes and crimes against humanity when, subsequent to the time of the commission of the offence, the offender is found in Canada.

It provides that, with respect to the definition of an offence, prosecutions will be instituted under Canadian law as it was read at the time of the alleged offence, but that the current rules of law relating to procedure and evidence shall apply to the proceedings. Investigations will be conducted carefully in the tradition of criminal proceedings in this country that persons before the courts are presumed innocent until proved otherwise.

The bill provides that an accused person is entitled to any justification, excuse or defence recognized under either Canadian law or international law at the time of the offence or at the time of the proceedings.

It provides that no proceedings may be commenced without the personal consent in writing of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General of Canada, and such proceedings may only be conducted by the Attorney General of Canada or counsel acting on behalf thereof.

There are no tools here for witch hunts or show trials.

Do we need to be reminded, honourable senators, of the nature of the business at hand? "Crimes against humanity" means murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, persecution or any other inhumane act or omission that is committed against any civilian population or any identifiable group of persons. "War crime" means an act or omission that is committed during an international armed conflict, whether or not it constitutes a contravention of the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission.

These crimes against humanity and war crimes are not new offences defined for the purposes of this amendment. They were recognized in international and Canadian law when they took place. "We are not aiming," said Mr. Justice Deschênes, "to make acts which were deemed innocent when committed, criminal now. Such would be unacceptable retroactivity." But those who are tried will be afforded not only the defences available to the accused when the crime occurred but all of the protections, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that are available at the time of trial.

● (1500)

Honourable senators, I submit that Bill C-71 merits the approval of this chamber.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Would Senator Doyle permit a question for the purpose of clarification? I appreciated the point he made that the presumption of innocence would apply in criminal matters and so on, but could he refer to his text where he started to talk about offences under the Immigration Act? I thought he used an expression to the effect that "persons who were reasonably believed to have committed," and so on, would be guilty or in default. Is that what he said?

Senator Doyle: I did not intend to convey that impression, Senator Hicks. That section of my text indicates that amendments to the Immigration Act provide that persons who are reasonably believed to have committed war crimes or crimes against humanity within the meaning of the Code will not be granted admission to Canada or may be deported if they are here.

Senator Hicks: That, then, makes it a question of those people we say are "reasonably believed" to have committed rather than "proven" to have committed. That does differ somewhat from the presumption of innocence referred to in connection with the Criminal Code amendments.

Senator Doyle: I will check the precise wording, Senator Hicks, but I believe the bill will indicate that the matter of being deported is given an emphasis different from that applying to those people who may not be admitted.

On motion of Senator Grafstein, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, September 3, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, why is that committee being treated differently from other committees?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I think that Senator Nurgitz is about to explain why he is asking for leave.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, my understanding is that yesterday Senator Doyle proceeded with second reading of Bill C-71. Several members of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs were anxious to receive that bill in committee.

My further understanding is that Senator Grafstein has some brief comments to make with respect to the bill. This is not to suggest that anyone else may not speak.

Fortunately, through the good work of our committee staff, we were able to arrange to have senior officials of the Department of Justice, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Employment and Immigration all available this afternoon. Several senators have indicated a willingness to get on with the hearing of that matter. We could accommodate everyone today at 3:30 p.m. and have sufficient time to go well into the evening, if so required.

Senator Sinclair: A very useful precedent.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with leave, I move:

That the message received from the House of Commons dated August 31st, 1987, dealing with amendments to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I do not know if this is a regular procedure. I would refer to rule 36(1), which states:

When a question is under debate, a motion shall not be received unless it is a motion to amend the question, to refer the question to a committee, to adjourn the debate . . .

As Senator MacEachen has indicated, he would need one day's notice.

I would also point out that we have on the order paper the consideration of the message from the House of Commons. It is at that very point that that motion could be put without notice. At this time, however, I think we have to come to the Order of the Day under which we will proceed with consideration of the message.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I do not share the view expressed by Senator Flynn to the effect that a motion along these lines must be made as an amendment to the motion standing in the name of Senator Murray. I considered that quite carefully and concluded that it would not be appropriate to proceed in that way because there are two separate propositions involved.

The motion which is now before the Senate, in the name of Senator Murray, moves that we concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons, and so on. This motion of Senator Murray deals exclusively with the amendments that were made in the House of Commons. My motion deals with the message in its totality, and in its totality it includes the reasons which have been given by the House of Commons for refusing the amendments made by the Senate and enters into substantive argument, as it were, with respect to the substance of these matters.

I have taken the view, having confronted the question which Senator Flynn now advances, that it would be inappropriate to attempt to send the message to committee by amending Senator Murray's motion. The message is a separate matter, which has been deposited on the table, and it is open to any senator to move that the message be sent to a committee for consideration. It does not affect the standing of Senator Murray's motion; it is there and the Senate can deal with it as it chooses.

Senator Flynn: I do not know if I would be able to convince the Leader of the Opposition by refusing leave. He would then have no alternative but to consider the message and then move his amendment. Senator MacEachen is asking for leave, and I say that he should put that as an amendment when the consideration of the message comes before the house later today. He is bypassing the main motion and is doubling the debate on the matter by doing that. It seems to me that if I say no to his requirement for leave, he would have the opportunity to move that motion later on. If there is no other way to convince him, I will do that.

Senator MacEachen: Before I appear unconvinced, is Senator Flynn saying that it would be appropriate for any senator, when we reach the main motion, to move that the main motion and the message be sent to a committee and that that would be regular?

Senator Flynn: I think so, and Senator MacEachen had adjourned the debate on the main motion.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the present situation is as follows: I sought leave to make a motion to refer the message to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I took it for granted that I needed leave because to do so one would have to have at least one day's notice. Senator Flynn has declined leave and has suggested that this be done when we consider the main motion, and that it could be in order, then, to amend the main motion by referring it to the committee along with the message. If that is understood, of course I will follow that procedure.

Senator Flynn: Rule 36 makes it very clear.

Senator MacEachen: I will amend the main motion by sending it to a committee, and I will include the message. If that is understood, then I shall wait until we get to the main motion.

Senator Flynn: Very good.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that it is agreed that there will be no procedural objections, that I shall be able to put my motion, and that it will be debated and decided one way or the other.

Senator Flynn: Yes. You will speak on the main motion and then you can explain your motion in amendment for referral to committee. Of course, it will be debatable.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am seeking an understanding that procedural objections will not be raised as to the regularity of an amendment to the main motion which would send it to a committee along with the message. If that is understood, then I shall wait.

Senator Flynn: As far as I am concerned, I can see no problem. In any event, you do not have leave. However, you can move the motion and I shall not object on procedural grounds.

Senator MacEachen: Very well. I presume that if I run into trouble—

Senator Flynn: I will try to help you, as usual.

Senator Argue: Be careful now!

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Frith: We will not say a word about the "as usual" because of the first part of your comment.

Senator MacEachen: —and if there is some accident between now and the calling of the Orders of the Day and minds change—

Senator Flynn: Not mine. I do not change it that quickly.

Senator MacEachen: —and if there is objection to an amendment to that effect, I reserve my right to move this motion tomorrow.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, why doesn't the Honourable Leader of the Opposition leave his notice on the order paper and then, if things proceed in the manner suggested by Senator Flynn, he can withdraw the notice? If there is a procedural argument later on in the day, his notice will stand for the motion to be made tomorrow, in any event.

Senator Flynn: You are a saviour.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, apart altogether from procedural arguments, I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition could explain to those who may be as bewildered as I why Bill C-22, involving the Patent Act—which, under normal circumstances, should have been referred to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee and which, indeed, that committee asked for but which was given to a special committee chaired by Senator Bonnell—is now being referred to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, the logical committee. I am just asking for an explanation; I am not arguing the point.

An Hon. Senator: Wait until tomorrow.

Senator MacDonald: Someone has said that I should wait until tomorrow. Very well.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It would be difficult for the Chair to rule on a motion which has not been put before the Senate. There is no motion before the Senate. Leave has not been granted. I suggest that we proceed with the Orders of the Day, and in due course the Leader of the Opposition will have an opportunity to present his motion.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not quite clear on this matter. Has the Leader of the Opposition accepted the suggestion of the honourable senator for the Annapolis Valley that he proceed with his motion, for which he requires no leave, and leave it on the order paper? Is that what he is doing? Or what is he doing?

Senator Flynn: He would give notice for tomorrow.

Senator Roblin: That is what I want to find out.

• (1410)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, buoyed up, as it were, by the comments of Senator Flynn, I decided that I would make a motion amending the main motion referring the bill to a committee, along with the message, on the understanding that there would be no procedural objection. However, being doubly cautious, I said that if something developed in that short period between now and the time that we reach the Orders of the Day, I wanted to reserve my right to have given notice on this other motion.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—PROPOSED TUNNEL OR CAUSEWAY AND FERRIES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of our new government leader in the Senate.

Senator Argue: Without extra pay!

Senator Bonnell: As a preamble to my question, let me say that I think it is only right that the whip of the government party should be a member of the cabinet so that he can communicate to the cabinet the views and questions brought forth in the Senate and bring us the answers. As I have said before, Senator Phillips would be a great asset to the cabinet of this country.

An Hon. Senator: P.E.I. solidarity!

Senator Bonnell: I know that he is as concerned as I with respect to the isolation that we, as Islanders in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, sustain. I know that he is as concerned as I with the cost to Islanders of travel to other parts of Canada, and I know that he is as concerned as I with what it costs other Canadians to visit us in our fair isle.

I wonder if Senator Phillips could take as notice a question as to when the government of the day will be building the two new ferries for the Wood Island-Caribou run, and whether the government can give us more information as to the building of a tunnel, causeway or other permanent crossing for the Borden-Tormentine run.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for his question. I would point out to him that Prince Edward Island is still in the same position as it has been since Confederation. It has not moved and we still have the same problems. I will refer his question to the Leader of the Government, who will reply to it in due course.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, earlier today I moved that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be permitted to sit at 3.30 this afternoon. For the moment I am not anticipating great problems for the Leader of the Opposition when Order No. 1 is dealt with, with the support of Senator Flynn. However, just in case—and in view of an undertaking by Senator Grafstein that his submission will be no longer than approximately five minutes—I wonder whether it would be in order for the Senate to deal with Order No. 2 ahead of Order No. 1 so that the motion I moved earlier might in some way be a reality.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I do not know what the remarks of Senator Grafstein will contain. It was suggested earlier that he might be the only speaker on this item. This is the first opportunity that the Senate has had to debate the contents of this bill as it has come to us from the House of Commons. It is traditional that some explanation be given to the house as to the genesis and history behind the contents of such legislation.

Without pre-empting what Senator Grafstein's comments may be, I think that some general, basic remarks are owed to the house as to the origin of that bill. Some may presume that we have read all of the studies and conclusions of the Deschênes Commission, but that certainly is not the case with respect to myself. I have been busy with other things this summer, including Opus Dei, as some honourable senators may know. I would like a summary as to the background of this legislation.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips (Acting Leader of the Government): The Honourable Senator Doyle gave an introduction on the bill yesterday.

Senator Corbin: I was unavoidably absent.

Senator Phillips: I regret that.

Senator Corbin: I apologize. I will read Senator Doyle's remarks.

CRIMINAL CODE IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976 CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doyle, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), for the second reading of the Bill C-71, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act.—(Honourable Senator Grafstein).

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, this Senate chamber is a chamber of remembrance. Our walls are adorned by historic and vivid paintings—silent witnesses to the horrors of war. There, senators, on that wall, we see the Dead City of Arras. There, on that wall, we see the devastation of Ypres, where so many brave Canadians lost their lives. There, on that wall, we see the dismembered French peasant families, fragmented, refugees, returning to their devastated homes.

These portraits, honourable senators, were placed on our walls demanding that we remember, lest we forget. We celebrate Remembrance Day; we mourn our heroic dead; we pay homage to their sacrifice; and now, senators, we turn to a bill, a law, that tells us that history has its lessons.

This Bill C-71 says that justice delayed is justice denied. This bill says that Canada acts when we believe in protecting fundamental human values, even though the exercise of that belief may be painful and difficult. By this legislation Parliament is acting in its grandest role, as an instrument of democratic oversight. It is rare these days, in this chamber, that we can, on this side, commend the Government of Canada for its action on any legislation. However, today I do commend the Government of Canada, the Minister of Justice, the dispassionate work of Mr. Justice Deschênes, his legal officers, his consultants, his staff, and the equally invaluable work and contribution made by many volunteer and citizen groups that played such an important role in bringing forward and shaping the solution of this unfinished problem of our history.

Mr. Justice Deschênes, in his fact-finding process, uncovered pages of our history that we had not read before, to our surprise and dismay. There may be other lessons still to learn about our past public administration. However, Mr. Justice Deschênes, after careful, fair-minded and painstaking deliberation, sought to correct the scales—the imbalance in history. This legislation strongly sends a message that any means must match our ends. This is a Canadian legislative solution, made in Canada for Canadians. This is not retroactive legislation. Mr. Justice Deschênes, in his report, carefully stated:

We are not aiming to make acts, which were deemed innocent when committed, criminal now; such would be unacceptable retroactivity. But extermination of a civilian population, for instance, was already as much criminal in 1940 as it would be today, under the laws of all so-called civilized nations. We are only trying to establish now in Canada a forum where those suspected of having committed such offences may be tried, if found in Canada.

International law, particularly international human rights, has dramatically evolved since World War II. From lessons of the Holocaust, one would have thought genocide would stop. But we know, from our high hopes, that good words need good laws, that grand resolutions need good, democratic, enforceable law.

Reinhold Niebuhr, the great Christian theologian said: "Man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible, but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary." It is clear that since the Second World War acts of genocide and flagrant violations of human rights have continued unabated.

Over 70 wars have erupted in all parts of the globe in the last 40 years. New generations of innocent lives have been lost. The awful patterns and cycles of history do repeat themselves, so we must be ever vigilant. Human rights has become an agenda item in foreign policy in the world, yet even totalitarian states continue to play lip service to violence against their citizens and against humanity. How can we, as Canadians, condemn acts against humanity, on the one hand, and then delegate our responsibility to enforce violations of international law, on the other? We cannot preach and yet not act.

This bill is an operation in human pathology, an operation on the human condition that cuts at the cancer of intolerance and inhumanity, that seeks to excise from the human condition the cancer that would promote and propagate genocide. This bill wars against ideas of historical determinism—determinism based on race, or even determinism based on class. We know historical determinism means the abrogation of human choice—the demeaning and diminution of human rights. Yesterday the Vatican, in an unusual public statement, referred to the awful lessons of the Holocaust. I quote these brief words:

Nazi ideology was not only anti-Semitic but also profoundly demonic and anti-Christian.

People of all races and creeds were not exempt from criminal acts against humanity. So this bill to amend our Criminal Code, our Immigration Act, and our Citizenship Act is to redress the forces of history. The awful lesson is that once horror discriminates against one race, that horror cannot be contained and ultimately is indiscriminate. Horror consumes victims—absolute horror consumes all. Such was the Holocaust—an event that passes all human understanding.

Let us tell the world in loud and clarion law that Canada has an exacting standard of civilized conduct, and any failure to maintain those standards of humanity, in war or in peace, will be an act against our state, an act against our democracy, an act against our responsible government, an act against our civilized society.

Members of both my father's and mother's families who lived in several countries in Europe, after my parents immigrated to Canada early in this century, were decimated only because of their religion. Yet, this bill is not an act of retribution or retaliation but an act of justice. The Minister of Justice has correctly pointed out in the other place that this bill is retrospective, not retroactive.

I would like to quote from the Minister of Justice, who made an eloquent speech in the other place on August 20. He stated:

The acts or omissions encompassed in the definitions of war crimes and crimes against humanity have long been regarded as criminal by the community of nations. It is important to note that the military tribunal at Nuremberg reconfirmed the prior existence of these offences as have other courts since then. This Bill recognizes this fact and therefore would confer jurisdiction upon such cases.

He went on to state:

only offences which were known both to international law and to Canadian law at the time when such offences were committed will be brought before the courts. There will be no new offences created or applied retroactively to past acts or omissions, something which would be rightly viewed by Canadians and courts alike as repugnant to our concept of justice. Similarly, the proposed amendments to the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act would not have retroactive application for the same reasons.

Finally, the minister stated:

international law is evolutionary and has changed over time. The definitions of war crimes and crimes against humanity reflect this. In the past, Canada has amended its laws in order to conform to its international obligations. Often these amendments have also recognized the increasing acceptance in international law of the principle of according universal jurisdiction to the national courts in respect of internationally acknowledged offences.

Honourable senators, we must ensure that the Government of Canada, and its law officers, federal and provincial, swiftly pursue the lawful prosecution of alleged war criminals, and in that awful but just process we must equally ensure that our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the requirements of international justice and due process will not be sacrificed. When we pass this bill, as we will, we will say to past generations of Canadians, "We remembered!"

We say to the present generation that we will act. We say to Canadian generations yet to come that this generation was courageous enough to learn the lessons of history, to correct the past, to correct the distorted cycle of history; that the Canadian idea will not permit flagrant breaches of international standards of humanity; and that the Canadian idea does not and will not allow states or individuals, acting under unjust orders, to commit acts beyond human understanding. For justice to be done justice must appear to be done. Just laws and just acts are the essence of a just society. So, honourable senators, let us support this law which places Canada on the just side of history.

My old dean at the University of Toronto Law School, Caesar Wright, often quoted Mr. Justice Felix Frankfurter on the importance of law in society and the importance of law as a vehicle of reform.

... fragile as reason is, and limited as the law is as the expression of the institutionalized medium of reason, that is all we have standing between us and the tyranny of mere will and the cruelty of unbridled, undisciplined feeling.

I support this bill, honourable senators, and commend it to you for your speedy passage. Justice, justice will be done! First, justice when we pass this bill, and, then, justice again when criminals in our midst are swiftly brought to the bar of justice. The walls of this chamber will then testify, as they do, that we remembered, that we did not forget!

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I support this bill, but first I have a few very brief remarks to make.

The crimes committed in World War II are unforgivable and they should and must be remembered. But let us not confine our pursuit of justice to the grim and relentless pursuit of a group of aging Nazis or Nazi collaborators. Let us concern ourselves with all crimes against humanity, whether those crimes were committed 50 years ago or 50 hours ago. Let us not merely target those who present no contemporary political or economic problems. It does not take a great deal of courage to support a condemnation of the violation of human rights if those violations occurred many years ago. That is why the support for this measure will be unanimous. Let us demonstrate the same courage, if it is necessary, to condemn contemporary violations of human rights.

Just check the record of Amnesty International and see the violations of human rights which are imposed on suffering humanity in many countries today. I find it rather disturbing, honourable senators—and it does not reflect credit on any of us—that in all too many instances where those violations of human rights are alleged to exist today we are careful not to say anything. Perhaps we think it is bad politics to do so, or that criticism or condemnation on our part may affect some economic, trade or political relationship with the offending country, and so we back away. In my view, this measure, Bill C-71, should have been passed years ago, so far as those aging Nazis are concerned, but, world-wide, there are many violations of human rights out there crying out for our Canadian conscience to be as forthright with respect to these violations as we are being forthright at this moment with respect to the crimes of those aging Nazis. I am afraid that the record will show that all too often we defer condemnation of contemporary violations of human rights for trivial or less than honourable reasons. I think that if this marks a new departure from careful, Canadian diplomacy, then let it be a new beginning.

• (1430)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am prompted to rise to agree most profoundly with the brief remarks of Senator Perrault.

Often, in matters of human rights, we can be very selective. There are some violators who pass unnoticed. It often seems to me that if they are violators on the extreme right, we do not really talk much about them. Surely to heavens, there must be someone whose human rights have been violated in the great Republic of Chile. Not all the violators of human rights are on the other side of the Iron Curtain.

I think that we must not ever freeze in time—that is, historically, or in area—that is, geographically. I have always thought that Bill C-71 was a little narrowly focussed. Sometimes, if our friends do it, no matter how bad it is, we must look upon that with silent composure or composed silence. That is not, I think, good enough for a country which maintains that a due and eternal regard for the human rights of all individuals is one of the basic foundations of its society. One is troubled about that.

I should have thought that we might have had a better bill than Bill C-71 if more time had been taken to reflect upon some of these very serious matters.

There are many people in the world today whose rights have been grossly, cruelly and eternally violated. At the United Nations I used to be so impressed by the fact that it was so easy for anyone to stand and denounce the Soviet Union. No one ever seemed to suggest that there was anything going on in another great Communist state, namely, the Republic of China, except a lovely lot of Jeffersonian democratic seminars. Do we really believe that that is the case? I have no animosity towards the Republic of China. It is a fine country doing a great job under enormous difficulties, but let us not be so selective as to confine it to an era, a limited phase in time, or to just one part of the world. Tyranny should be opposed universally, not just retroactively but, as Senator Perrault so well said, up to this very moment in our existence.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the remarks of Senator Perrault and Senator Macquarrie prompt me to rise. If I correctly understand the remarks of the sponsor of the bill, this measure would apply to any crime recently committed in any country of the world, if the guilty party were in Canada. Therefore this bill is not restricted to crimes perpetrated during the last war. It applies to these crimes, but also to others which were committed since then or which might be committed in the future, if my understanding of the remarks of the sponsor of the bill is correct, and that is the reason why I have no objection. If it were simply a matter of dealing with events which took place 50 years ago, I suggest it would be quite illogical. Whatever one might say, we must seek out the people who are guilty of these crimes. But I think it would have been a mistake to restrict the search to these people. I think Senator Perrault and Senator Macquarrie might be reassured by the sponsor of the bill because, although I did not read all the fine print, I did listen closely to his remarks yesterday and I think he will agree with me when I say that crimes against humanity committed since the last war, and even before and since the last war, in any country of the world, might lead to indictment under this legislation if the guilty person were on Canadian territory.

[English]

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, before Senator Doyle is called upon to close the debate, I might have just a word in elaboration of the intervention I made yesterday when I noted, with satisfaction, Senator Doyle's assurance that "the presumption of innocence until guilt is proven" applies to portions of this bill that relate to amending the Criminal Code.

I then expressed my concern that in the portions referring to the Immigration Act somewhat different language was used. While I had not looked it up at the time, I have done so since, and this occurs in clause 3 of the bill, which amends subsection 19(1) of the Immigration Act, 1976, by adding to that subsection, which states:

No person shall be granted admission if he is a member of any of the following classes:

(j) persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe have committed an act or omission outside Canada that constituted a war crime or a crime against humanity ...

[Senator Macquarrie.]

I expressed my reservations about condemning such a person on the basis of a reasonable belief that he had done such and such an act.

I have thought it over since then and I make an easy distinction when I recall to myself that the "right" to immigrate to Canada is not a right but is a privilege, and there is no reason why Canadian officials ought not to have the authority to withhold the privilege of immigration to Canada and Canadian citizenship from a person in relation to whom there are reasonable grounds to believe certain things.

I am quite satisfied with the legislation as it is. If I have caused Senator Doyle any difficulty in digging deeper, I apologize. I think the basis of the legislation is sound, with the distinction that I have made between the criminal law and the privilege of immigration to Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doyle, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips:

That the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 1(c) and 8 to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, without amendment;

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c), to which the Commons has disagreed; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.)

MOTION TO REFER QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS TO BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to begin my comments by moving a motion—I will not use the word "amendment" in case that will cause some difficulty.

Senator Flynn, quite helpfully, referred to rule 36, which reads:

When a question is under debate, a motion shall not be received unless it is a motion to amend the question, to refer the question to a committee . . .

From my point of view, that was quite helpful, because it removed the necessity of taking the other route, which I thought might be necessary. Therefore, I move:

That the question, together with the message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated August 31, 1987, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and report.

If there is to be a procedural consideration of the amendment, then I would be pleased to listen

● (1440)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the question, together with the message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated August 31, 1987, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators—

Hon. Orville H. Phillips (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

Senator MacEachen: I would like to make some comments at this stage.

Senator Phillips: But I have a question on a point of order. I do not have a copy of the motion that was made by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, but I believe it stated “the question”, and I would like clarification of what that refers to. In my opinion, it should possibly read “the motion”, in reference to the motion presented by the Honourable Senator Murray. I do not know what the word “question” refers to in this motion.

Senator MacEachen: I have no hesitation or difficulty in substituting the word “motion” for “question”. I think I could make an argument that “the question” is valid, but if it meets with the approval of the Senate, let us say “the motion”.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It should read “the question”.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I think it should read “that the motion be not now put but that it be referred to the committee”, but it is only a question of form.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, most of the procedural references in cases like this use the words “the question”. The rule to which Senator Flynn referred reads:

When a question is under debate, a motion shall not be received unless it is a motion to amend the question, to refer the question to a committee, to adjourn the debate, and so on. Therefore, I think it is the right procedural word to use, “the question” being the motion. For purposes of explanation that is what “the question” means. We do not intend it to mean anything more than that.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, it is certainly not my intention to delay a vote or a decision on this particular motion by making a very long speech—

Senator Perrault: Never!

Senator MacEachen: —but I think I should explain why, in our view, it is necessary to make a further attempt to improve Bill C-22.

Honourable senators, the Special Senate Committee on Bill C-22 and the Senate itself took a very serious look at this particular bill. It developed a series of amendments which were then sent to the House of Commons and debated. It is true that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did accept an amendment, one which, in the view of certain members of the special committee, made a meaningful improvement to the bill, because it will have the effect of assisting consumers who are users of generic drugs. However, it is also clear that, apart from that single effort to seek an accommodation, the other amendments made by the Senate were turned down. That has not been received, certainly by this side of the house, with satisfaction. We still have serious reservations about this bill, and we feel that it is necessary to make a further attempt to seek improvements to it.

If today we were faced with a vote on the motion made by Senator Murray, we would be faced, as he described it, with the moment of truth. Certainly it is not agreeable to members of this side of the house to accept that motion at the present time. We believe that, rather than accepting the motion and accepting what we consider to be a very bad bill, we ought to make a further effort in committee to secure improvement.

Let me make it clear that it is not our intention, nor has it ever been our intention, to seek a confrontation with the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Phillips: Whoever suggested that?

Senator MacEachen: Our effort has been to seek a confrontation with the bill and some of its bad features. That is what the special committee and senators on this side of the house have attempted to confront. We believe that a further effort ought to be made to seek improvements that might be acceptable to the House of Commons and to the Senate. I think it is too early to give up that effort—to give up the struggle which has been so courageously and successfully carried on under the leadership of Senator Bonnell.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Obviously there is at this stage a clear difference of opinion between the majority in the House of Commons and the majority in the Senate with respect to this particular bill. It is not a remarkable phenomenon that there should be a difference of opinion between the two chambers in a parliamentary system. It happens frequently not only in Canada but in other countries. What is to be done when there is a clear difference of opinion? Surely there ought to be an effort undertaken to seek an accommodation or a compromise so that at least the concerns expressed in this chamber could be ameliorated and alleviated.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has quite categorically stated that he will not participate in any conference between members of the House of Commons and members of the Senate.

Senator Haidasz: Shame!

Senator MacEachen: That is his right, but it ought to be pointed out that the conference method has been used in this country—

Senator Perrault: Many times.

Senator MacEachen: As Senator Perrault says, many times.

Senator Flynn: Not since he was here!

Senator MacEachen: It has not been used in recent years, but, surely, honourable senators, when we are faced with a difference of opinion, a disagreement of this nature and depth, the reasonable thing to do would be to at least see whether there could be an opportunity to work out the differences and reach an accommodation with the minister and the other house. The minister has said no to a conference.

● (1450)

Senator Frith: And you cannot force one.

Senator MacEachen: We cannot force the minister to come. He has said no to a conference, and he has felt, I think wrongly, that he would be coming hat in hand to the Senate.

Senator Frith: Head uncovered!

Senator MacEachen: Or head uncovered, but—

Senator Frith: Let him wear a hat! I think he would get unanimous consent to wear a hat!

Senator MacEachen: —other parliamentarians in former years did not take that view. So a conference at the moment is out of the question. However, we do have left to us the opportunity of referring this matter to a committee.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: To another committee.

Senator MacEachen: To a committee.

Senator MacDonald: To another committee!

Senator MacEachen: To another committee.

Senator Phillips: To the one it should have gone to in the first place!

Senator Frith: Then you must be pleased that it is finally getting it!

Senator MacEachen: To the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee of which Senator MacDonald is the distinguished deputy chairman.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator MacEachen: I am sure the fact that he is on the committee is an added reason why this difficulty ought to be sent to that committee—

Senator Frith: He has always wanted it and now he will get it.

Senator MacEachen: —because he has taken a reasonable view—

Senator Barootes: Put Senator Bonnell on it!

Senator Petten: He will be. It will be arranged!

Senator MacEachen: —and has listened to various points of view. I do not think there is any mystery as to why at this stage—

Senator Balfour: No mystery at all!

Senator MacEachen: I do not think there ought to be any mystery at this stage as to why the message and the motion are being sent to the Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. The reason is that the special committee has gone out of existence.

An Hon. Senator: Good riddance!

Senator MacEachen: It does not exist any more. It is defunct. It is my view that it would be more expedient to send the message and the motion to an existing committee rather than going through the process of reconstituting the special committee. Now, if honourable senators on either side of the house wish to change the motion to reconstitute the special committee, then I have no objection.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no!

Senator Balfour: You are stonewalling!

Senator MacEachen: However, I thought it would be preferable to send the matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and report.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: If one looks at the terms of reference that are assigned to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, as outlined in the "Rules of the Senate of Canada", one will see that the subject matters of patents and royalties are specifically mentioned. So, I am following, in a sense, the normal course or procedure.

If honourable senators want to argue again why we set up the special committee in the first place, I am not prepared to do so at the moment. I am arguing that it is expedient to use the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for this matter.

Honourable senators, I have just one other point, maybe two, that I want to mention. In using this technique of referring a message from the House of Commons to a committee we are not breaking new ground. I can cite a number of precedents which I have looked up indicating that on more than one occasion the Senate has referred a message received from the House of Commons to a committee for consideration and report. It is not new. It is not precedent creating. One incident occurred when Senator Olson was Minister of Agriculture, and honourable senators may recall it. On that occasion his bill was amended by the Senate. The amendment was rejected by the House of Commons, a message was sent back to the Senate, and the Senate sent the message to a committee. The message was examined and the Senate did not insist on its amendment.

Senator Frith: That was the report of the committee.

Senator MacEachen: There is another case that I would cite when a similar process was followed and when the Senate did insist on the principle of its amendment. After consultation with the government, a compromise amendment was accepted. It is on the basis of that kind of precedent that we feel that it is useful to make a further effort to seek some accommodation and some compromise with respect to Bill C-22. That is why we have chosen to send the message and the motion to the committee, in the hope that further thought, further discussion and further reflection—

Senator Frith: And evidence.

Senator MacEachen: And further evidence, if necessary—will make it possible for both houses to agree on a bill that we can all support. That is the sole purpose of this effort, and I want to conclude by saying that if honourable senators undertake this task in good faith, I believe it will be possible to achieve results that may not be clear at the moment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I want again to show my concern about this bill by making the following point: that the Leader of the Opposition has referred—as he has on many occasions in both houses in his speeches—to this side of the house. I want the record to show that what he said is totally supported at least by myself and I am sure by a number of us on this side of the house.

Senator Corbin: And maybe even some independents. Who knows?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: I want to assure Senator Thériault that we have known for a long time that we are entirely surrounded. There is no way that we can impose our will on this place for the time being. I was calculating the other day that it may take about seven years, which is quite a long time, and I will be gone before the present majority will disappear.

Senator Argue: That is assuming a lot!

Senator Flynn: What exactly will be the composition of the Senate at that time I do not know. The Meech Lake accord might alter the face of this house.

Senator Argue: Meech Lake might never happen!

Senator Flynn: I want to congratulate Senator MacEachen on the tone of his remarks.

Senator Perrault: He has been very reasonable.

Senator Flynn: He has sought to avoid confrontation. As he knows, I take the same vein all the time.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Lucier: Easy, Jacques, easy!

Senator Flynn: I do not know whether the purpose of the motion is to try to seek accommodation with the government or whether it is a face-saving device, but, either way, what is important at this point—and I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to clarify the program he has in mind—is that he assure the Senate, and particularly the public, that the Liberal majority in the Senate is not delaying the final decision on this matter indefinitely.

Senator Perrault: Never!

● (1500)

Senator Flynn: I was wondering whether it would be possible to agree to a time limit for the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to report to the Senate and for the Senate to make a final decision on this report, as we did previously in June. For example, if the Banking Committee could deal with this matter during the course of next week and report to the Senate around September 14 or 15, the Senate could then make a final decision around September 18. If that were an order of the Senate, I think on this side of the house we would see no problem and would not look upon the motion of the Leader of the Opposition as merely a delaying tactic. In other words, with that kind of arrangement, I think we could have a meeting of minds.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, as chairman of the committee under discussion, I would like to assure all members of the Senate that I certainly will not allow the sittings of that committee to be used merely as a delaying tactic, if I am able to stop it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes: Do you want to travel?

Senator Frith: Is that a question or a threat?

Senator Sinclair: We may call Senator Barootes as a witness, I do not know.

However, honourable senators, in view of the powers vested in that committee under the rules of the Senate, I think the Senate should have enough confidence in the committee to leave it to us to operate responsibly and not be faced with any deadlines. Certainly, as I look at this message, I find I have some difficulties with it. There are some things that bother me in the language used. They may not be substantive; I don't know. In any event, having been given this message point by point, the committee should look at it in that fashion. We will not delay this matter, but neither will we hurry it. It is too important.

Furthermore, honourable senators, as I see it, there seems to be a certain level of "hype" which I think we as a committee should forget about. The committee should be looking at the facts in trying to determine what is right, and then make its report. We are not a political committee; we are a fact-finding committee. That will be our job and we will do it to the best of our ability, without undue delay and without having any limitation placed on our time.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I was not doubting the objectivity of the chairman. He knows that I have great respect for him. However, what I have in mind is that the committee has no other job than to seek the possibility of a compromise. There is no doubt that the committee will invite the minister to appear. As Senator MacEachen mentioned, the minister has said that he would not want a conference, but we have not yet reached that point.

It seems to me that a week or ten days is surely enough time for this committee to make its report. If it needs more, the chairman can always come back to the Senate and ask for a delay. Then, if there is justification, the matter is before the Senate.

In other words, I am seeking to have harmony in relation to what is going to happen. That is why I was pressing for a date on the report of the committee. The chairman can report that the committee is not ready, if that is the case, but it seems to me that September 15 is an appropriate date. It is a Tuesday, and if the committee presents a final report, then the Senate can make a decision in the following two days. If the committee does not have a final report by that time, the chairman can always ask the Senate for a further delay.

However, to send it to the committee without any fixed date would be very difficult to accept, from the viewpoint of the government. That is the only reason I was asking for a limit on the time the committee would take to present its first report to the Senate and for the Senate to make up its mind on the report of that committee.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I think that the motion in amendment put by the government leader is a sensible one, and, to answer Senator Flynn's question, it is not related to face-saving but is an attempt to give the government and the House of Commons an opportunity to come to an accommodation on what has arisen out of the public hearings by the special committee under the chairmanship of Senator Bonnell, which apparently has majority support amongst the public in Canada. I think the honourable senator will find that to be true. Nonetheless, it is subject to argument.

Senator Flynn: I do not agree with that.

Senator Everett: You may not agree, but some recent polls have shown that majority support does exist for the Senate's amendments.

However, honourable senators, that is not my purpose in rising on this issue. It is more to deal with the obligation of the House of Commons in respect of a confrontation between the two houses. At Confederation John A. Macdonald, in discussing the question as to why he would give an appointed house plenary powers, stated that he thought that an issue that came from the House of Commons that was not accepted by the Senate, and was either amended or rejected, would return to the House of Commons, which would then consult with the electorate and, if the electorate was in favour of the version put forward by the House of Commons, they would put it forward to the Senate again. Further, he said:

I cannot conceive of a situation in which the Senate would reject the bill after consultation.

What we keep hearing from the other place and from the government is that the elected representatives must prevail. Honourable senators, it is not the elected representatives who should prevail; it is the public who should prevail. Further, it ill behoves the minister and the Prime Minister, before the amendments are even passed, to say that they will not accept an amendment from the Senate. That is not consultation with the public. It ill behoves the minister to say that he will not enter into a conference with the Senate—the conference being a long-established tradition between the two houses.

I believe that the House of Commons has an obligation here, because the Senate is an established body of Parliament; it has plenary powers and it has every right to exercise those powers. If the House of Commons is stating that we should not exercise those powers, then they should change them. However, I do not think we should allow it to go abroad that those powers exist, but, because they were given to us in 1867, we should not use them. If we cannot use them, then we should not have them, and we would not be doing the job that we had been given to do.

We are not just talking about powers that were given in 1867. They were updated at the Meech Lake conference between the premiers of all the provinces and the Prime Minister of Canada, in which they said that the Senate should be appointed from panels by the provinces. Nothing was said about changing the powers. They did say they would have a conference on the matter, but that, effectively, is an endorsement of the powers that exist. Until those powers are changed we have every right to exercise them.

What bothers me about this is the idea that is enunciated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that we have no right to confront the elective house. We have every right to confront it. They have an obligation to deal with those issues and to enter into some sort of discussion to at least arrive at a compromise on the difference of opinion. Therefore, I think the matter should be referred to the committee. It is to be hoped that the minister will come to that committee and discuss the issue, and that he will arrive at a point where he can enter into a conference with this house so that we can resolve this very serious matter.

If the government and if the House of Commons take the view that the Senate has no right to do what it has every right to do, then, in my judgment, there should be a confrontation—one that I would otherwise hope to avoid. But, under those circumstances, I believe there should be a confrontation.

Senator MacDonald: Senator Everett, will you permit a question? Did I understand you to imply that a conference is inevitable?

Senator Everett: No. I hope that after the matter has been dealt with in the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee the government will see its way clear to agreeing to a conference. You must remember that the minister has said that he would not agree to any conference with the Senate on the matter. I am saying that he should agree to such a conference. I am not saying he must. He has the choice as to whether or not he does, but I am saying that the best advice we could give him would be to enter into a conference with the Senate.

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the mover of the motion or, alternatively, the chairman of the committee. I have listened attentively to all the remarks made today. I note with interest that the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce indicated that his committee was not a political committee but a fact-finding committee. I entirely agree with that. I happen to be a member of that committee and I support that view. I would remind the chairman that it is because of statements like that, I suspect, that the committee was not given the mandate to look into Bill C-22 in the first place.

Having said that, if the bill is to be referred to the committee, I would like to raise a couple of questions with the mover of the motion or with the chairman of the committee. Is it the intent of the mover or of the chairman that this committee be allowed to travel? If so, what would the budget be? We know what the last budget was. I happen to know the chairman's views on travelling the last time we travelled, and I would be interested in knowing the views of the mover or the chairman now.

The chairman has answered the question as to time frame. I respect his answer and I agree with it.

I have another question. If the motion should be adopted and the whole matter be referred now to the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, is it the intent of senators opposite to add to the committee the presence of the Quebec Liberal senators, who were so sadly absent from the Special Committee on Bill C-22?

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I think the question has been put to me as chairman of the committee. I would certainly raise any question of travelling with members of the committee with the recommendation that we would not do so—with the strong recommendation that we would not do so. Senator Cogger is a member of the committee and Senator MacDonald is the deputy chairman of that committee. If I tell you in advance how I will vote if there is a tie, I think you can rest assured there will be no travelling.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, with all due respect, and the most profound respect for one of the most awesome people in Canada, before whom all of us quake, I still do not think he should say that a Senate committee will not dare oppose him, even if he is its chairman.

Senator Sinclair: I have only given you my opinion. You can come and see, if you like.

Senator Cogger: I would like to ask a follow-up question of the chairman of the committee. You have answered all of my questions except the final one. What about the presence of Quebec Liberal senators on this committee?

Senator Sinclair: When we have our meetings, all members of the Senate will be welcome to express their views. If they feel they have something to add, I am sure they will be there.

Senator MacEachen: Senator Cogger must know that Senator Riel is a member of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. Is he not a Quebec senator?

Senator Cogger: Yes, he is.

Hon. Efstathios W. Barootes: He is not a Liberal.

Senator Frith: Who isn't?

Senator Barootes: I apologize. May I ask a question of either the mover or the chairman of the committee? There is a good body of evidence available at the present time—I think about a foot and a half of it, synopsisized—by witnesses who have given testimony before this Special Committee on Bill C-22. If possible, and not to pre-empt the procedures of the committee, I would like to ascertain if there is any possibility that you will be recalling all or any of the witnesses who appeared before, first, the House of Commons legislative committees, and, second, the special committee here? I am beginning to wonder whether we are not ruminating on this like a cow with several stomachs. How many times are we going to go through this evidence before somebody comes to a conclusion and makes a recommendation? Are we going to fish or cut bait?

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, once again I say to Senator Barootes that he has to have some confidence in the people who are on that committee operating in a reasonable way. That is the way I would like to leave it.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I feel a little apologetic in joining the ranks of the debaters this afternoon, because it appears from listening to my good friend and neighbour, Senator Everett, that there is some danger of this degenerating into a debate on the Constitution. If that seems to be one of the issues before the Senate this afternoon, I might offer a few comments on the position that our chamber occupies in the scheme of things.

Needless to say, I was pleased, but not surprised, when I heard that the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada had offered some good advice to his colleagues in the Senate—and my leader expressed the same good advice the other day—to the effect that at the end of the day the Senate must recognize the moral authority of the House of Commons to have its way in this matter.

I was also relieved, but again not surprised, to hear that the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate—at least he left this impression with me—has said that after all his efforts, no matter how many they were or how repetitious they were or how hopeful they might have been, he, himself, would concur with the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada in saying that the House of Commons has the right to have its views respected by this chamber.

I think that that is a wise position for this chamber to take. That is not to say that the Senate does not have a legal authority to reject totally the views of the House of Commons. Reference has been made to other second chambers which have a legal authority to reject material that goes to them from their lower chambers, but no mention was made of the fact that in those instances there is a tie-breaking mechanism, a deadlock-breaking mechanism. That is certainly the situation in Australia and in the House of Lords. The United States has a congressional system, which is somewhat different from ours. We do not have quite the same arrangement, nor the need for that arrangement, in view of the principle of responsible government that we have here. But the fact is that this chamber does have the legal authority, the constitutional right, to say no to the House of Commons. The question is whether the Senate should do so.

The Governor General has the right to say no to the laws of this country, according to the Constitution, but I do not think anyone here would suggest that the Governor General should exercise that authority. I think the last monarch to reject the advice of the Commons of England was Queen Anne, who I think was concerned about a bill respecting the Church of England. That was, I think, in the early part of the eighteenth century.

Hon. John B. Stewart: No, no.

Senator Roblin: It was not Queen Anne? Then who was it?

Senator Stewart: Queen Anne is correct but the measure was the Scots Militia Bill of 1707.

Senator Roblin: I am delighted to know that, but I do know what the Queen said. She said, "Elle s'avisera", which meant that she would consider it. The terms of that particular constitution convention meant that she was not going to consider it at all.

But, in any case, we have these legal authorities within our Constitution. They are there in respect of the legalities of the situation, but no one would suggest they be relied upon as the authority to perform certain acts.

I think the reason for the Senate being discreet in these matters is clear. It seems to me that we have certain duties that we should discharge. We have the right to warn, the right to advise, the right to amend, the right to counsel and, although we have the right ultimately to say, "No", I suggest that we should be very careful before we seek a confrontation with the House of Commons on matters of that kind, because if the members of the House of Commons do something wrong, and if this bill is wrong, they will have to account for it to somebody—to the public. When will this chamber present itself to the people of Canada for endorsement of any of its acts?

Senator MacEachen: As quickly as possible!

Senator Gigantès: As soon as the Senate is reformed.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend had supported me in my efforts to get the question of an elected Senate approved by this chamber on previous occasions, I would have been pleased.

Senator Gigantès: I have always supported you.

Senator Roblin: You have been remarkably quiet until now. In any case, so far as that goes, that is not the situation at the present time. We will not be put to the challenge of justifying our conduct to the people of Canada.

As I have said before, and I do not mind repeating it, this chamber is responsible in no parliamentary sense whatsoever and is representative in no democratic sense whatsoever. How can a body which is not democratic in the aspect of responsibility, or representative of the parliamentary system, presume that it can have its way, no matter how misguided it may think other people are? It seems to me that we should draw back from the brink of seeking a confrontation.

I must say, however, that I congratulate Senator Everett, that I congratulate Senator MacEachen, and that I congratulate the Liberal majority in the Senate, because I think they will be the catalytic factor in getting the Senate reformed sooner than some might think.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: "Lay on, Macduff."

Senator Roblin: It is now becoming clearly obvious to the people of Canada how unrepresentative this chamber is; that it has a lack of any element of responsibility in respect of the parliamentary system, and that there is no workable, accepted and effective—let's put "effective" in there—method by which a deadlock between the two houses can be resolved. We proceed by a system of conventions which may or may not work. They have not been resorted to in recent times, and if they are resorted to now, we will see whether or not they work.

No matter what reforms we make to this chamber, one of the factors which has to be considered carefully is the method of resolving deadlocks between two chambers in a democracy. That is something we have to give careful consideration to.

I do not know what tricks my friends opposite have up their sleeves. I am not entirely convinced that they will be able to, by this device of having another committee look at this bill, equip themselves with arguments or with seductive proposals that will persuade the members of the House of Commons that they should accept the second set of changes that the Senate may now be considering. I think it is unlikely that that will happen.

Senator Sinclair: Let's wait and see!

Senator Roblin: Senator Sinclair says, "Let's wait and see." I will wait and see. I am on the committee. I do not really like the chairman of the committee being too positive about what the committee will do, because I think that committees have a life of their own, and, while they accept reasonable leadership—and my friend usually provides that—one cannot state as a fact on the floor of this chamber that a committee will do such and such, because it may or may not.

I do not know what will happen when this committee meets. I am not opposed to the committee meeting. I think it would be pointless to oppose that, because the majority of the Senate wants that. I simply express my view that I will be surprised if it is productive. The Leader of the Opposition seems to think it might be.

Hon. Thomas H. Lefebvre: The productivity of the committee depends on the membership of the committee.

Senator Roblin: The membership of the committee is good, but we have to give them good material to chew on.

Senator Lefebvre: They've got it!

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend has good material for them to chew on, I have not heard about it yet, but I am willing to have him come to the committee. He will have my support, if he wants to appear before that committee and tell us what to do.

Senator Lefebvre: You are a member of the committee. You make it productive.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend will have plenty of opportunity to introduce his productive ideas, and I invite him to do so.

Senator Lefebvre: Check the record!

Senator Roblin: If he appears, I will be there and I will be listening, but I do not know whether he will be able to convince me or not.

Senator Lefebvre: We will see!

Senator Roblin: Yes, we will see!

But the point I think the Senate ought to consider at greater length than it has up to now is how long we want this procedure to continue. I do not think there is anything wrong with the suggestion made by my colleague that the committee must draw up its resolution and get the job done expeditiously. I think this chamber ought to be willing to agree that it will not take an unlimited time to consider the report of the committee.

Why do I say that? Experience! I have watched what has been going on with respect to this bill. While I do not expect everyone here to agree with me, I think that the overall proceedings have been drawn out in a quite unnecessary fashion, and that it would be a good idea if honourable senators could agree that we have had enough of that and that we are going to send this back to committee—there is no escaping that course—but that we should ask the committee to be expeditious. I hope that the chairman, if we do not agree in the chamber, will have some idea as to when the committee ought to finish its work. I think that this chamber ought to say how long it will take to deal with the matter when it is brought back before the Senate. I believe it was Professor Northcott who said that "work takes the time allotted to do it in." Heaven knows that is the truth.

• (1530)

Senator Frith: It was Parkinson.

Senator Roblin: If we set some kind of time limit on how long we want to consider this matter both in committee and in the chamber, I think it will be helpful.

I come back to my main point: I am relieved. I am relieved that the Leader of the Opposition has at least given me the firm impression this afternoon that he does not intend to thwart the will of the House of Commons, no matter how much he may disagree with them. He recognizes that at the moment he speaks for a political party that was soundly rejected at the polls last time out, and that the present Government of Canada is a political party and it will face the electors itself in due course; and if they do not like the things that are being done, the word will come through—loud and clear, no doubt. But that still does not provide any reason, in my opinion, why the Senate should, in the last analysis, think that it should put its foot down and thwart the expressed opinion of the House of Commons on this particular measure.

My conclusion is that the sooner the Senate is reformed, the better.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: If we want to exercise these powers, then we have to have the political legitimacy to do so.

Senator Petten: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: We cannot claim that political legitimacy. We can claim the legal right—that is easy; but we cannot claim the political legitimacy to act in the manner that some would have us do under our present situation. The reform of the Senate has now become a matter of prime importance. The Meech Lake accord, whatever else it does, puts the reform of the Senate at the top of the constitutional agenda, and I am glad about that.

Senator Argue: About ten or eleven people!

Senator Roblin: All right, ten people. If you wanted to abolish the Senate today, you would still require ten provinces to do it. Look at section 41 and you will see that. This idea of ten with respect to the Senate is not exactly new. I think you will find that with respect to the matter of abolishing the Senate you require the unanimous consent of ten provinces. But I do not want to get into that argument. I do not know where that stray thought came from at the moment, because it is not germane to what we are doing now. What I want to say is that if this debate does nothing else, it illustrates the need for Senate reform.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: I want a reformed Senate. No matter what changes you make you have to have a system of dealing with deadlocks between the two houses incorporated in your reform. My personal choice is an elected Senate, but my final position is that any Senate but this one would be a better one for the country in the future.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I am a member of this committee and I want to pledge this: I will not be part of any operation to unduly delay consideration of this measure; but I can tell you, as one who participated in some of the hearings of this committee across Canada—some of you served on that committee and others did not—that there is widespread concern in this country about the effects of the government's measures. Poverty groups have come before us and senior citizens' groups and veterans' groups. But, honourable senators, keep this in mind: Most of the Canadian provinces, the provinces to which you now wish to entrust the Senate, have asked the Senate to act on their behalf to oppose the measure.

Senator Argue: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: We are not without some legitimacy when we say: "The regions have said to us that this measure will impose an undue financial burden on them and we ask you to act on our behalf." I have listened to the reasonable appeal of Senator Roblin, but keep that in mind. When I was in Victoria for the hearings, the health officials in the province of B.C. said, "This will cost a great deal of money. This is not a fair proposal. You are supposed to be representing us."

An Hon. Senator: Try Quebec!

Senator Perrault: When we exercise our responsibilities as senators and say, "Yes, the Province of New Brunswick says that this is bad, the Province of Newfoundland says that it is bad; the Province of B.C. says that it is bad"—

An Hon. Senator: Ontario!

Senator Perrault: —we go down the list—admittedly Quebec is supportive, I want to be fair. However, most of the plants are in the province of Quebec. Surely we should not be criticized for acting at the behest of the provinces that we are supposed to represent.

I want to assure senators of this, as well—and I have been around politics for a while—this so-called "delay" is no strategic ploy by the Liberals to upset the government. I hope that you can give us more credit for our concern about our fellow human beings than that. We are concerned about the fact that the measure in some of its provisions will place on Canadians an undue financial burden. By the year 1995, for example, Canadians will have paid $1.3 billion in extra drug costs if the measure goes through as it is now.

Is there a better way out there? I happen to believe that through the technique proposed by our leader there is a better way there. There is a way to determine whether or not this is really in the interests of Canadians; whether or not we can change certain features of the bill. Good thinking people in the Senate can advance recommendations which will be, in the end, helpful to the people that we are all purporting to serve.

I do not think that the dialogue is helped at all by the Prime Minister bullying and threatening the Senate by saying, "If you do not watch out, we will abolish you!" I do not think that it is helped by Mr. Andre saying, "It is the triple L Senate: lazy, late and Liberal." I do not believe that that is the kind of talk which contributes constructively to the dialogue, that inspires senators in any section of the house. I know that even senators who are of a different political persuasion have been offended by some of the language used by our friends over in the Commons. We do not need any more of that. We need that committee to get to work—

Senator Flynn: Outside the house—

Senator Perrault: —without wasting time, and we need honest, concerted consultations—privately, perhaps—to work out a way that is better for the Canadian people. I, for one, as a member of that committee, will dedicate my efforts in that direction.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I would say first that Bill C-22 is not a matter of conscience. If it were a matter of conscience, of course, each one of us would have to follow his or her conscience, whatever his or her party's position and also whatever the members of the House of Commons might have decided.

The other basic point is that the Liberal Party was not elected at the last election, but rather the Conservative Party. It follows in my view that, this not being a matter of conscience where each and everyone must follow the dictates of his or her inner voice, it seems to me that we must yield to the will of the people who elected the Conservative Party in the last election.

This does not mean the Senate has no role to play, but simply that in my view it has played it. It made its voice heard over these last few months. I believe the committee chaired by Senator Bonnell, as well as my party have made their positions clear. The time has now come in my view to yield to the will of the people's elected representatives and accept the legislation as passed by the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator De Bané: Of course we can explain why in our view the legislation is ill advised, but in my opinion that is beside the point.

● (1540)

[English]

The Liberal Party was not elected to government; the Conservatives were, and we must take stock of that fact.

Certainly one can argue that some constitutional right has been bestowed on the Senate, and that is true, but one also has to take stock of the spirit of the times. From 1867 until the early 1940s the federal government used its power of disallowance a great number of times, but since the 1940s it has refrained from doing so.

A few years ago there was a request from Quebecers to the federal government to use that power after the proclamation of Bill 101. The position of the federal government was, "We have to live by democratic principles. That law was enacted by a duly elected government; if you don't like it, change the government."

In my opinion, now that the Senate has made its voice heard and its position known, it is time to bow to the will of the elected representatives of the people in the House of Commons, and I would urge my colleagues not to put any more roadblocks in the way of passing this bill which has already been passed by the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, it will not come as any great surprise to the members of the Senate if I say that I have some reservations and, indeed, some suspicions regarding this motion.

I witnessed the delays that occurred in dealing with Bill C-22. The bill was not referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in the first instance. That motion was negated by the majority of Liberal senators. They felt that the bill had to be studied by a special group. Indeed, in my remarks during the establishment of that special committee I strongly suggested that we follow the committee rules and refer the matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. However, the majority of senators, in their wisdom, decided to establish the Special Committee on Bill C-22.

That committee travelled extensively and eventually the time came for it to report to the Senate. Extra time was requested and was granted to that committee. Then the legislation was again referred back to that committee. Some of the amendments proposed by the Senate were accepted by the House of Commons and the bill was amended, but other amendments were rejected.

It has been suggested to me that the desire of the majority of Liberal senators in this chamber is to keep the legislation going until after the trade talks are completed.

Senator Frith: But the minister said that there is no connection between those two.

Senator Phillips: I have heard Senator Frith say otherwise. Which comment would you expect me to accept?

Senator Frith: I would expect Senator Phillips to accept the statement by the minister that there is no connection between the two.

Senator Phillips: Senators can be assured that I do accept that.

I think that the real point here is that the "PTL" Liberals want to keep this going until the turmoil within the Liberal Party concerning its leadership is settled.

Senator Perrault: What a suspicious mind.

Senator Phillips: Senator MacEachen, the Leader of the Opposition, rather regrets that pontifical promenade he made at the Liberal Convention and now wishes he had turned right to Mr. Chrétien's booth rather than left to Mr. Turner's. I believe this legislation is now involved in that turmoil within the Liberal Party.

Senator Perrault: It is just healthy dialogue.

Senator Phillips: I think the "PTL—Praise to the Liberals" senators will get back to the legislation and their function within it and remove it from the Liberal leadership confrontation.

Honourable senators, during the debate reference was made several times to a conference and the fact that the minister had not expressed any willingness to participate in a conference. That is entirely erroneous. The minister can only participate in a conference with the Senate at the direction of the House of Commons. He has not received that direction. He did not receive it at the stage where the House of Commons was dealing with the Senate amendments. Therefore he cannot enter into a conference, regardless of how many invitations you extend to him. That instruction has to come from the House of Commons. Until that instruction comes from the House of Commons the minister, as the Leader of the Opposition very well knows, cannot enter into a conference.

Senator Everett: Why has he not asked for it?

Senator Phillips: He had no need to. This motion refers the bill for fact finding, and I am confident that the result of the fact finding will be that there is no need for a conference.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move, in amendment:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following:

That the Committee report no later than Monday, September 14, 1987; and

That, no later than 5:45 o'clock p.m. on Tuesday, September 15, 1987, if necessary, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to dispose of the Report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the question, together with the Message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated August 31, 1987, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and report.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following:

That the Committee report no later than Monday, September 14, 1987; and

That no later than 5:45 o'clock p.m. on Tuesday, September 15, 1987, if necessary, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to dispose of the Report.

Senator Phillips: I would like to point out, honourable senators, that this motion complements that made by Senator MacEachen. However, it will provide a time limit. It is a reasonable time limit, one within which I am sure the committee feels it can operate, and it will remove any suspicion that this is a delaying tactic. If it is not a delaying tactic, then I am sure we will have the support of the opposition on this motion. The committee is free to report at any earlier time if it so wishes, and I hope it will.

• (1550)

Honourable senators, we have had Bill C-22 before us for some time. An extensive program of research and development is being delayed. I hope that honourable senators will give serious consideration to this amendment and that we can then pass it unanimously and report back to the house at that time.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I think honourable senators should know that in accordance with the direction of this house, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is engaged in a study on tax reform. The committee met yesterday until after 6 o'clock. We have made arrangements to meet next Tuesday with officials and will probably work into the evening. I say now to honourable senators that to ask the committee to handle a matter of this depth and difficulty in the restricted time period suggested by Senator Phillips is just not realistic. I would ask honourable senators not to support that proposition.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: With great respect, I think there are some priorities to be established by the committee. I think the matter of Bill C-22 is more urgent than fiscal reform, which requires an extensive study that will likely take place over several months, or at least several weeks. I think the chairman should not say that he will give priority to a study on fiscal reform over this bill. If he says that, he might as well say that he would rather not have this matter referred to the committee. That would be the logical stand to take.

I think that under the circumstances any committee called upon to deal with this urgent matter should give it priority. If Senator Sinclair is saying that his committee is too busy, then I suggest that we try to find another committee, perhaps the Finance Committee, to do this work. If that is the position of Senator Sinclair, it should be made clear so that we are not referring this matter to a committee that is not happy to consider it.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators—

Senator Phillips: May I direct a question to the Honourable Senator Sinclair? This morning the Liberal senators met in caucus. I am sure that this referral to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was a matter of considerable discussion within caucus. I think everyone can safely assume that. Did Senator Sinclair inform the caucus at that time that he was not prepared to deal with the matter until after the committee had done work on the study on tax reform?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: We are not going to tell anybody what takes place in caucus.

Senator Sinclair: All I can say is that a number of senators have publicly expressed their views on what should happen to this bill, and that is "kill it." That is a matter to which I think senators should give some serious consideration.

[Senator Phillips.]

Senator Flynn has suggested that the committee give priority to this matter. I will discuss that with the members of the committee. If they accept that it should be given priority, it will get priority. But I am going to tell honourable senators that it is too responsible a matter to give short shrift to. Some members of the committee have not had the advantage of reading the evidence of the Special Committee on Bill C-22. The message itself has a number of substantive reasons—I am up to more than six now—why the Senate's amendments were not considered appropriate by the House of Commons. I think each of those reasons has to be carefully considered. Furthermore, it seems to me that there is an absolute conflict in the position adopted by the House of Commons, and I think we should discuss that. Whether that position has been taken deliberately I do not know, but, in any event, this is not an easy matter to dispense with.

I think it is wrong to suggest that if we do not hurry to push the bill through then we are delaying it. I say to honourable senators that that is unfair, and it is something to which I object strenuously.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: In that case, I think the honourable senator should say that the committee is not in a position to deal with this matter expeditiously. In fact, that is what he is saying.

Senator Perrault: He has to confer with the committee.

Senator Flynn: That would confirm the views of those on this side and many members of the public that, really, the Liberal majority in the Senate is stonewalling this bill and is using all the tactics available to it to delay a decision on it.

If this is the position of Senator Sinclair, let him say that he does not want the bill to be referred to his committee. That would be frank, it would be honest, it would be direct, and we would know where we stand.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, when I accepted the position of chairman of this committee, I did so on the understanding that I would do the best I could to handle the job, and I still think that.

Senator Flynn: In that case, then, the honourable senator should accept the time limit put forward in the amendment. If the committee cannot do so, he only has to report that. The mandate of this committee is not to go back to the beginning and do all of the work done by the special committee when it travelled all across Canada. The problem before the committee is a technical one—the committee is to find out whether there is the possibility of a compromise with the minister. If there is no such possibility, the committee has to judge whether it should recommend to the Senate not to stand by the amendments that have been sent to us. That is the mandate of the committee. I think Senator Sinclair should realize that it is limited. We are not referring the entire bill to his committee. That is why I think it would be much more appropriate for the Senate to accept the amendment, which would make the motion carry unanimously. We would thereby have the assurance that we would be dealing with the matter with no manoeuvring of any kind.

Senator Frith: Put the question!

MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED—QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS REFERRED TO BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the question, together with the Message from the House of Commons on the same subject, dated August 31, 1987, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration and report.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following:

That the Committee report no later than Monday, September 14, 1987; and

That, no later than 5:45 o'clock p.m. on Tuesday, September 15, 1987, if necessary, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to dispose of the Report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

ABSTENTIONS

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

Nil

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that, as I understand it, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce now has referred to it the message and the motion of the honourable senator that was before us earlier, I would propose to the members of the committee that we meet next Tuesday at 3 o'clock, with the understanding that we will be involved in a somewhat lengthy meeting.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be moving a motion for adjournment later this day, and honourable senators can anticipate that there will be extra days free for the committee to meet next week.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, since we may be going our different ways this afternoon, perhaps I could ask Senator Sinclair for clarification. When you say that we will be meeting on Tuesday next, do you mean that you will be cancelling the meeting originally set for that particular time?

• (1620)

Senator Sinclair: I will ask the concurrence of those we have invited to understand the problem we have. As they are all government people, I should think that they would understand the possibilities.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Orville H. Phillips (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday, September 14, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, before the motion is put, I would like to point out that the Senate may receive Bill C-84 before that date. If we do receive it, we will decide at that time about a recall.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Is there any particular reason why they have stopped discussing Bill C-84 in the House? Apparently they are delaying that until next week some time. That gives me the idea that there is no urgency on that particular bill.

Senator Phillips: I do not believe they have stopped discussing the bill, Senator Guay. I understand it was discussed today, but the discussion was not completed before the adjournment.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, September 14, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, September 14, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

CRIMINAL CODE IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976 CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Richard J. Doyle, for Hon. Joan B. Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Monday, September 14, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-71, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, September 3, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

RICHARD J. DOYLE
for Joan B. Neiman (Chairman).

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doyle, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Wednesday, 17th June, 1987, the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord be empowered to present its final report no later than Monday, 21st September, 1987, provided that, if the Senate is not sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the Senate; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): May we have an explanation, please?

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, the explanation for this request is this: Wednesday last week the Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord adopted its report. The first version of this report having been drafted in either English or French, the chapters originally drafted in English were definitely more numerous than those drafted in French.

At the same sitting the committee members wanted to make sure that there was no discrepancy between the French and English versions, and vice versa, in all chapters, so they asked the co-chairman to look at and study both versions and assure the committee that indeed there were no discrepancies. That is what I began to do the very same day, with the assistance of the committee support staff.

Other committee colleagues came to lend a hand. We progressively reached the conclusion—if I may put it this way—that in a more than significant number of paragraphs there were in fact such obvious and basic discrepancies that the translated version did not faithfully reflect the original draft.

I emphasize that I am not referring only to such minor differences as are often found when comparing two versions which are supposed to have been literally translated. We all know that for a number of years now reference has been made instead to concordance and equivalence between versions. This is the standard approach. We found much more than simple nuances, indeed major and quite numerous discrepancies.

Working day and night, I can assure you, we did everything possible to finish the job within the prescribed time limit. However, I would say in the last hours on Saturday, we had to acknowledge that it was impossible to write all chapters and guarantee the similarity and a certain quality of each of the two versions.

That was when I took it upon myself to urge the co-chairman, other committee members and all others who might be involved to seek the delay which I am asking for today.

So that is the explanation, and I think I can give you supporting evidence. This question is really important to the committee, as is the matter we had to study. I suggest it would be paradoxical, to say the least, that dealing with the Constitution, an accord where, to use a common expression, a successful attempt was made to draft a text enabling Quebec to join the constitutional family, not only at the constitutional level, something which has already been done, but also at the psychological level—

Senator Frith: No need for rhetoric, a technical explanation is enough.

Senator Tremblay: It would not be good enough in my view if we could not provide an assurance that the two versions agree both as to quality and substance.

I was perhaps a bit long but—

Senator Frith: More than a bit!

Senator Tremblay: As you will realize, that is a normal tendency when someone gets involved to such a degree in so important a project.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: We expect no difficulty with regard to conformity, where the agreement itself is concerned.

Honourable senators, this motion raises problems at two levels. First, do we have a commitment from Senator Tremblay that the report will not be made public before being tabled in the Senate or with the Clerk of the Senate?

Senator Tremblay: I believe I can give that assurance, to the extent that it means we will take every precaution to keep the committee report secret, as we should—

Senator Guay: The First Ministers will be disappointed!

Senator Tremblay: It will be secret. Now, things sometimes happen that amaze everyone. How is it that a reporter can lay his hands upon a document that is supposed to be confidential—

Senator Guay: Really amazing!

Senator Tremblay: On a number of occasions, I felt I was bumping into a mystery of that kind. Therefore, barring that kind of mystery that is always possible in our jurisdiction, our authority, our staff's behaviour, you have my assurance that every precaution will be taken for the committee report to remain confidential, as it should.

Senator Frith: That is not very reassuring.

It is reassuring to the same extent as the assurance, if I may take this opportunity to make my own short speech, that section 2 of the constitutional agreement does not infringe upon the Charter of Rights, for instance.

In any case, the other aspect that is of some concern to me is the second part, however, if the Senate is not sitting... et cetera. Why not wait until the Senate's next sitting?

For that reason, I move that the debate be adjourned so that we may discuss with the deputy co-chairman the possibility of deleting that part from the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, is my information correct that such an adjournment motion is not debatable?

Senator Frith: No, Senator Tremblay.

[Senator Tremblay.]

Senator Tremblay: However, may I direct a question to the mover of the motion?

Senator Frith: Certainly, senator.

Senator Tremblay: Today is September 14.

Therefore, if the deadline is only granted to the Committee tomorrow, which I understand to be the meaning of the adjournment motion—

Senator Frith: The deadline for the presentation of the report is tomorrow, is it not?

Senator Tremblay: It is September 14, that is, today.

Therefore, I ask the following question: Does Senator Frith mean, by moving this adjournment motion—and what he just said confirms my intention to raise this issue—that we would be a whole day without being able to work?

Senator Frith: No, Senator Tremblay.

We have two choices. Senator Tremblay can take my word that if permission is granted on both aspects, it will be nunc pro tunc, that is, it will have a retroactive effect.

The alternative would be to delete immediately the second part and move a separate motion to table the report with the Clerk of the Senate. I am prepared to accept the first part of the motion calling for the report to be tabled here in the Senate.

However, I am concerned about the second aspect. We could separate the two and, later on, if they could convince us, they could move a second motion.

Senator Tremblay: Under these conditions, therefore, I wonder how to proceed. In view of what Senator Frith has just said, I, for one, do not see any problem.

Should I change my motion or—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: You must change your motion accordingly.

Senator Frith: If I may, Senator Tremblay, perhaps we could delete all the words following "September 1987".

We could then move another motion, if it is acceptable.

Senator Tremblay: Therefore, should I say that I am prepared to change my motion in order for all the words in the English text, following "provided", and in the French text, all those following "toutefois" to be deleted.

I think that these two words are those which appear in the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Do honourable senators agree that this change should be made to the original motion?

Senator Frith: Agreed. Honourable senators, I seek permission to withdraw my adjournment motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is permission granted, honourable senators?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: There is no need to have a motion to adjourn the debate.

Motion, as amended, adopted.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Has the motion been approved?

Senator Frith: Yes. That was a little footnote.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The motion to adjourn the debate has been withdrawn.

Senator Frith: Yes, because the amended motion was adopted.

SENATE TASK FORCE ON MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD AND YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Thursday, 13th August, 1987, the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be empowered to present its final report to the Committee of the Whole no later than Tuesday, 1st December, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—INSTRUCTION TO BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE RE DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS— NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Tuesday, September 15, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., concerning amendments to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, together with the Message from the House of Commons dated August 31, 1987, on the same subject, be instructed to report the same to the Senate no later than September 23, 1987.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, Senator Kelly is a member of the committee. He was at our meeting on Tuesday last. He knew the decision that had been taken, and so I am going to say to the honourable senator—

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I wonder what the honourable senator is referring to.

Senator Sinclair: I am referring to the motion that was just made.

Senator Frith: No, that was a Notice of Motion.

Senator Sinclair: I am sorry, I thought it was the motion itself.

Senator Frith: You can go get him tomorrow!

Senator Sinclair: I can't wait.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON FEASIBILITY OF "SNOWBIRDS" " VISIT TO NATO ALLIES—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Third Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence (visit by air demonstration team the "Snowbirds" to Europe), presented in the Senate on 6th July, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Lafond).

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I am sorry that I was absent when Senator Bosa made his presentation in this debate. First of all, I would like to draw to the attention of both the Deputy Leader of the Government and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition the fact that when I tabled this report on July 6 I specifically stated that I had nothing further to add, but I asked that the matter should be placed on the order paper to give Senator Bosa an opportunity to present his views. I gather that this was achieved, only with some difficulty, on August 13.

Senator Bosa: Yes, senator, thank you very much.

Senator Lafond: At any rate, as chairman of the committee, I have nothing further to add. I gather that Senator Bosa is pursuing his endeavours in gathering together additional facts and attempting to sell his idea to the Department of National Defence. I wish him luck, godspeed, et cetera. However, I do not think that the committee has anything further to add on this question as things stand at this moment, and I suggest that the item be deleted from the order paper.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this order is considered as having been debated.

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I rise to respond to Senator Argue's motion, which he proposed on June 11. The motion states:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care.

May I first apologize to Senator Argue for the delay in responding to his motion some three months after its presentation. While the delay was due in part to events over which I had no control, I am aware that the delay might affect the time limit of 12 months to table his report, as prescribed in the motion, which will, of course, depend on whether or not he receives consent to proceed with this proposed committee.

Let me also explain that when Senator Argue introduced his motion I did not intend to respond. As is the practice in this chamber, I was asked to adjourn the debate to allow an opportunity to any other senator who might be interested to comment at a future date.

As a matter of fact, honourable senators, I know little about alternative health care, and certainly not to the extent of taking on the responsibility of justifying its universal application. I must say the mere fact that my name appeared in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate brought about an abundance of telegrams and letters of support, as well as requests for meetings from concerned Canadians representing thousands of supporters across the country. This prompted me to do a little research into the subject.

The motion gives me a welcome opportunity to address an important aspect of the subject, which can be related to alternative health care and preventive measures, together with a wider range of health services, because of my interest in what I consider a most sensible and worthwhile government program under the Department of Veterans Affairs known as the Veterans Independence Program, formerly the Aging Veterans Program. This program was designed with unusual common sense with a view to caring for veterans in their own homes rather than sending them to hospitals or institutions for domiciliary care.

One of the important aspects of the program, besides the humanness of allowing veterans to remain in their familiar surroundings with their spouse and families, is that it has been found that its cost is only one-tenth of that cost which is borne by government to provide care in a hospital or institution, which is sometimes many miles away and causes inconvenience and difficulty for family visits, as well as inflicting loneliness and a feeling of isolation on the veteran.

The Veterans Independence Program is one aimed at helping veterans to maintain or improve their quality of life by assisting them to remain healthy and independent in their own homes or communities. The service includes counselling and referral, where veterans receive help in determining their needs and, together with district office counsellors and health professionals, decide how best to meet those needs. Where needs cannot be met under the VIP program, other benefits may be made available or veterans will be referred to community agencies which can provide the needed services.

Remaining healthy and independent may depend on knowing how to take care of oneself. This is another aspect of the VIP program and health information. Information is available to veterans on healthy, independent living. Under the aspects of care, where care is needed, the Veterans Independence Program will try to provide that care in the veteran's own home or community. This may involve ambulatory health care, home adaptations, home care, transportation, adult residential care and nursing home intermediate care. Departmental staff will work closely with provincial and local agencies to provide veterans with the greatest possible range of benefits and services to meet their health and social needs. Ambulatory health care provides specialized services available through clinics, out-patient departments, and day care hospitals. This may include health assessments, diagnostic services, minor treatments and rehabilitation support. For example, physiotherapy, diabetic care, recreation, counselling and other related services would be available to a maximum amount of $543 a year.

Home adaptation services provide alterations to the residence of a veteran so that the veteran can carry out the normal activities of daily living. The funding provided for that is $2,716 a year per residence. Home Care provides services to the client in the home, including direct patient care, personal care comfort, housekeeping and basic groundskeeping to a maximum of $4,673.21 a year. Some transportation costs may be paid to help eligible low-income veterans who would otherwise be unable to carry out day-to-day social activities. Only those veterans in need of home care or ambulatory health care may receive that benefit. That may include transportation costs for shopping trips, banking and attendance at educational or recreational activities to a maximum of $652 a year.

There are other aspects of the Veterans Independence Program, including Adult Residential Care and Nursing Home Intermediate Care. I mention this, honourable senators, to say that there is a program in existence which fits in with the motion initiated by Senator Argue.

I have dealt at some length with this aspect of alternative health and preventive care because I feel strongly that it could well be applied on a nation-wide basis—not only to veterans but to all seniors—certainly when the cost has been found to be only 10 per cent of the cost of institutionalizing the infirm, and as costs of health care are taxing government resources, both federally and provincially, and because this would also respond positively to that part of Senator Argue's motion which requests the examination of how an improved health care system might control the ever-increasing cost of health care.

In addition, the present and projected increase in the age of our population should prompt governments to examine this program carefully, a program which could reduce immeasurably the cost of this type of care. The timing could not be better for the Minister of Veterans Affairs to take on such a challenge in his new capacity as Minister of State (Senior Citizens). As well, it is my intention as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs to give such a plan a high priority in the committee's deliberations.

Figures from the Department of Veterans Affairs show that there are 700,000 veterans now in Canada. In 1981 there were 386,500 veterans who would have been eligible for a VIP program or for health care. In 1990, although the figure will drop, there will be 273,500 veterans who could be eligible for provision of health care. In the year 2000 there will be 142,000, and in the year 2010 there will be 42,000.

At the present time, according to other figures that I have had researched, 13.5 per cent of the population is over age 65. According to my figures, that means there are 3,750,000 senior citizens who may be prospective candidates for health care. In 20 years' time the proportion of citizens over age 65 will be 16.5 per cent, and in the year 2030 that proportion will be 25 per cent.

Moving to other aspects of preventive care, and in line with the nation-wide support which I referred to earlier, I offer a general outline of the objectives of the Health Action Network Society as set out in a letter sent to me on August 6. This is one of the organizations which presented appeals in support of Senator Argue's motion. The letter is signed by the President of the Health Action Network Society, and I quote from that letter:

● (1440)

The Health Action Network Society is a non-profit charitable organization established to promote and protect health and well-being. HANS Research Committee investigate areas of public interest among which is the present delivery of health care. Our membership supports the multi-disciplinary approach to health care, where the preventative techniques and less expensive alternative approaches would be incorporated within health legislation.

We have been waiting for an opportunity such as this to present carefully researched material on the economic validity of prevention and self-care.

The Canadian people are willing to become more responsible for their health. Bravo to the Canadian Senate for taking this crucial initiative.

The Health Action Network Society circulates a publication to 15,000 Canadians.

Honourable senators, I should just like to mention a few of the other organizations who wired and wrote to me. I met with chiropractors and acupuncturists. I had letters from the College of Chiropractors of Alberta; the Association of Concerned Citizens for Preventative Medicine; the Consumers Health Organization of Canada; the Canadian Association of Herbal Practitioners; the Alberta Association of Naturopathic Practitioners; the Family Life Foundation, Willowdale United Church in Toronto; the Nutritional Products Industry Task Force; the Nutritional Consultants Organization; Jacinte Lévesque, Vice-President of the Quebec Acupuncture Association; and the Human Ecology Foundation of Canada.

In examining the approach of the Government of Canada, I welcome the contents of a paper produced by Health and Welfare Canada called, "Achieving Health for All—A Framework for Health Promotion." It says:

This paper proposes an approach that is intended to help Canadians meet emerging health challenges . . . It is an integration of ideas from several arenas—public health, health education and public policy—and it represents an expansion of the traditional use of the term "health promotion" . . . as an approach that complements and strengthens the existing system of health care.

Canada has built a strong health care system and has achieved for its people a level of health of which we are all proud. We want to continue in this tradition. While it is true that the prospects for health of the average Canadian have improved over recent decades, there nevertheless remain three major challenges which are not being adequately addressed by current health policies and practices: disadvantaged groups have significantly lower life expectancy, poorer health and a higher prevalence of disability than the average Canadian; various forms of preventable diseases and injuries continue to undermine the health and quality of life of many Canadians; many thousands of Canadians suffer from chronic disease, disability or various forms of emotional stress and lack adequate community support to help them cope and live meaningful, productive and dignified lives.

The times in which we live are characterized by rapid and irreversible social change. Shifting family structures, an aging population and wider participation by women in the paid workforce are all exacerbating certain health problems and creating pressure for new kinds of social support. They are forcing us also to seek new approaches for dealing effectively with the health concerns of the future.

Honourable senators, without speaking too much longer, I want to read what is contained in the conclusion of this paper by the Department of National Health and Welfare. It states:

We are aware that there are certain dilemmas inherent in health promotion. For example, we cannot invite people to assume responsibility for their health and then turn around and fault them for illnesses and disabilities which are the outcome of wider social and economic circumstances. Such a "blaming the victim" attitude is based on the unrealistic notion that the individual has ultimate and complete control over life and death.

Secondly, there is the question of allocating resources during times of scarcity. The availability of financing is obviously a critical question for each of us. Canada has performed fairly well in controlling the growth of health care costs; however, cost control is a matter of continuing concern. The pressures created by an aging population and a growing incidence of disabilities in our society will take a heavy toll on our financial resources. We believe, however, that the health promotion approach has the potential over the long term to slow the growth in health care costs.

The paper further states:

It will take time to give meaning to health promotion. A vital element in the process will be nationwide discussion. This will enable Canadians to assess the implications of health promotion. The body of knowledge and experience is accumulating rapidly: individuals and groups in many parts of the country are already familiar with the approach we are calling health promotion.

We have the foundations upon which to build. Let us continue our efforts to achieve health and improve the quality of life of the people and communities of Canada.

Honourable senators, from what I have said and read it appears that there is no question about the need for public discussion. As we sit here in this chamber today I must ask: What about the establishment of yet another committee of the Senate to deal with this subject? Can we ask our already over-burdened committee members to sit on such a committee in light of the fact that there are ever repetitive requests that new committees be struck to deal with new items of interest which affect the people of Canada, and we know there are many? It will be up to the Senate to decide if we can find the bodies to form another committee to look into this important subject. From what I have read and discovered during my research it appears that such a request would be justifiable. I leave it to the chamber to decide if a committee should be struck and if we have the resources.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

[Senator Marshall.]

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn calling the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, the best thing I can do in this field is to beg you to read the series of articles on illiteracy that began on Saturday in the Southam Press. The first article points out that 24 per cent of our population either cannot read or reads but hardly understands what it is reading. These people are cut off from any chance of self-improvement.

This is not something that affects them alone, it affects our whole society. We all blithely tell one another that we want to be a high tech society and that we want to have work centred around highly skilled trades in which our people will be well paid and will be competitive with others around the world. One quarter of our work population cannot enter this nirvana of tomorrow because they cannot read, they cannot write, they can hardly count and they do not even know what is going on around them.

They live in a world of shame and of hiding. They do not want to go to schools to be trained because they are ashamed to confess their illiteracy. There are endless cases of people being called and told that they will have a job if they will go to a certain place. I refer to a specific incident in Montreal where the person did not turn up at a job, and when the case was investigated it was found that he did not dare leave his home because the journey involved complicated travelling on public transport and he could not read road signs or the names of the underground stations. That person lost that job because he did not have the elementary skill without which we can hardly survive in this society—the ability to read or write. Another tragedy is that the children of such people will, in all likelihood, be like their parents.

Without reading, writing and some arithmetical knowledge, it is difficult to make wise decisions. As citizens, illiterates do not know what we are about as a government. They find it terribly difficult to acquire the necessary information to enable them to vote intelligently. They could, therefore, be swayed by the wrong sort of advice and by demagogues. That is not the sort of thing we want. The absurdity of the situation is that we are paying unemployed teachers to do nothing when they could be teaching illiterates, helping those people come out of the darkness of their inability to know what is going on around them.

The series on illiteracy began Saturday in The Ottawa Citizen and in the Gazette; the second instalment was printed today, and there are five more to follow. I ask honourable senators to read them because what they set out is astonishing. It is not that the facts were not known before—this is a reaffirmation of something we already knew.

In the course of the hearings conducted by my subcommittee on training and employment, Professors Gerrard and Lucas of the Economics Department of the University of Saskatchewan informed me that half of their students did not understand what they were reading nor could they possibly write a term paper. We have to ask ourselves how this can be. How can we have an educational system that costs vast amounts of money in provinces with governments of different political hue, in provinces that have been governed by the Liberals, the Conservatives and the NDP? This is not a failing of one party—this is a national failing. How can we have a situation in which people reach university level without being able to read or write or understand what they are reading? We are spending enormous amounts of money to push these people through university only to have them graduate not having benefited from the experience, because they did not have the basic equipment with which to acquire this benefit.

The subcommittee also heard from a witness from Alberta who read to the senators present examples of the writings of students who had finished their third year of a Bachelor of Education degree. These are the teachers of tomorrow, honourable senators, and it is hair-raising to read the poverty of the English of these people. One has to ask oneself: How does the system malfunction to the extent that these people can get that far? How can a system produce illiterate teachers, who will, of course, produce other illiterates? Furthermore, it is not only the quality of their English that was absolutely impossible—it is their thinking. They were all writing an essay on what are the desired qualities of a legislator. Some said that such a person had to be good looking, that he could not be fat or bald—that lets most of us out, one way or the other—but that, above all, he had to have a clean car. Honourable senators, these are people one year short of becoming teachers, and for them the most important quality in a legislator was that he have a clean car! There is something wrong in a system that can allow people to enter the teaching profession when their thinking is so primitive, childish and absurd. It is a national disgrace that we should be among the civilized countries and allow this to happen.

I repeat that this is not the fault of any one party—it is the fault of all of us. Saskatchewan, with all its troubles, was for many years governed by a socialist government, and before that it was governed for some time by the Liberals and by the Tories. We have a national crisis on our hands. We cannot develop economically unless we do something about this.

During the course of the work of the subcommittee, a report of which senators will see by and by, I remember asking Mr.

Jacques Parizeau why it was that when Dionne Textiles wanted a totally automated spinning mill they bought it in Switzerland. There is not a human being on the floor of that factory; it is run by robotics. Switzerland, with a population of six million people, is capable of producing this totally automated factory. We in Quebec do not produce such a thing, although we have a population of six million. In terms of natural resources, Quebec is streets ahead of Switzerland, yet why could we not produce such a factory? In answer to my question he said, "Literacy." There are no illiterate workers to speak of in Switzerland while one third of our workers are hardly literate, and half of them have a level of literacy that is so low that we cannot even begin to think of using them in high tech capacities. He asked whether I wanted to know how we can develop. He suggested that we begin with literacy.

Honourable senators, this is not a subject that we can treat with equanimity. I know that it is not a federal responsibility. I know that literacy falls under provincial jurisdiction, but I know that it is our duty to speak out when a crisis is national. If we do not speak out and keep on speaking out, begging, pleading and advocating a national campaign by agreement to erase this awful stain upon our country, we shall be failing in our duty.

On motion of Senator Robertson, debate adjourned.

THE CONSTITUTION

CURRENT STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS—INQUIRY WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to his perception of the status of the Constitutional negotiations, in view of the fact that they have reached a critical point.

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, since the matter has already been referred to the House of Commons and Senate Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord for consideration and furthermore since it will be taken into consideration by this house, I wish to withdraw this inquiry.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, September 15, 1987

That the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be empowered to permit coverage by the electronic media of its public proceedings in the cities of Whitehorse, Yellowknife and Iqaluit, with the least possible disruption of its hearings.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—MAJOR OUTSTANDING OBSTACLES—POSSIBILITY OF BRIEFING—CONDITIONS
PRECEDENT TO SIGNING AGREEMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government based upon the meeting which was held yesterday between the Prime Minister and ministers and provincial premiers with respect to the negotiations on the free trade agreement with the United States.

It has been made clear by a number of spokesmen, following the meeting, that there are still a number of major obstacles and that there are major items that have to be settled before the deadline, which is less than three weeks away. Can the minister tell us what those obstacles are? We know about the dispute settlement mechanism, but are there other major items which have to be cleared up? What are they?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am sure there are, honourable senators, but I do not believe it would be helpful at this time to enumerate them or to go into any detail. The premiers received a very lengthy briefing—I believe the meeting lasted six or seven hours—and they have been brought up to date on a confidential basis as to where we stand with the negotiations.

The Leader of the Opposition may also be aware that the government had offered to brief, also on a confidential basis, the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and the Leader of the New Democratic Party; but that offer has not yet been taken up.

Senator MacEachen: May I ask the Leader of the Government whether it is the intention that this shroud of secrecy shall be kept over these talks until October 4 or 5 when failure or success will be registered?

The Leader of the Government has mentioned that the leaders of the opposition parties in the other place have been offered a briefing on a confidential basis, which, if it is confidential, would not meet the needs of the members of the House of Commons or members of the Senate who, at a certain point, must deal with this matter. I understand the necessity for a certain amount of confidentiality, but is there not some way that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, for example, could be given a briefing in camera so that we would know what were the main parameters?

The honourable senator talks about confidentiality. It seems to me that there was a good deal of leakage following the recent meeting in which certain items were mentioned as being major obstacles. We heard that dispute settlement was a major obstacle. Are there any others? What is unsettling is the partial nature of the information that we are receiving, which renders it very difficult for us to make any judgment when the deadline is reached.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition speaks of leakage. I watched the television news last night and saw the various premiers making their comments and I also heard the declaration of the Prime Minister. While there is a good deal of prudence, sobriety and perhaps even some pessimism on the part of some premiers about the talks, the fact is that they have agreed unanimously that we should go forward for the next three weeks. All premiers support the continuation of the negotiations and support the Prime Minister and Canada's negotiators in obtaining the best possible trade treaty. In less than three weeks there will be an opportunity for the First Ministers to meet again before any agreement is initialled by our chief negotiator.

Meanwhile, the short answer to the question is: Yes, generally speaking it will be necessary to maintain what the honourable senator describes as a "shroud of secrecy" over the talks. I do not know of any other way that we can conduct these talks in Canada's best interests over the next two or three very crucial weeks, and I do not see what possible advantage there would be at this time in discussing at any length at all the various obstacles. Suffice it to say that some of Canada's major conditions have not been adequately satisfied to date in the talks. We remain hopeful that they will be, and we continue to believe that it will be possible to achieve an agreement that is to the mutual advantage of Canada and the United States.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have just one more question. In agreeing to the continuation of the talks, have the premiers agreed to the continuation of the talks with a view to concluding what has been described as a minimum framework agreement? Or, to put it another way, has the government the support of the premiers in negotiating an agreement that would not include an effective dispute settlement mechanism?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if I understand the question correctly, it is whether the premiers have indicated their support for an agreement that would not include an effective dispute settlement mechanism. Of course not, and we have not asked them for such support, because that remains one of the most important bottom lines of the Canadian government, as it has been from the very beginning. We have always insisted that there must be a way of obtaining relief for Canada from some of the more offensive, if I can use that term, United States trade remedy measures. We want a binding dispute settlement mechanism, and it is difficult to conceive of an agreement that we would sign which does not have such a mechanism.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question on the same matter to the Leader of the Government. Of course, we do not know today whether we will reach an agreement with the United States. One thing is sure, if there is an agreement it will be reached at the last minutes before October 5, 1987.

In other words, if there is an agreement, it will be tabled in the United States Congress without ever having been discussed in Canada.

I ask the Leader of the Government whether he considers it normal, on such a capital issue in Canada, because I presume that at least half of the Canadian economy is related to our trade with the United States, that on the most important issue facing this country, we will never discuss the terms of the agreement before it is delivered to our American colleagues. Is it normal?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think that my friend is mistaken about the process. On October 4 or 5, we will be submitted a text. It rests with the cabinet to instruct our chief negotiator, Mr. Reisman, to sign the agreement or not.

Canada will have two or three months to discuss the agreement and decide whether the Prime Minister on behalf of the Canadian government, will allow Canada to be party to this agreement.

In short, if our ambassador signs the agreement, it will be accepted ad referendum.

The Parliament of Canada and the legislatures will therefore have two or three months to discuss the agreement.

● (1420)

[English]

Senator Frith: "Ad referendum" or "ad nauseam"?

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps it would be another seamless garment.

Senator Frith: Yes, a seamless web.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me how it came about that, approximately two weeks ago, the congressional leaders responsible for the legislation on a free trade agreement between us and the United States stated on repeated occasions that they had just become aware that, for Canada, the key was binding arbitration as a mechanism for settling disputes. They said—and they were seen on television saying so—that they had not been made aware that it was so important for Canada to have—in your language, sir—a deal-breaker.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate please tell us how our side allowed this situation to develop, and why we did not, as a very first step immediately after the singing of "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," attempt to sensitize the leaders of the United States in Congress, in the states, in the Senate, in the administration and among businessmen that this was the deal-breaker for us?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot explain what one senator or congressman, or two senators or congressmen, may have known or not known, or may have said on television. I can tell the Senate—and I can document it—that from the very beginning the Government of Canada, through the Prime Minister, has made it very clear that a binding dispute settlement mechanism was, for us, absolutely essential to any bilateral trade treaty with the United States.

Senator Gigantès: Then why is it that those who hold positions of power and responsibility in the United States, and who will have to pass on this issue, were not aware of this? Communication is a process in which one enunciates something, but one also tries to make sure that what one has enunciated has indeed been heard and understood by the other side. Where did we fail?

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is asking a second time the question he asked a few moments ago and which I dealt with.

PATENT ACT

MEETING OF QUEBEC COALITION FOR ADOPTION OF BILL TO AMEND—BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

On September 9, a Quebec coalition for the immediate passing of Bill C-22 met in Montreal. Among those in attendance were Michel Hamelin, the Chairman the Montreal Urban Community, 15 mayors from the Montreal area, the Montreal Board of Trade, the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, the Conseil du Patronat du Québec, faculty deans, the Confederation of National Trade Unions (CNTU) and the Quebec Federation of Labour (QFL), as well as three senators.

Could he tell me whether the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee had sent a representative at that meeting and, if so, did the committee receive a report from that delegate?

[English]

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, a senator from Quebec mentioned that a telex had been sent to senators requesting them to attend the meeting. A number of the senators who are members of the committee said they had not received it. It was then clarified that it was only the Quebec senators who had received the message, not all senators of the committee. Did we delegate someone to attend the meeting? No.

CRIMINAL CODE IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976 CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the third reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976*BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-84, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, as we all know, Canada's system of refugee determination is under siege from a daily onslaught of illegal migrants arriving in Canada and making false claims to gain entry.

● (1430)

Refugee determination is a complex and often emotional issue. The question of abuse and how to eliminate it is crucial to preserving Canada's humanitarian reputation and its tradition for law and order. That is why the Parliament of Canada was recalled in the middle of August to take immediate action to put an end to the growing and the flagrant abuse of our laws and our generosity. During this year the number of people who will claim refugee status in Canada is expected to be over 30,000, making the backlog at the end of this year something over 40,000.

Now, a little historical perspective; prior to 1976 Canada did not have any formal legislative system for determining whether or not a person was a refugee. Those decisions were made administratively by our officials, and the system worked quite successfully. Canada's record was very good then, as it is now. However, when the new Immigration Act of 1976 was passed, it was decided to create a specific procedure for the determination of refugee claims. At that time it was not anticipated that Canada would become a country of first asylum, and the procedure that was created was to deal with a very small number of cases, probably less than 300 a year, certainly less than a thousand, with the result that the system we now have in place is very long and very complex.

This was not a problem for several years. It was a problem that grew and fed upon itself as the message went out to the world that by claiming refugee status one could ensure that one could stay in Canada for a long time going through the system. The more people did so, the longer one stayed in Canada. Therefore, around the world more and more people discovered this.

Seeing this issue starting to emerge, the previous government commissioned a couple of studies, the last and the best known was a study done by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, which was presented to the current government, in particular to the Honourable Flora MacDonald, the then minister, and which ultimately led in May of 1986 to an announcement by the then Minister of State (Immigration), Walter McLean, of a proposed refugee determination process.

In the months preceding the announcement of Walter McLean, refugee claims had already increased to approximately 1,000 a month; three months after Mr. McLean's announcement the boat with the Tamil migrants arrived off the shores of Newfoundland. Immediately after this internationally-publicized incident, we began to see a dramatic rise in the number of claims. They rose from 1,000 a month to 2,000 a month until, by the beginning of this year, 1987, Canada was receiving claims for refugee status at the rate of 4,000 a month. At that time the cabinet was not only reviewing the proposals set out by McLean but it also approved a package of control measures. Those were administrative changes which were brought in on February 20 of this year. Those measures had some effect in reducing the actual number of claims, and the numbers declined to approximately 2,000 a month, but were still higher than before the McLean announcement of May 1986, a definite improvement over the 4,000 a month that we were receiving in January and February of this year.

We have today a bigger backlog than we had when Mr. McLean announced the procedures to clear the backlog that we had accumulated over the previous five years, and, if it takes another four or five months to get these bills through, it is possible that we could have over 50,000 people in the system, and every additional month that this is delayed will compound the problem.

Honourable senators, the system has totally broken down. We are not here to deal with 174 Asians who arrived unannounced in the middle of the night off the coast of southwestern Nova Scotia. They are here; they are in. They have a permit to remain in Canada, pending an immigration inquiry which could take five years. They can work. They have a special social insurance number, and, if they need it, they will receive welfare from the province in which they are now established; and the world knows it.

In all of the discussion of this issue there have been polarized positions adopted, and often from the very best of motivations positions have tended to become extreme. On the one hand, there are those who argue that Canada must demonstrate international leadership by having a system of what is called "universal access," that is to say, that any person who reaches our shores, who physically sets foot in Canada, from whatever place, for whatever reason, should be entitled to make a refugee claim and to carry that through several levels of appeal. I should note here that that is going well beyond any obligations we have under the United Nations Convention for Refugees.

Unfortunately, what we have seen in our current system is that several levels of appeal are prone to abuse, and such appeals can, as I have said, take as much as five years. A system of universal access creates its own type of abuse, clearly suggesting that the system is unworkable unless one were to dedicate vast resources to the administration of that system.

At the other extreme are those—and I think there are a few in this chamber—who are concerned about the costs of operating an open and generous system and those who look to other countries and the models they have and advocate an almost purely administrative system, in short, Draconian measures, police at the border, making determinations with not even a minimum of safeguards or no safeguards at all.

It is between these two positions that the government has adopted a refugee determination policy that remains among the most generous in the world, but prevents the kind of abuse that undermines public support for the open policy that we continue to advocate.

Over the past few weeks we have heard the views of a number of interest groups and individuals on the best way to correct the flaws that they have spotted in the bill, or thought that they spotted in the bill. The minister, Mr. Bouchard, gave Canadians and committee members the assurance that he would consider the possibility of amending the bill on condition that it would not be weakened. The amendments endorsed by the House of Commons are useful. He supported them without reservation.

The bill, as all honourable senators know, is aimed at cracking down on the operations of unscrupulous counsellors, smugglers who take advantage of the plight of illegal immigrants, and carriers who fail to ensure, as they should, that their passengers carry the required documents. It is also aimed at curbing abuses on the part of economic migrants who try to jump ahead of refugees and immigrants who abide by the established procedures.

Clauses 95, 95.1 and 95.2 are the key provisions of these legislative measures, enabling us, as they will, to put a stop to the activities of those who bring illegal immigrants into Canada. I am told that since 1976, of those who have gone through the system, 70 per cent were identified as bogus refugees.

The international implications of these measures are well understood. There is no parallel between the recent boat arrivals in Canada and the exodus of the boat people from southeast Asia and elsewhere. Neither of the two recent boat arrivals at Newfoundland and Nova Scotia involved people travelling from their own countries. In both instances the organizers flagrantly exposed these individuals to physical danger through the use of unseaworthy craft and the landing of passengers in a clandestine manner in extremely unsafe conditions. The measures proposed in this bill do not challenge the legitimacy of the need of individuals, in appropriate circumstances, to travel to countries of first asylum by ship or the right of people in difficulty on the high seas to seek assistance. The organized traffic of illegal migrants between signatory states of the Geneva Convention in good standing is, however, a very different matter. It is an activity which the government and, indeed, the people of Canada find totally unacceptable.

Honourable senators, there has been a great deal of talk about how this bill would affect church groups. It has been said that because we have proposed two new sections we have opened the door to the prosecution of church and humanitarian groups if they assist refugees.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, honourable senators, I wonder if I am the only senator who does not have a copy of this bill. I do not seem to have received a copy of it. Could someone supply me with one? Senator MacDonald was beginning to refer to sections of the act that will be amended, and I wanted to refer to them.

[Senator MacDonald]

Senator MacDonald: Shall I wait until copies are circulated?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I believe that copies have already been circulated.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Copies will be distributed right away, honourable senators.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I was talking about the reference in the bill to sections 95.1 and 95.2.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

Hon. David Walker: Go and find out yourself. Don't hold up the Senate. You are a nuisance.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Walker seems to be concerned that I am asking these questions. We received the bill less than an hour ago and we have given leave to proceed with it today. I did not get a copy of it. I wanted to follow along with the references to the bill. I am not trying to hold up the work of the Senate. It seems to me that following the references made by the sponsor of a bill can really be considered part of the work of the Senate. I just wanted to do that.

The bill I have contains references to sections and amendments to sections. I wanted to know whether, when Senator MacDonald refers to section 95.3, he is referring to clause 9 of the bill itself. What page is he referring to?

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I was referring to sections 95.1 and 95.2 of the bill that was amended, reprinted and reported August 27 by the legislative committee.

Senator Frith: Are you now referring to a report?

Senator Flynn: He said, "and reported."

Senator Frith: At any rate, section 95.1 is amended by clause 9 of Bill C-84 at page 9 of the bill. Clause 9 of the bill states:

The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following sections: and inserts a new section 95.1. I take it that is what he is referring to.

Senator MacDonald: Yes.

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I was talking about the suggestion that church or humanitarian groups might have objections to those clauses of the bill which they fear specifically or in some way are directed at them. It should be pointed out that since 1976 there have been penalties contained in the act for any person who brings undocumented people into Canada. Church groups have been liable to prosecution for the past ten years. There have been no complaints and, to the best of my knowledge, no prosecutions. While this may be to some a specious argument or assurance that the administration of this act has always recognized and will continue to recognize the humanitarian nature of the activities of these people, what was true before is true now under the current legislation and under the new bill. Bill C-84 does not create some new ground of prosecution for that which church and humanitarian groups have been doing for years; namely, presenting refugee claimants for examination, sponsoring refugees from abroad, and providing settlement assistance.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Would the honourable senator permit a question on this point? On the face of that clause as we now read it, would the Right Honourable Joe Clark have been technically liable for a breach of that provision because of his inducement, aiding, abetting or organizing the escape of the Soviet defectors from Afghanistan?

Senator Flynn: What do you think?

Senator Frith: I would like to know.

Senator Flynn: What is your view? You have a chance to put it forward.

Senator Frith: If there were ten or more, I suppose that technically he would have been liable.

Senator MacDonald: I suggest that Senator Grafstein should leave a little work for the committee.

Senator Grafstein: I agree.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, there has been much discussion about amending these provisions. I am told that the lawyers and legal drafters of this legislation suggested different phrases and considered such terms as "a religious group," "profit," "reward," "fraud," and "clandestine entry," but each option, in the opinion of the drafters, created loopholes and reduced the capacity to prosecute the unscrupulous. The bottom line of this tough legislation is that we cannot permit these individuals to escape sanction by creating insurmountable problems in terms of proof. This bill will send strong signals that Canada will no longer tolerate the abuse of our borders and our laws. The message is clear and the audience is specific. Those who seek to ignore or circumvent our laws will be prosecuted.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Mr. Hocke, has been given our assurance that the government has every intention of exercising its power to send ships back, but without endangering human lives or breaching the Geneva Convention. Above all, whatever actions may be deemed appropriate, given the specific circumstances involved, the government will not do anything to risk the health or personal security of any person. This bill is designed to meet an urgent situation. It has been drafted to hit hard at a new type of criminal activity, which is the large scale smuggling of human beings. It will also strengthen our ability to remove quickly criminal and security risks. It will allow us, as well, to slow down and perhaps put an end to the increasing flow of people arriving in Canada without proper documents.

This legislation, together with a bill yet to come before us, Bill C-55, will provide a comprehensive, long term solution to the difficulties and abuses currently surrounding the refugee determination process. They will enable us to concentrate on helping those refugees truly in need of our protection. I am convinced that this legislation is essential if we are to respect our humanitarian commitment towards refugees and if we are to prevent possible frauds against Canadians or Canadian law.

Honourable senators, we have here a classic situation in which Parliament, through legislation, seeks to remedy or correct what is acknowledged to be an intolerable public problem, without alienating or infringing upon the rights or freedoms of anybody physically present in Canada. That it would be subject to challenge is without question.

Other senators may now wish to speak on this matter, following which, at the appropriate time, I will move that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: I wonder if the honourable senator would permit a question? Honourable senators, when I listened to the hyperbole of the immigration department when we originally wrote this bill in 1976, I was not impressed. I still am not impressed by it. And I must say that now when I look at the result I see a bill that is almost unbelievable. My question is: In a situation similar to that which happened in Vietnam, when thousands of people were forced to leave in small boats, were abused and robbed on the high seas, as well as other things that we all know were done to them on the high seas on their way to other countries, are we saying that, if this bill were passed, and we were one of those countries to which the boat people came, the boat people would be sent back to sea and, as I read section 95.1, anyone who assisted them would be subject to a fine of $10,000? In other words, a Canadian who is assisting such people who were leaving their country of origin because of the fear of death, and who were not in possession of documents, would be subject to a fine of up to $10,000 and five years imprisonment?

Senator Frith: Look at section 95.3.

Senator Stollery: I am sorry. The wording says, "not exceeding five hundred thousand dollars." And the boat people would then be shipped back to sea in their boats. Is that what is being proposed by the government?

Senator MacDonald: I think the honourable senator knows what is the accepted definition of a refugee.

Senator Stollery: In Canadian law we use the United Nations definition of "refugee".

Senator MacDonald: Then a refugee is a person who cannot return to his country of origin because of a well-founded fear of persecution for a number of reasons. Here we made a distinction between people who leave their country of origin and who apply for refugee status for those reasons and those who come from, say, Germany or from Poland and apply for refugee status in Canada under the Geneva Convention. The latter are illegal migrants. As between the case of the boat people to which the honourable senator referred and the case of the arrival of the two boatloads of refugees, there is no analogy, no parallel.

Senator Stollery: I am not talking about the boat that arrived off the coast of Nova Scotia. I am specifically describing the situation that developed in Indo-China, when approximately one million people left that country, many of whom may well not have fitted the United Nations definition of "refugee", that is to say, as persons who had cause to fear the consequences set out in the United Nations definition, but for a lot of other reasons, namely, that their business had been taken away from them, as was their right to continue their life in the way in which they were used to conducting it, and they decided to brave the elements and leave their country.

If I am not mistaken, we in Canada were very generous in receiving those people who came not from their country of origin but from refugee camps in other countries. At that time we were critical of those countries which did not accept them. We actually criticized those countries which did not accept those boat people.

Now we are seriously suggesting that a Canadian who assists such people will be subject to a $500,000 fine or imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years; and that penalty has actually passed the House of Commons.

Senator MacDonald: I am sure the honourable senator has the figures and will be aware of the number of people who have found a safe haven in Canada, the number of people that Canada has accepted either privately sponsored or government sponsored. The honourable senator has seen the figures increase each year, from 13,000 in 1983 to 17,000 this year.

There are 500 people seeking refugee status in Canada each month through our airports. Those incidents are unpublicized. Those people who are coming to Canada are going through the system; they are being given every opportunity to show that they are legitimate refugees.

Senator Stollery: Honourable senators, I realize that this bill will go to committee, and that is where the matter is best discussed. I do not mean this in any way as a criticism of Senator MacDonald, who is sponsoring the bill, but I would point out that between 1967 and 1972 Canada accepted 115,000 immigrants, who arrived in Canada under exactly those conditions. I must say that the numbers are not something that make me quake and shake. In fact, I believe they are relatively modest compared with those of many countries which have a serious problem involving immigrants disguised as refugees. It is a problem that will have to be addressed. But I believe that the figures involved here are not very large, and I would remind the honourable senator and other honourable senators that in Canada, excluding immigrants who came through the normal channels, from 1968 until 1972 115,000 people came to Canada, and, according to statistics produced by the Department of Immigration—and I would be the first to admit that the department is not famous for producing good statistics; and that number can be multiplied by eight, because normally when one person arrives and becomes settled, approximately eight more eventually come to Canada as immigrants—each one of those immigrants today is a voting Canadian citizen and is contributing to this country. I think that is something which we should all consider when looking at this bill.

[Senator Stollery.]

Senator Flynn: Would the honourable senator be deemed to have spoken in the debate, or is that a question?

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of this debate until tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Grafstein, debate adjourned.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CONSIDERATION OF SEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, entitled: "Child Benefits—Proposal for a Guaranteed Family Supplement Scheme", tabled in the Senate on 30th June, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand in the name of Senator Tremblay. He is out of the chamber at this moment, but I know that he wishes to speak to that report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands in name of Senator Tremblay.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION TO INSTRUCT BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE RE DEADLINE FOR PRESENTATION OF REPORT ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS NEGATIVED

Senator William M. Kelly, pursuant to notice of Monday, September 14, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., concerning amendments to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, together with the Message from the House of Commons dated August 31, 1987, on the same subject, be instructed to report the same to the Senate no later than September 23, 1987.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. You will note at page 1801 of the Debates of the Senate of September 3 that a similar motion in amendment was introduced, the second paragraph of which reads:

That the Committee report no later than Monday, September 14, 1987—

That motion in amendment was negatived by the Senate on a recorded vote. The motion today seeks to do exactly the same thing as the motion in amendment of September 3. Rule 47(1)—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Oh, oh!

Senator McElman: I would ask Senator Flynn, in light of his current activity, to refer to rule 47(1).

Senator Flynn: I know about it.

Senator McElman: The rule reads:

A motion shall not be made which is the same in substance as any question which, during the same session, has been resolved in the affirmative or negative, unless the order, resolution, or other decision on such question has been rescinded as hereinafter provided.

Subparagraph 47(2) reads:

An order, resolution, or other decision of the Senate may be rescinded on five days' notice if at least two thirds of the senators present vote in favour of its rescission.

Honourable senators, this motion today has exactly the same purpose as the motion in amendment proposed on September 3 and therefore is patently out of order.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the substance of the motion in amendment to which the honourable senator has referred has the date of September 14. The substance of the motion before us has the date of September 23. That is the substance. When a certain date is given and then another date is given, obviously it is not the same thing at all. So, I think the honourable senator is drawing conclusions from the rule that he quoted that would make it impossible to act in this chamber. For example, if the Senate negated a motion to adjourn to next Monday, we could not then approve a motion to adjourn to next Tuesday. Since we would have already decided on the matter, we could not approve a motion to adjourn to Tuesday. That is exactly the position that the Honourable Senator McElman is taking.

This rule has been interpreted on other occasions. I remember one occasion where the Speaker at the time, the Honourable Senator Marchand, ruled against a point of order that I had raised in connection with a bill concerning Canada Day. He decided that the substance was not the same, because in that instance they had added something to the bill and that, therefore, it made a difference. I do not think that in the present case one can take the substance of the motion outside the date which was considered in the motion in amendment the other day and the date proposed today in the motion by Senator Kelly.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the interpretation of rule 47 advanced by Senator Flynn would make one wonder why the drafters of the rule used the words "in substance." Why would the rule not say, "a motion shall not be made which is the same as any question—"? It does not say that. It says, "a motion shall not be made which is the same in substance as any question—." Can it seriously be argued that the substance of Senator Phillip's amendment was to fix a date for report by the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee and the substance of the motion by Senator Kelly is not? To fix a date for report is the substance of each motion. The date is not the substance, the date is the detail. The particular date is the detail as to what date should be fixed. For that reason it seems to me that Senator McElman's point of order is quite correct. Any other interpretation would be to ignore completely the words "in substance" in rule 47.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I would like to comment on the proposition put by the Honourable Senator Flynn, and I respect his knowledge of the rules very much. However, if his proposition were to be accepted, there would be no limit upon obstructive activity within the Senate.

Senator Flynn: You can say that again! There is no limit to your obstructions.

Senator Frith: You could just keep changing the date.

Senator McElman: Are you through for the moment?

Senator Flynn: Sure.

Senator McElman: If you are, then tomorrow another motion could be introduced that reads September 24, and the next day one that reads September 25—

Senator Flynn: Certainly.

Senator McElman: —and by the hour, and so on. Obviously the rule is there for a purpose.

Senator Flynn: But it is not for that purpose.

Senator McElman: It is there to stop repetition of this nature when the substance has been decided by the Senate, and in this case that was done by a recorded vote.

Senator Flynn: With or without a vote, it is the same thing.

Senator McElman: That is right, but I simply raise that point to impress upon you that the Senate knew what it was doing.

Senator Flynn: Do you mean that sometimes it does not?

Senator Argue: Only when you are here, Jacques. When you are not here we know exactly what we are doing.

Senator Frith: Speak for yourself!

Senator Flynn: That is what he said.

Senator McElman: The amendment proposed on September 3 sought to impose upon the committee a time limit, irrespective of what that date may have been. That was the substance, to place a time limit upon the committee for reporting back to the Senate. The motion before us now has exactly the same purpose. Its substance is identical, to impose a time limit upon the committee.

Senator Flynn: But not the same time limit.

Senator McElman: The substance is absolutely the same. The date is incidental. Therefore, under rule 47(1) it is patently and obviously out of order.

• (1510)

Senator Flynn: We decided that the committee was not bound to report on the 14th; that is all we decided.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Frith.

Did I understand correctly when he said that as far as he is concerned the date was an essential question in the sense of section 47 of the Rules of the Senate? If so, how can he reconcile the fact that there might be five, six, eight or ten different dates and that it still remains an essential question?

Senator Frith: Exactly. I believe the justification for this section of the Rules of the Senate is to deal with the substance and thus avoid the repetition of motions based on questions based on the same substance.

The substance of Senator Phillips' motion was to set a date, and Senator Kelly's is similar.

The substance is the same. Otherwise someone could move another motion tomorrow for, say, a quarter to three on Friday or on any other day. Thus not only can the day be changed, but so can the time at which a committee has to report to the Senate.

So it is somewhat absurd to suggest that the two motions are not substantially identical. The question therefore is: Does substance refer only to the date or to the time imposed? In the latter case there is no way to avoid the repetition which, in my estimation, is the object of section 47 of the Rules of the Senate.

Senator Flynn: If I move adjournment to a given date, is the date unimportant? Once an adjournment motion has been moved, is it no longer possible to move another? You said "absurd", I say "ridiculous".

Senator Frith: So we agree that the position of the other side in either case is absurd, do we not?

Senator Flynn: Exactly.

Senator Frith: In any case we are convinced that your position is absurd, and apparently you share this opinion.

Senator Flynn: You are not convinced!

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Are you asking the Speaker to make a ruling?

Senator McElman: No, honourable senators, I have not requested a decision from the Chair. I do not believe that that is something that should be done too often. I would like to comment that I think there have been too many references to the Chair in recent times. It is the practice of the Senate that the senators decide what action the Senate will take or not take on a particular issue, and only in the last resort do the senators make reference to the Chair.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I find myself in a somewhat difficult position. I had assumed that we would automatically refer this discussion to the Chair for some sort of ruling. I certainly hesitate. I very frankly did not offer this motion with the idea of being obstructive, which I believe was the word used. I have some things that I really do want to say and, very frankly, this was a way of having an opportunity to say them. Notwithstanding the possibility that Senator McElman has a point of view that might prevail were the Speaker to be asked, I would hope that the senators would allow me to indulge myself to the extent of speaking.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as long as it is clear that this particular precedent has not been settled either one way or the other.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I would only add that that is the way of the Senate. I will not insist that the honourable senator should not speak, but I do think that we have to operate in here—

Senator Flynn: We are creating a lot of repetition—

Senator McElman: Senator Flynn, would you like to get to your feet and speak, or are you going to sit there yattering, as you usually do, from your chair? It may be very fine for you, Senator Flynn, to be always telling others that they are out of order, and they are this and that, but you, sir, are the worst offender against the rules in this chamber, and you know it. If you want to take the floor, then raise a question of privilege or a point of order. Otherwise, I would ask you to sit there and be quiet, as you are supposed to do in this chamber, as a gentleman and as a senator.

Honourable senators, I am not opposed to Senator Kelly speaking; not at all. However, as Senator Frith has just said, I think it should be done with full knowledge that it is not a precedent but that the senators, if they wish, should hear him.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, on a point of order, and apologizing to the Senate for my terrible misbehaviour—

Senator McElman: You are so sincere in what you are saying now!

Senator Flynn: What are you doing now?

Senator McElman: I rise to my feet; that is what I do now. I rise to my feet and say that you encourage other senators to act in the way you act by your constant interventions and insults.

Senator Flynn: I resumed my seat when you started to interrupt me from your own seat, but that is all right. I do not take your remarks as a personal insult at all. I merely want to point out that if Senator McElman in raising his point of order had immediately said, "I am not asking the Chair to rule; I simply do not want this to be taken as a precedent," we would have avoided the repetition and a debate that was absolutely useless.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I apologize for the problems I have created. I did study my Beauchesne and other things, including the rules of the Senate, and I thought that I had followed the procedure properly, but, unfortunately, I may have missed something.

I want to make it clear at the outset that my motion is not in any way intended to impugn the abilities, competence or motives of the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce or its members, of which I am one. I have only the highest regard for the committee, its members, and particularly its chairman.

Honourable senators, on several occasions since I was appointed to the Senate in 1982, when I have risen to speak in this chamber I have prefaced my remarks by saying that I am relatively new to this place and somewhat inexperienced in its operations. Today I make no apologies for inexperience.

Senator Frith: It was wearing a bit thin, yes.

Senator Kelly: Like many of you, I have been here long enough to become reasonably versed in the ways of the Senate. I have also been here briefly enough to have a perspective perhaps wider than the Senate, or even than Ottawa.

I suspect that some of you will immediately assume that I am motivated by partisanship. I am not.

Senator Côtte: Me neither!

Senator Frith: Who is?

Senator Kelly: I am motivated only by a concern for the proper role and function of this place in our parliamentary system. I am speaking not from one side of this chamber to the other but as a senator to colleagues.

Neither am I motivated by the substance of Bill C-22. Although I happen to support the substance of Bill C-22, substance is now a secondary issue. The primary issue that now confronts us is the proper, practical role that the Senate plays in our system, now and in the future.

My point is quite simple and straightforward: Regardless of what our motivations might be; regardless of whether our position is "constitutionally correct," anything more than a brief review by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be generally interpreted as Senate recalcitrance—as this chamber using procedural and other tactics to frustrate the will of the lower house and the government of the day.

I do not believe that the Senate has either the right or the duty to delay this bill any longer. I am concerned that, if we continue to delay a decision, we shall strengthen immeasurably those who wish to abolish or reform this institution.

Honourable senators, let me say I am not against a Senate reform. In fact, I support it. I am, however, opposed to any reform undertaken in the heat of the moment, with highly-charged partisanship, over a relatively small issue and without due consideration to the long-term consequences. Our opposition to this bill has already led to hasty, ill-considered and partisan calls for Senate reform. Senate reform, in my opinion, should not be initiated or mooted in this kind of environment for these kinds of reason.

I am told that former Prime Minister Trudeau frequently said that he was loath to do anything that could even incidentally undermine the powers and prerogatives of the office of Prime Minister, not only for himself but also to retain the integrity of the office for subsequent prime ministers.

I find that position laudable, indeed, and I think that position could provide a lesson for us in this situation.

I fear that what we are doing on Bill C-22 could undermine the integrity and credibility of this institution and have unforeseen consequences for the Senate and our system of government.

I have asked myself several times, "Under what circumstances should this bill legitimately be delayed further by the Senate?" It seems to me that, if this bill raised regional issues or concerns that remained outstanding, the Senate should legitimately continue to try to amend or delay the bill. This bill does not raise regional issues and concerns. The provincial governments of Quebec and Saskatchewan have formally signified their support for the bill. The provincial governments of B.C. and Alberta have informally signified their support. No provincial government, to my knowledge, has expressed opposition to the bill.

It seems to me that, if the government had used its overwhelming majority in the other place to stifle due consideration of this bill, the Senate could legitimately continue to try to amend or delay its passage. Again, this is not the case. I know closure was applied in the other place, but only after a total of 47 hours of debate in the House, after 40 hours of committee hearings, and after a review of testimony from 98 individuals, including 46 groups.

It seems to me that, if this bill were seriously or fundamentally flawed on a technical basis, if in our view it simply could not achieve the objectives it purported to achieve or had major unforeseen side effects, the Senate should legitimately continue to try to amend it or delay its passage to force the government to reconsider. Again, such is not the case. The opposition to this bill is due to opposition to the policy entrenched in this legislation, not to any technical deficiencies.

In my view the issue is clear cut. In our system a government commanding a working majority in the lower house has a duty and a right to govern. A fundamental element of governance is to implement a set of public policies that the government feels are required to meet the circumstances and requirements of the day. The government's ability to continue to govern should be a function of its ability to command a working majority in the lower house.

Honourable senators, the majority of this chamber apparently feels that this is a "bad bill." We have made that point and I believe it has been noted. The majority of the lower house apparently feels this is a "good bill." They will be held accountable for that decision at the next general election. We are not likely to be held so quickly or effectively to account if our activities cause the bill to die.

My colleague, Senator Sinclair, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, has had an extensive, brilliant business career. I know that his success was based in part on his ability to assimilate information, alternatives and opposing viewpoints and make a decision. He appreciates very well that there comes a time when a decision must be made. I submit that we are at that point, and that further debate and further hearings are unlikely to change anyone's opinion or make the ultimate decision any easier. To delay the decision further will accomplish nothing and will only contribute to the view that we are being mischievous.

I say to this chamber: "We have made our point. Our opposition and the reasons for it have been duly noted. Now, let's get on with it."

Two hundred and sixty-three witnesses, including 130 groups, have already appeared before the Special Senate Committee on Bill C-22. Some witnesses or groups have made multiple appearances. The Consumers' Association of Canada has appeared eight times; the Canadian Labour Congress has appeared seven times. We have had more than 150 hours of hearings in the special committee and we have spent $315,000 on the Senate committee review thus far.

Does anyone seriously believe that holding another set of hearings will resolve anything? Does anyone seriously believe that there are new issues to be discovered, new concerns to be addressed, new constituencies to be heard, or new expert testimony to be considered that has not already been considered? Does anyone seriously believe that there are major stones that have been left unturned in this exercise? Does anyone seriously believe that the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce cannot more productively spend its time considering any of the several new issues before us—such as tax reform—rather than rehashing previous consideration of Bill C-22 ad nauseam? I say again that we should get on with it.

Let us without further delay instruct the standing committee to conclude its review expeditiously. I heartily concur with statements made earlier by my colleague, Senator De Bané, if we cannot reach agreement in good faith, let us pass this bill. As I said earlier, we have made our point. Let us move to other issues that are equally or more pressing.

Allow me to digress somewhat to better illustrate my concerns about our approach thus far to this bill.

My colleagues well know that in Australia's bicameral system the Upper House—the Senate—is elected on the model of the American Senate while the Lower House—the House of Representatives—is elected on the basis of representation by population.

In the early 1970s the Labour government of Gough Whitlam had been able to command a small but working majority in the Lower House, but had been unable to obtain a majority in the Upper House.

By 1975 the Whitlam government appeared to be in difficulty. Its popular support had eroded. A succession of ministers had resigned for one reason or another and Labour had recently lost an important by-election. But a general election was at least a year away and in that time Labour was confident of turning their fortunes around. The opposition was becoming restive and impatient.

Confronted with these realities, the leadership of the opposition decided to frustrate the government's legislative program and generally test the government's mettle. A series of skirmishes began, the most serious of which was an announcement by the opposition that it intended to use its majority in the Senate to defer a vote on certain supply bills approved by the Lower House. With supply deferred, the government would soon run out of money and be unable to function.

The decision to defer the vote on supply was taken for partisan and procedural reasons and had little to do with the substance of the bills in question.

It seemed like a small thing at the outset, a small, harmless "raid" into enemy territory to test the defences. But matters soon escalated. Ultimately, the matter was resolved by the Governor General withdrawing the Prime Minister's commission and calling on the Leader of the Opposition to form a government, pending an election.

A constitutional crisis resulted. A government fell. A Governor General's reputation was irretrievably sullied. There was public unrest. A higher level of acrimony was injected into Australian politics and the integrity of the Australian system was badly damaged. The precedent that was established at that time has been used on occasion to hobble successive Labour and Liberal governments.

I do not want that to happen here. I do not think any of us do. If Senate reform happens—and I hope it does—I want it to be motivated by what is right for our system and our country. I want Senate reform to happen in an environment of calm, considered deliberation. I want Senate reform to achieve what is best for the long-term interests of Canada and Canadians.

Honourable senators, if we persist on our current tack, the risks are great that this won't happen; that Senate reform will occur for all the wrong reasons. Let us not let that happen. We have made our point on Bill C-22. Let's get on with it.

On that basis, honourable senators, I ask that we instruct the Banking Committee to take a look at some sort of reasonable deadline, and I have suggested September 23.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I accept parts of Senator Kelly's position. He says he has the highest regard for this committee, and I accept his sincerity in making the motion he has made. I do find it difficult to resist—but I am going to resist—a temptation to discuss the larger issues such as whether or not there is an Australian precedent for us to be concerned about. When the Senate in Australia refused the government supply, it effectively put the government out of business. We need not worry about that analogy as applied to a committee taking a further look at the possibility for a compromise on Bill C-22. That those two are indeed the same thing, interesting constitutionally though it is, and to have us fear that a constitutional crisis, followed by public unrest and other constitutional evils, will follow as a result of this committee not completing its work by next week is a little difficult to accept. However, as I said, I resist the temptation to deal with that aspect of his intervention.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, we are concerned with the point that has been raised by Senator Kelly—that is, every step that we have taken with regard to Bill C-22 has raised a question as to whether or not we should have continued. Honourable senators will remember that when we sent the bill back in its amended form the minister said that the Senate had no right to amend the legislation. He changed his mind afterwards and said, "Well, perhaps the Senate had the right to amend the legislation." So, right down the line I agree with Senator Kelly when he says that every time we have done something that has not been to rubber stamp a decision of the House of Commons we raise the question whether we should only have the right to rubber stamp its decisions.

Now Senator Kelly has said that we have gone far enough and this is the stage at which we should rubber stamp, as I understand his position. That is where the difference exists between the two sides—whether or not we have come to the point at which we should not take any more legislative action. That, it seems to me, has to be put into the context of the precise motion that is before us and in the context of this precise bill and the committee reference. When we received the message from the House of Commons—the message that, in substance, it disagreed with the Senate's amendments—the Leader of the Government in the Senate, quite correctly in my view, put a motion that the Senate not insist on its amendments. I think that is the accepted procedure and that it was quite correct for the Leader of the Government to do that.

Then there was a motion that the message, to which later there was added, I believe on agreement, the motion not to insist on the amendments, be referred to a committee. During the debate in support of that motion there was a suggestion that the Senate should take one final step—perhaps final, I expect final—and at least explore another procedure that had found some success in the past, more success than the more formal procedure of reference to a conference—that is, a reference to a committee to see if the two houses could agree on a compromise.

Now, a compromise, by its nature, is not satisfactory to either side. Those of us who have had any experience in the practice of law know that if you settle a case you can be sure it is not a good settlement unless both sides are partly satisfied and partly dissatisfied. That is what the Senate decided to do.

At that time the Senate also considered the question of whether or not there should be a limit placed on the length of time that the committee should use to explore the possibility of compromise. I believe at that time those who thought a fixed time limit ought not to be imposed realized that the very placing of a limit might interfere with the committee's ability to negotiate and reach the compromise that the Senate wanted reached. Honourable senators must remember that the intent was not the question of Bill C-22 or the Senate amendments but a compromise.

The Senate considered that because someone said, "Yes, if this is going to go to a committee in order to explore this possibility, as has met with some success in the past, we should put a fixed date on it." The Senate then said, "No, we should not put a fixed date on it." A little over a week later the Senate is now saying we should impose a fixed date. That is an inappropriate way to deal with Senate committees. I am not saying that we should never put a limit on committee studies, because we often do. We put a limit on Senator Kelly's committee on terrorism, as we put a limit on the Special Senate Committee on the Subject Matter of Bill C-22. We have done that often in the past. However, on this particular occasion we have asked this committee to undertake the narrow task of exploring the possibility of compromise.

Having done that, and quite apart from the point of order raised by Senator McElman, which I supported in substance, we are now going back and saying, "No, we want to put a time limit on that committee." We have asked it to seek a compromise; we have decided it is inappropriate to place a time limit on it, and now we are being asked to decide that it is appropriate to do so.

I think it is asking too much of a committee to give it the right to explore a compromise, decide against putting a time limit on it, and then keep breathing down its neck and looking over its shoulder and saying, "Now we are going to ask for a limit."

I do not doubt at all the sincerity of Senator Kelly's motion and his reasons for putting it. He has explained those reasons to us. He has said that he feels that we have gone far enough and made our point. Some honourable senators do not agree with him and say that we have not yet gone far enough, that we have not yet explored all the possibilities. In conclusion, I do not think that we should hobble the committee by putting a time limit on its deliberations when we have already looked at that condition and decided against it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, I want to speak briefly in support of Senator Kelly's motion. I do not question for a moment the remarks of Senator Frith. First of all, I am not ignorant of the fact that on September 3 this chamber voted against the imposition of a deadline and, as a result, the intervention of both the mover of the motion as well as the chairman of the committee. I do not question the motivation of those who voted against the imposition of a deadline. I suggest, however, that some events have taken place between September 3 and today which, indeed, might bring compelling reasons for senators to take a second look at this.

If one goes back to the debate of September 3, one will see that Senator MacEachen, in his capacity as mover of the motion, throughout his remarks used expressions such as, "Surely there ought to be an effort undertaken to seek an accommodation or a compromise." The word "compromise" or the words "to seek an accommodation" seem to have been the rationale all along for referring Bill C-22 to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Indeed, the word "compromise" is to be found throughout the remarks Senator Frith made a few moments ago.

What has happened since then is that, indeed, we now find that, while the committee might bravely undertake to seek a compromise, the two major parties to that compromise have already gone public and indicated they will not compromise.

Senator Frith: Chrysler has already stated that it will not go along with the UAW on pensions.

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I refer to a letter addressed to the Honourable Ian Sinclair, in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, dated September 11. The letter states, essentially, that Bill C-22 in its current form is already a compromise. The minister has already gone public with the same position, saying that Bill C-22 in the form it was introduced in the House of Commons is the best compromise, and in the words of the industry "achieved only after three years of intense discussion and negotiation."

They are now telling the Senate committee, the Senate, all Canadians, the world, "That's it! No more budging from that position."

Therefore, while the decision taken on September 3 might well have been justified and motivated, I suggest to honourable senators that, if in the words of the mover of the motion the whole purpose of the exercise was to "seek a compromise," it has now become apparent that the two major parties necessary to reach that kind of compromise will not budge. Therefore, I suggest that it becomes difficult for Canadians, and indeed for members of the committee, to understand what else can be done. I do not question the goodwill of the committee, or indeed the quality of its work and the quality of its chairmanship, but nobody is Superman, and a compromise will only be achieved if the parties that are necessarily involved indicate a willingness to play, which in this case they will not.

● (1540)

I suggest, therefore, that failure to report promptly might well be perceived as merely a waste of taxpayers' money, a waste of the time and effort of senators and, indeed, of the public.

In closing I want to comment on the fact that I was one of the three senators who responded to the invitation given to all senators from Quebec last week by the Quebec Coalition. It is hard to find a better representative group of the province of Quebec inasmuch as there was representation there by the FTQ, the universities, the government, the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, mayors, and so on. This is the meeting to which my colleague, Senator Bazin, referred.

Senator Frith: No better senator to defend the Senate!

Senator Cogger: I want to convey to senators that those people are not fools; they understand the games that are being played with Bill C-22. After all, you are dealing with mayors, people who run the Chamber of Commerce, and so on. What they could not understand and what will now be even more difficult to understand is the process. The question was: "Why in God's name another committee now? If this is not a delaying tactic, what is?"

Senator MacEachen: Did you explain?

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I was in attendance and I could hardly respond. I told them that I am a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and, frankly, I was at a loss to respond, because I was a member of the other committee and I find that I have heard all I ever want to hear about Bill C-22.

[Senator Frith.]

As I say, in view of all this, the process becomes, frankly, apparently futile, and perhaps we would best serve the Senate and its committees by reporting promptly. That is why I invite senators to support Senator Kelly's motion.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, Senator Cogger is an ornament to the Senate with his good humour, his intelligence and his flexibility.

When arguments have been made in various discussions, such as about the Meech Lake accord, to the effect that, if you require agreement by the 11 legislatures, the 11 premiers, you are never going to get agreement because they will say no to certain things and they will not retreat, Senator Cogger will say, "Agreement is always possible." Honourable senators, all we are saying is that perhaps agreement is always possible. In terms of free trade, the Americans have made certain declarations, and we are told that that is possibly a negotiating position and they may give in later.

Personally, I remember that my wife, while she still had good sense, refused to marry me for two whole years. Eventually, the poor dear took leave of her senses and married me. Who knows, perhaps the drug industry will show the same spirit of compromise and accept a retreat.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to respond to the honourable senators who, during the debate on this motion by Senator Kelly this afternoon, have said that a compromise has already been made and that we have the best possible bill. As a former member of the other place and, in fact, as a Parliamentary Secretary to a former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who brought in the amendments to the Patent Act in 1969, bringing into effect compulsory licensing for generic drugs, I want to say that Bill C-22 will not do good to the consumers of Canada, especially poor patients who need certain prescribed drugs.

We have heard many speeches in this place and we have heard representations in the special committee that the bill amending the Patent Act in 1969 really did increase research in Canada. It did contribute to the growth of multinational pharmaceutical companies. It also contributed to the establishment of several generic pharmaceutical companies which have provided safe and effective medication at affordable prices to the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, I submit that it is possible to make Bill C-22 a better bill. Therefore, let us work toward not just a compromise but a better compromise. I personally believe that some minor, technical amendments should be made in order to clarify certain clauses of this bill and even to strengthen the principle of the bill.

I do not think that the eight days remaining to September 23 is enough time to do this job. Therefore, in the spirit of goodwill and compromise, I urge honourable senators to give the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce ample time to achieve a better bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I think that all members of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce recognize that they have been given a difficult task. I think all of us who have had experience are not going to be very much impressed when parties of interest say, "I have gone the last mile. There is not another thing I will do." We have heard this too often. It is a bargaining ploy, and Senator Cogger emphasized that when he said that they turned out the band, brought in the television, got a group of outstanding people together and said, "No, no. We have gone the last mile."

Honourable senators, what I have to say is based on the experience I have had—and I am sure many of you have had it too—that it is not over until it is over; and it is not over. We see that in a very distinguished contest between two great countries. We will see another extension of that tonight. I could give you many examples.

I was impressed by Senator Kelly saying that there were no technical points involved. Honourable senators, there is a very difficult technical point involved that arises out of the first clauses in the message having to do with the acceptance of one of the amendments and the effect that has in regard to retroactivity. Certainly that amendment misled quite a few people. We have not addressed that yet. We hope to have a detailed statement in regard to that point available on September 22.

Senator Kelly also said that there were no regional issues involved. I have not read all the evidence, but some that I did read certainly indicated to me that the provinces of Atlantic Canada were not in agreement with the bill.

Senator Frith: And Ontario.

Senator Sinclair: I will just deal with Atlantic Canada because I think it covers the whole of Atlantic Canada.

• (1550)

There is no question in my mind, and I knew this from reports of the media, that Quebec would like to have this bill passed. Certainly the meeting to which Senator Cogger referred would indicate that. However, I think it is also abundantly clear that Ontario does not want it passed and has made that known. In the view of the Province of Ontario the bill will be too costly.

Honourable senators, I cannot think of anything more self-serving than the letter from Judy Erola to which Senator Cogger has referred. The view put forward in that letter is, "before you start to tell me what to do, I am going to tell you there is nothing you can do." That is a bargaining ploy that is as old as life itself.

What can we do? The members of the committee can look at the synthesis of what has gone before, carefully consider it, decide whom we should hear viva voce, meet with some of them in camera and in public to see whether there is any movement—

Senator Murray: I trust that there will be no future in camera hearings—enough of that. The committee should meet in public where the public can hear and see what is going on.

Senator Sinclair: Well, with all due respect to Senator Murray, I think he knows that to make deals it is better to do so behind closed doors. He has had a lot of experience in doing that.

Senator Murray: Who appointed this committee to make deals?

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Frith: What about an open door policy at Meech Lake and on free trade? Let the sunlight in.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I am so glad that Senator Murray gave me that opportunity; I thank him for it. I appreciate it very much.

Senator Flynn: On a point of order, I wonder whether Senator McElman would invite people not to speak from their seats.

Senator Guay: He learned that from you a long time ago.

Senator McElman: I assume that the honourable senator is speaking to all senators, not just to me.

Senator Flynn: I was asking you, since you are trying to police the Senate, if you are going to do that.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, may I continue? It would seem that everybody wants to speak, so perhaps I had better sit down. But if I do, I am going to say to honourable senators that I do not think the committee should be under any dictate as to time. I said earlier that I think senators should have confidence that the committee will operate in an orderly manner and that it will do its job.

I want senators to recognize that I have great difficulty in the referral of this motion to a committee. I could find no precedent of a motion's being sent to a committee for consideration and report. I could understand considering and reporting on the message, but how we could consider and report on the motion is something that our committee has not turned its mind to. It is something for which I cannot find a precedent.

In any event, as I have said before, I, at least,—and although I can only speak for myself, I am sure I speak for other members of the committee in this regard—do not intend to have the committee used for a mischievous purpose, to use Senator Kelly's word, or to delay this legislation. But I think the committee should be given the opportunity to undertake the work it has been given to do, and to do it in an orderly manner and with some intelligence.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the debate we held on that motion strengthens my conviction that during the debate on Bill C-22, the Opposition majority constantly carried on obstruction.

Senator Haidasz: That is not true.

Senator Flynn: You were not even here. You want to start the debate all over again from the beginning. You are referring to minor amendments. Had you been here at that time, perhaps you could have brought them forward at the right moment, rather than from your seat and thus offending Senator McElman.

In any case, as I indicated, the debate shows that from the start the obstruction was systematic, calculated—

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: And anti-Quebec.

Senator Gigantès: Anti-Quebec? I am a senator from Quebec. I find it anti-Quebec and anti-Canada to consider each difference of opinion with the government and the Prime Minister as an anti-Quebec act. That is wrong. It is something that no statesman, which we are supposed to be, should do in this country, to divide Francophones and Anglophones. It is a very serious allegation to assume that we are capable of playing games in order to harm a Canadian province.

I am really shocked. I believe the senator who uttered such terms should apologize before the Senate for that serious insult to his colleagues.

Senator Flynn: I am not at all impressed by Senator Gigantès's pathos. I read the letter he circulated, in which he tried indeed to suggest the government was raising racial principles with that measure. You started that debate yourself. You would very much like to muddle in that kind of prejudice, but your present submission is totally unfounded.

Senator Gigantès: On a matter of privilege. Senator Flynn, if he looks through his files, will find that letter in which I complained that the Prime Minister himself had used such tactics accusing other people of being anti-Quebec whenever they do not agree with him on Bill C-22. I did not start that. The Prime Minister did. I find that unacceptable and detrimental to the country. Senator Flynn is not one of those illiterate people we were referring to yesterday. If he read my letter, he knows very well what it said. If he did not read it or has lost it, I can send him another copy.

Senator Flynn: I can tell you that I have read your letter and that it attributes wrongly certain comments to the Prime Minister. You are simply spreading untruths. You had no business making such an intervention, whether or not it is a question of privilege.

What I was going to say was this: The attitude of the majority Liberal opposition in the Senate since we have received Bill C-22 has been one of obstructionism. I have already said so and I am not going to go over the details. Everyone knows what has happened and what is still happening. I am not suggesting that Senator Sinclair is an accomplice to the plans of the Opposition leadership. I do not believe so. However, maybe he is being used. Perhaps he will realize what is going on eventually.

However, this is certainly a fact. Everything is being done to gain time in the hope, that eventually, we shall capitulate or kill the bill. No one knows exactly. This tactic is not really new. It came to the Senate at the same time as Senator MacEachen, and he has refined it to an art form. Obstruction in the Senate is not done by speeches, but by silence, by adjournments and by referral first to one committee and then to another one. That is how it is done.

[Senator Flynn.]

What I wanted to emphasize, and here I agree with Senator Kelly, was that we must not confuse the problem of Senate reform or abolition with the history of Bill C-22. These are two separate issues. I hope that we shall get out of the trap of confusing the position of the Liberal Opposition in the Senate with that of the Senate as a whole. The Senate, as an institution, is being blamed for the behaviour of the majority Liberal Opposition. I do not like it at all.

A second issue which should not be debated either at this stage is the position taken by the minister and others elsewhere. The problem resides with the committee to which this bill was referred the second time. What happened? The committee met, but in my opinion, it did not understand its terms of reference. As explained by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, the committee was asked to determine whether there could be an agreement. No matter what the minister may have said or not. The committee was supposed to find a way to come to an agreement. I mentioned this point when I took part in the debate. After months of debate and after doing everything that we did, we must now decide whether we have to accept the position of the House of Commons or whether the minister is willing to accept some compromise solution. If this cannot be done, the committee will report to the Senate saying that there is no compromise possible, and recommend that we refuse the message of the House of Commons and that the bill die, if there is no other way, or else that the Senate give in and accept the position of the House of Commons. Such were the terms of reference of the committee. But what did the committee do? Senator Bonnell was appointed as a substitute. What did Senator Bonnell suggest?

• (1600)

[English]

The Honourable Senator Bonnell moved that the Chairman, on behalf of the committee, direct the research staff in the preparation of studies, analyses and summaries relevant to the substantive issues contained in the message from the House of Commons dated August 31, 1987.

[Translation]

The chairman of the committee informed us yesterday that what he did in reply to this decision was to ask a staff member, and I do not know which one, to prepare a summary of all the presentations heard by the Commons committee and the Special Senate Committee because, according to him, we have to know everything that has happened. Can you imagine? He wants to know what has been going on for a year and a half. Such is the position of the committee, that we should begin all over again. According to its terms of reference, it should try to see whether we can reach a compromise and hear the people involved, especially those who were behind the compromise achieved in Bill C-22 and the minister, to determine whether or not an agreement can be reached.

If there is no way to reach an agreement, the only thing for the committee to do is to decide once more if it should recommend that the Senate maintain its opposition or that it give up. Such are its terms of reference. There is nothing else. Whether Senator Sinclair agrees or not, what has been suggested is simply obstruction. You do not want to set a date. You simply say that it will be done in due time. But when will that be?

Even if the Canadian public could understand that the Senate is really serious about the program set by the committee and the suggestion of Senator Haidasz, that a few amendments could be made of which we have never heard before, can anyone imagine how long we shall have to wait?

I maintain that the committee should have the courage to decide whether the Senate will maintain its position or accept the position of the government. The committee should have some courage and stop this filibuster which is bad for the reputation of the Senate and makes us look wishy-washy.

In my opinion, the purpose of the motion proposed by Senator Kelly is to emphasize that we expect the committee to come to a decision as soon as possible.

Hon. Pietro Rizzuto: Honourable senators, as you probably know, I am one of the three senators who were at the meeting last Wednesday in Montreal.

Senator Flynn has said that it is perhaps because of the position taken by the majority in the Senate that the Senate has been criticized, and this is exactly what I told those who attended the meeting last week.

We have to ask who criticized us first by saying such things without considering the importance of Bill C-22 and the reasons why the senators did not agree with it, and who attacked us immediately by saying that the Senate should be abolished and that the senators should not be objecting to a decision already made by the House of Commons. This was certainly not said by senators!

I agree with Senator Flynn that we shall perhaps suffer the consequences of our actions, but I would add that this is unfair. Some people did not really look at everything in Bill C-22. They immediately attacked the reputation of the Senate in the media and suggested that it be abolished.

I do not believe that such criticism is useful. That is not the way to arouse the interest of the Canadian population. This is what I said last week, and I wanted to say it again today.

I suggested a compromise. As you know, I am from the Montreal region in Quebec. Naturally, the people from Quebec who were there last Wednesday had come to tell us that we should make the Senate understand that Bill C-22 should be passed to ensure that the benefits it will provide, such as investments and job creation, will follow. I said that I was aware of the problem and that I also wanted this to happen. I am also concerned with these investments and this job creation, as are all senators, in my opinion.

The government and certain organizations would like the bill to be passed in its present form. However, other people and many senators disagree with the fact that we would give in to all the demands of the companies, which are trying to take advantage of the Canadian population.

I think that what I suggested last Wednesday was well received by those who were there. This was that we should try to find a solution to the problem. What can we do? This would be better than calling each other names.

I repeat that we should try to find a solution to the problem, honourable senators. I agree with the people who are concerned about Bill C-22, especially in the Montreal region. I also agree that the companies are being given too much. Why should we not try to agree—

Senator Flynn: For how long?

Senator Rizzuto: —among honourable senators, including those from the government side? For how long, Senator Flynn? I believe that last week, as those who were present in Montreal will recall, I personally suggested a compromise when I said that perhaps a seven-year period could be reasonable for all.

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Rizzuto: I made that suggestion in my own personal name. I went as far as saying that I would try as hard as I could . . . yes, Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: When I said “for how long?”, I was not referring to the duration of the patent. I was asking how long should we try to reach a compromise.

Senator Rizzuto: How long should we try? I have suggested a time period. To my knowledge, there was no reaction from anybody as to whether that could be an acceptable compromise. On the government side, apparently, there is no possible compromise. The Senate must pass Bill C-22 as it is.

As we know, the majority of senators do not agree to grant a 10 year period to these companies, even after the improvements that have been proposed by the committee and after having travelled across the country. Why should we not try to reach a compromise? I recommended to our committee to try and seek solutions to see whether there would be a possibility of having everybody sit around the table and see whether it would be possible to find a solution to the problem, to reach a compromise.

I am also calling on the Liberal senators, the majority in the Senate, to say that we should contribute to the adoption of Bill C-22. Now, I ask some efforts from the government side.

Would it be possible, together with the executives and the companies involved, to reach an agreeable solution? We do not want to prevent anybody from benefiting from job creation and investment. I suggest this would benefit the country as a whole and not only the Montreal region. That is the solution, one cannot always remain unwavering in one's position.

Such good faith should not be shown only by Liberal senators but also by senators from the government side in order to show a willingness to find a solution to the problem in the best interest of the Canadian people who would benefit from more research and job creation.

I believe the committee should study the matter. The committee cannot decide on its own if it does not feel that there is a willingness to cooperate, and openmindedness on both sides.

Government should be prepared to sit at the table and to try and find a solution. Owners and company officers should accept the possibility of meeting the requirements of the Canadian people, who are not convinced that the legislation as originally proposed is in their best interest.

I simply suggest this: why should we not try to find a cogent solution so that Bill C-22 be acceptable? I do not think we on this side of this chamber should be accused of being the only ones responsible for Bill C-22 having failed to pass.

Personally, I said that the compromise must come from both sides. We must all be ready and willing to find a proper solution. This certainly will not be achieved by refusing to alter one's position.

If indeed the committee sends invitations to company spokesmen, I hope that government committee members will be ready to co-operate in some sort of give-and-take decision. I mentioned seven years, it could be six or eight years. We must assess the possibility of reaching a consensus.

I also call upon government members and Conservative senators on that matter. If the companies had agreed to six years in 1983, why would they not accept seven years now? Why must we give them ten years?

I am speaking strictly in the interest of the population, the people involved, keeping away from politics on that matter. Personally, I do not appreciate the suggestions that we are playing politics with this bill. Personally, I am genuinely looking for a solution and that is my contribution to solving the problem that involves Quebecers, especially from the Montreal area. That is one of the concerns and one of the worries of many people and agencies.

I promised last Wednesday in front of everyone that I was ready to look for a compromise that would be acceptable to all. I am telling my colleagues, the honourable senators that it is the only solution.

If the government keeps on suggesting that there will be no compromise, the committee may be sitting one, two, three or four more weeks. I am not trying to know why. I am simply trying to discover whether there is a possibility that we can sit down and find a proper solution.

In my view, if it is not 10 years, if it is 8, 7 or 6 years, that is fine. Honourable senators, I say this based on the fact that in 1983, the companies accepted six years. They could very well accept 7 years now.

I cannot see why the Government will not discuss with the company spokesmen and reach a proper solution to allow the passing of Bill C-22 as soon as possible.

● (1610)

[English]

the status of this bill in the Senate. I think honourable senators should be able to understand readily the concern of the government on this matter. I was not here on September 3. I was unavoidably absent when the debate took place on the motion to refer the message from the House of Commons to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I have, however, read the debate.

When honourable senators who are supporters of the government attempted to place a time limit on the committee for its consideration of this matter, the chairman of the committee rose not once but, if I recall correctly, several times to assure the Senate of his intention and the intention of the committee to deal expeditiously with the matter. Accordingly, when Senator Phillips rose later in the day to move the adjournment of the Senate, he moved that we adjourn for some ten days, precisely, as he said, to give the committee an opportunity to get on with the mandate which it had been given by the Senate. One can imagine our surprise when the committee met on the Monday or Tuesday of the following week for, I presume, a couple of hours—

Senator Sinclair: A little more than that.

Senator Murray: A little more than a couple of hours, the chairman reminds me—then promptly adjourned its deliberations for two weeks. Honourable senators are entitled to ask themselves and to ask the chairman of the committee and others what is going on here. Yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicated to some of us that he would be prepared to come to the committee this week to testify and answer any questions that the committee might wish to ask of him in its ostensible search for compromise.

I am told that yesterday a member of the committee made a motion that the minister be called and have an opportunity to testify this week. The chairman of the committee refused to put the motion; simply refused to put the motion to hear the minister.

Senator Sinclair: Just a minute—

Senator Murray: I am sorry, I was not present at the meeting and, if I am incorrect, the honourable chairman of the committee can correct me.

Senator Sinclair: You have been misinformed. The committee was not in session at the time. I called the committee into session subsequently. The committee was not in session; there was a general discussion and a suggestion was made that was contrary to a decision that the committee had taken, when it was in session on the 8th, as to how it would proceed, but there was no motion before the committee, because we were not in session.

Senator Flynn: There is nothing in the committee minutes of September 8 saying that the committee had decided otherwise. The committee decided what I had mentioned, but not that it would not hear the minister.

Senator Sinclair: Senator Murray is talking about what happened yesterday; not what happened on the 8th.

Senator Flynn: Senator Murray is saying that yesterday you refused to discuss the proposition made by Senator Roblin because the committee had decided otherwise at its previous meeting, and I say that that is not true.

Senator Sinclair: With all due respect, honourable senators, the committee met on the 8th and reached a decision as to how it would proceed.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but that did not exclude—

Senator Sinclair: Just a minute, please. During the discussion there were some members of the committee who expressed contrary views. However, when the motion was put, no one voted against it. There was silence. I am not saying that they voted for it; I am saying that no one voted against it.

Yesterday we had adjourned the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce until after the Senate rose in order to continue what we had on our order paper and what we had decided to proceed with, which was to work on tax reform. When the Senate rose, we went to the committee room, and when I walked in, and before the committee was called into session, a discussion developed. Senator Roblin, quite rightly, said that he felt that rather than waiting to know what took place or to have some knowledge of what was involved in the substantive issues, we should try to hear from the minister and the other parties to see whether or not there was the possibility of a compromise.

Honourable senators, there are a number of players here that some people seem to have overlooked. There are the generic drug manufacturers as well as the pharmaceutical people, who have said that they have compromised; there are the consumers and there are some provinces. The committee has not yet decided how we are going to proceed, but that was left to be decided when we see what we have to deal with on September 22.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I say, I was not present yesterday at the committee meeting, but I think the honourable senator confirms my impression that yesterday he had the opportunity to agree to hear the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs this week. I tell him on behalf of the minister and on behalf of the government that that opportunity is still open to him and to the committee, if they wish to hear the minister this week. The minister is available and, for all I know, there are other witnesses who may be willing to be heard and may wish to be heard. I understand that the Patents and Trade Marks Standards Institute sought to be heard by the previous committee and could not be heard. Perhaps they too would like to be heard, if my honourable friend wants to use the time of the committee wisely this week.

The point I make is that, while there was talk on September 3 of an expeditious consideration by the committee of this matter, the committee met for a day, adjourned for two weeks, met again, and will meet once more on the 22nd of this month. Today we had a debate, and at no point during this debate has the Senate been given any indication at all as to when the chairman of the committee believes that that committee might be able to report. Is it days? Is it weeks? Is it months? Is it years? What is it? It is expeditious, so he tells us, but what does that mean? Does it mean that the committee will continue to meet every second week? I think the concern of the government should be obvious when this bill has been in this chamber for five months. It has been here since April.

Senator Frith: The subject matter has been here since April.

Senator Murray: I need not put on the record—I beg the honourable senator's pardon: The special committee has been studying the bill—the subject matter of the bill, if he wishes to split hairs on that—since April, but the bill has been before us in one form or another all that time.

Senator Frith: How long was it in the House of Commons?

Senator Murray: If the honourable senator wants me to place all of that information on the record, I can and will. The bill was introduced for first reading on November 7, 1986, in the House of Commons. The bill received one hour and 21 minutes of debate at first reading. Second reading in the House of Commons was begun on November 20, 1986, concluding with a reference to a legislative committee on December 8, after 11 hours of debate.

The legislative committee of the House of Commons examined the bill from December 8, 1986, until March 3, 1987. The committee had 24 meetings for a total of 54 hours and 31 minutes of deliberation. The committee considered briefs from approximately 100 witnesses representing 46 organizations.

The bill was debated in the House of Commons at report stage from March 31, 1987, until May 4, 1987, for a total of 13 hours and 16 minutes. A time allocation motion on Bill C-22 was debated on May 5, 1987, for a further two hours and 11 minutes in the House.

The third reading stage in the House took place on May 5 and 6, 1987, and the bill received a further five hours and 40 minutes of consideration. If my arithmetic is correct, that takes us up to approximately 80 hours of deliberation by the House of Commons.

In the Senate, I may say that my friends opposite—and I have pointed this out on an earlier occasion—were invited to undertake a pre-study of this bill as long ago as last November, but they declined. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition himself stated that there were perhaps temporary problems, as he put it, about the pre-study of Bill C-22. Temporary, indeed!

Senator Frith: As it turned out, that was exactly correct, because we had pre-study, so the problems were only temporary.

Senator Murray: On April 8, 1987, the special committee was set up. The committee held hearings from April 8, 1987, until August 12, 1987, touring the country on a budget of more than $300,000. The special committee held 52 meetings for a total of more than 150 hours of deliberation. On their cross-Canada tour, the committee heard from more than 200 witnesses representing 130 organizations.

Meanwhile the bill received first reading in the Senate on May 7, 1987. On June 23 the special committee reported on its pre-study and, on June 25, had the bill itself referred to it for further deliberation. The further deliberation took until August 10, 1987. On August 11 the report of the special committee was referred back to the committee and reported back to the chamber again on August 12. The bill was amended on August 13 on third reading and sent to the House of Commons.

The House of Commons returned the bill on September 2, accepting one amendment, further amending two amendments, and disagreeing with the remainder. On September 3 the message from the House was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Honourable senators, that is the chronology of events, and it is no wonder that the government is concerned about what is happening with the bill. After all of this deliberation in the Senate and in the House of Commons, what is going on? After the undertakings that we have been given by the chairman of the committee that that committee would deal expeditiously with the matter, we still have no undertaking from anyone in a position to give an undertaking as to when the committee will complete the consideration of the message that has been sent by the House of Commons.

I still think that the committee has an opportunity to hear the minister this week, if they so wish, and he is ready to be heard.

Meanwhile, I think the Senate should well understand the concern of the government when we hear from the pharmaceutical industry by way of an article in yesterday's Financial Times of Canada stating that:

Canada's pharmaceutical industry is quietly moving its much-touted research plans off the drawing boards until the House of Commons and the Senate end their feud over the new federal drug patent bill.

● (1620)

The brand-name drug companies, including heavy-weights such as Merck-Frosst Canada and Glaxo Canada Ltd., had promised to spend $1.4 billion over the next decade in new Canadian research if the bill, which offers these companies ten years' patent protection from generic copies, becomes law.

It goes on to quote various executives of the various drug companies, expressing their concern and their dismay with what is happening. It says:

Until now, the industry's response has been to simply release their research plans more slowly than originally planned. Last year, drug companies enthusiastically announced how they would spend the first $770.5 million of the promised $1.4 billion in new research money over the next ten years. At that time, the bill seemed set to pass.

So far this year, however, the drug companies have held back spelling out precise plans for more spending commitments. An exception has been $40 million in new research announced earlier this year by Bristol-Myers Canada Inc.

One of the representatives of that company indicates that the money is wasted without the bill being passed.

Naturally the government is very concerned about the investment that is threatened by the delay in dealing with this bill, one way or another, and the jobs that are at stake. There are perhaps 3,000 jobs at stake, jobs that are important in the research and development sector of this country.

The Deputy Leader of the Opposition has suggested that we are asking the Senate to rubber-stamp something. That argument is surely ridiculous after the Senate and its committees have spent over 100 hours—150 hours I think it was—debating and studying the bill and listening to witnesses and reading briefs.

Senator Frith: Except that at every stage you asked the same thing.

Senator Murray: We are not asking the Senate to rubber-stamp the bill.

Senator Frith: You did.

Senator Murray: Today I am not even asking the Senate to pass the bill. If I get an opportunity, I will do that. I am asking the Senate to deal with the bill, to get this bill back from the Banking and Commerce Committee and to make a decision.

Honourable senators, with regard to compromise, Senator Cogger has referred to the letter from the industry that is in the hands of the chairman, copies of which have been sent to many of us. This letter indicates that Bill C-22 is itself the product of a compromise and that no further compromise is possible.

Senator Frith: So were our amendments.

Senator Gigantès: A compromise between what and what?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is a matter for debate when the bill comes back to us. I can go through it in some detail. I can read the letter again or I can discuss how and why Bill C-22 is a product of a considerable compromise between the various sectors in the industry and between the industry and the government on this matter. However, the industry takes the position that Bill C-22 is the product of a compromise and that no further compromise is possible. I assure the Senate, on behalf of the government, that that is the position of the government.

The government has worked at this matter for several years now. The result that is before the committee, Bill C-22, is itself a product of compromise.

Senator Frith: Between the government and the industry.

Senator Murray: The government does not contemplate any further compromise. We do not see how any further compromise is possible or acceptable. We think that, after several hundred hours of debate and discussion in the committee, the time has come for the Senate to decide.

My final point is regarding the idea of in camera meetings of the committee. In camera meetings of committees, in my experience, have been held only when the committee is discussing the business of the committee or the schedule of the committee.

Senator Frith: Which was this case.

Senator Murray: Yes, what witnesses to hear, and so forth, or, at the end of it, when the committee is sometimes down to the business of drafting the report. My friend, the chairman of the committee, has suggested this afternoon that witnesses might be heard in camera by this committee. I want to state that the government and members of the government are unalterably opposed to hearing witnesses in camera in that committee on this matter. Whatever the committee does it should do in public so that the government and the people of Canada and the industry and those people who are depending on this bill for that investment and for those jobs will see exactly what is going on.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I hesitate to add to the long hours of deliberation that have been spent on Bill C-22 both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. It is a fact, as Senator Murray has pointed out, that the bill did begin its rather stormy passage in the House of Commons last November and did not get out of the water of the House of Commons until May. The bill has been in the more placid waters of the Senate since that time, but it has not been able to escape yet.

My purpose in rising is to deal with two points made by Senator Murray. Before I deal with those points, I would like to express my own disability in dealing with what has happened at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

We have no evidence before the Senate; we have no copies of proceedings, and it has been my understanding, certainly in the House of Commons, that one never discussed what happened in a standing committee until the committee itself reported. I do not know if that is the rule in the Senate. However, as I listened to the discussion I found that I was out of the discussion because I had not been present, and most others were out of the discussion also. I asked what had happened in the committee, as others did. Contrary to what Senator Flynn may have inferred, I certainly had no influence nor did I know beforehand the decision that was made by the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to adjourn its discussions on Bill C-22 until a particular date in the future. That was the decision of the committee itself. It was certainly not suggested by me or by the deputy leader. It was its own decision. I read later in the press that Senator MacDonald said that that decision had been taken in good faith.

I would like to make the point that it is very difficult to deal with what happens in a committee when one is not present, when one does not have the proceedings, and particularly when there is a sound parliamentary rule that one ought not to talk about committee proceedings until the reports are before the senior body. That is by way of introduction.

Senator Murray: All the more reason they should sit in public, you would agree.

Senator MacEachen: I have never attempted to dictate what has happened in the committees. Usually they sit in public. Senator Sinclair explained his in camera meeting fell under one of the categories that normally would be in camera. However, I am not going to deal with that.

I was worried a bit about Senator Murray's approach, because he did express the concern of the government, and I understand his concern. The government wants its legislation passed. Senator Murray used the words, "the ostensible search for a compromise". We know the meaning of the word "ostensible". It means that we are doing this for a show, and that the "ostensible" search is not a real search; that it is concealing some other purpose.

I want to tell Senator Murray that when the amendments came back from the House of Commons and reached the Senate and when he put down his motion, it would not have been difficult to terminate the career of that bill at that point.

• (1630)

Senator Murray: As I pointed out to you.

Senator MacEachen: It would not have been difficult, but it was the decision taken on this side of the house that it would be better in the circumstances to seek a solution, a compromise or an accommodation. That was the tenor of my remarks. It is not a search for an "ostensible" compromise; it is a search for a real compromise.

As has been stated by Senator Sinclair, the referring of this matter to the committee was not for the purpose of delay. If one wanted to delay the bill further, there is an easier way to do that than to refer the message to a committee. That could have been done directly.

Senator Flynn: How?

Senator MacEachen: It is not necessary to refer the message to the committee in order to delay the passage of the bill, if that was the purpose. The message was referred to the committee in order to engage not in an "ostensible" search for a compromise but in a real search.

I believe that Senator Flynn accepted that in following my statement in the Senate. I believe he accepted—

Senator Flynn: The record is there! Read it!

Senator MacEachen: —that it was an honest effort to secure a compromise, and that is still the position.

I support totally the comments made by Senator Rizzuto that it is essential to try to get a solution, and that there has to be some give on the part of the government, the industry and the majority in the Senate; otherwise, it is impossible to achieve a lasting solution.

I understand Senator Murray said, "Well, the government today is not inclined to compromise."

Senator Murray: I said more than that. I think it was stronger than that.

Senator MacEachen: He told us at the end of June that the government would recall Parliament and stand guard while the Senate dealt with Bill C-22. Well, the government had second thoughts, and Parliament was not recalled, and there was an agreement to extend the deliberations on Bill C-22 well into the summer.

So the government can and does show occasional flexibility. If it was the intention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to have the minister appear before the Senate standing committee this week and give testimony and maintain an inflexible attitude, then, of course, that would have been futile. I hope that the Leader of the Government and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will accept the statement made by Senator MacDonald that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce is acting in good faith, and that senators on the majority side are acting in good faith in seeking a compromise and a solution that will discharge this bill and that will give the industry some stability.

Senator Murray: How long do you think that will take?

Senator MacEachen: I ask the Leader of the Government to drop the word "ostensible" in the future. That would make a big difference.

Senator Murray: How long do you think this will take?

Senator MacEachen: The second point, honourable senators, deals with Senator Murray's comment, "Imagine our surprise, following the meeting of the standing committee, when a date was fixed to meet two weeks later."

I inquired why the delay—

Senator Murray: So you could get an executive summary of the testimony!

Senator MacEachen: I inquired why the delay, and I was told that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee had established a work program—

Senator Murray: They had not!

Senator MacEachen:—for staff which could not be completed one moment earlier than that particular date. Senator Murray can say that that was unnecessary, that that was useless, that they should not have done that. Nevertheless, the committee itself established a work program for staff, which I understand is to be completed on that particular date, and that was done, in the words of Senator MacDonald, "in good faith."

So it was not my intention nor was it the intention of any other senator to say, "Well, let's put it down the road two weeks and we will use that two weeks and it will be easier to delay this bill." That was not the case.

Senator Murray: That is the result.

Senator MacEachen: I make these comments in order to ask Senator Murray to understand that there is a serious objective here. The objective is to seek a solution that will give both houses of Parliament an opportunity to support the bill, and that is achievable if there is some flexibility shown by the government and the industry. That is the challenge that faces the government, the industry and the Senate. I do not believe that it is beyond the capability of any one of them to reach a conclusion on this particular bill.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: On a point of order, honourable senators. Senator MacEachen has been kind enough to quote me three times in his remarks.

Senator Frith: He was not motivated by kindness, just excellence!

Senator MacDonald: Senator MacEachen was referring to an article written by Mr. Steve Bindman in the Ottawa Citizen. Mr. Bindman called me and asked me if there was any hope that any compromise or accommodation could be found. I made it clear to him that I had voted against the reference of this matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and he asked for my feeling on the matter. If I recall correctly, I said, "We are approaching our task in good faith. We are not sulking." I did not make reference to the fact that we were dealing in good faith in respect of the matter of the delay of the bill for three weeks; I said that we were not sulking, that we were doing our best, that hope springs eternal.

Senator Frith: Well said!

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I had not thought it likely that I would speak this afternoon because much of what I had to say deals with the activities of the committee. I happen to agree with the Leader of the Opposition that in regular parliamentary proceedings committees are not debated on the floor before their reports are tendered, but, as the subject has been opened up by others, and as my position has been referred to with respect to the activities of the committee, I think it might be as well, at least for my own satisfaction, to express my views on where I stood, what I did, and what I think.

The first thing I want to say is that I attended the committee on the 3rd of the month at which time the resolutions were passed that we should get a summary prepared of all of the evidence that had been presented, all of the evidence that we could lay our hands on. I may be exaggerating, but that is the impression I had—evidence given before the Senate committee, before the Commons committee, and heaven knows where else—and that we were to prepare a summary of all the work that had already been done and, in effect, undertake to do again the work that had been done by two other committees of Parliament. In other words, the view that we had a narrow task to explore the possibilities of compromise, if I can use the definition of the function of the committee that I think the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition would approve, seemed to be set aside. I found myself wondering how that task fitted in with this ambitious program to rehash the whole proceedings from stern to gudgeon, and I expressed myself before the committee in those terms.

● (1640)

Senator Frith: Stern to gudgeon.

Senator Roblin: I am going to go from stern to gudgeon. My honourable friend can go from stem to gudgeon if he likes, or he can also go elsewhere if he likes.

Senator Frith: And the same to you, sir.

Senator Roblin: I want to tell him that the charming habit he has of correcting us all when we are engaged in our proceedings here does not really endear him to anyone but me. I rather enjoy these little interventions, because it gives me a chance to get off the serious tenor of the discussion and to perhaps say something else.

Senator Frith: That is its purpose.

Senator Roblin: The point I want to make is that my position in the committee was that this was unnecessary, that our job was to find out if a compromise was possible. I did not think we had to arm ourselves with all the pros and cons from the beginning of time in respect of this matter in order to approach the question of a compromise, because the compromise, surely, had to be limited to the refusal of the government to accept the Senate's amendment.

That was not the majority opinion on the committee. Senator Bonnell was there and he proposed the resolutions which have been read here, and he took the view—and it was supported by the majority—that it was necessary to do this work. So the majority has its way.

Now the chairman of the committee says that the minority did not record their view at the time the vote was taken, and perhaps that is correct. I do not dispute that, but I do say that in my own position, I think, was clear. It was that I did not agree that this course should be followed, and that we should be seeking some more expeditious way of doing our work. "Expeditious" is a very good word, and I am sure it means as speedily as possible. I hope it does.

In any case, that is my position in respect of the proceedings on that day. I would not like this chamber to think that I was not alert to the desirability, in my view, of focusing on this question of accommodation or a compromise. I do not really think that the information we are waiting for is going to be critical in our approach to that question. In fact, my view is that it would be better to deal with this question of compromise head on. Let us find out what the attitude of people is. We are told that the attitude of the chemical industry is a bargaining ploy. Well, let us ask them. Let us find out. We are told that the minister perhaps is not quite so inflexible as my friend here thinks him to be. Well, why don't we ask him and find out? If the facts are as thus represented—that these two important players in the problem do not think that compromise is something that they would be willing to endorse—then I think the sooner we find out about that the better.

When the committee met yesterday I took the liberty of making that suggestion. If my memory of what happened is correct, it is that we entered the room in the afternoon, the chairman came in, and he started the proceedings by telling us that our witnesses would not be available until another hour and that we had some time to put in. I must confess that I took the opportunity to say that I would like to raise these points, and I did suggest—in fact, I moved—that the committee hear from the chemical industry and the minister as soon as possible. I used words to that effect.

The chairman decided that that motion was not in order. He did not say anything to me about the committee not having been formally convened. I really think that is neither here nor there, but he said it was not in order. I thought it was in order, but I am a peaceful chap and, if the chairman rules, I do not really like to go beyond that, because one has to accept the authority, or perhaps the desirability of allowing the presiding officer to direct affairs. I did make my position clear. In fact, I said, "Let the record show that today I do not agree with the chairman's ruling, and I do think we ought to hear these people as soon as possible." The chairman said, "No, I am not going to put the motion. You are out of order." He did this in his usual kindly way, so I accepted that admonition, I accepted that advice, and I did not press it. I just said, "I have stated my position." I know that whatever the numbers in the committee at this present moment happen to be, really, the opposition have a majority, so there is no use trying for any quick tricks or any funny business of that kind. I simply accepted with what I think was good grace the ruling of the chairman and proceeded with what we had to do.

My concern now is with none of those things. I feel better that my version of events, for what it is worth, is now enshrined in the immortal annals of the Senate. What I really want to talk about is the fact that I do not know where this committee is going and I do not know what it intends to do. I suggest to you that the committee does not know either.

All we know at the present time is that the committee will meet on September 22 and that it will receive what will undoubtedly be a voluminous aggregation of paper to review the whole proceedings of the evidence that has been given since the whole issue began. What we will do with that when we get it I do not know, because, unless the abbreviations are so abbreviated as to be useless, it is going to take a great deal of time to find our way through all of that evidence and then, presumably, to make some findings. Because, if we have all this evidence before us, the purpose will be, surely, to make some findings. If that does not take us a little while, I will be surprised.

When we have found whatever we are looking for—and heaven only knows what that is—what do we do next? The committee does not know what it is going to do next. I presume it is going to call some people, although I do not know how many. I have heard that the committee will call the minister, representatives of the chemical industry, the generic drug people and we will probably hear some evidence from the consumers' side of this issue. It really is a Pandora's box and, unless we are very self-restrained—and there has been no sign of that so far in our proceedings—I do not know how long it will take us to get through this.

To come down to my position in this matter, I am certainly going to support Senator Kelly's resolution. I will not debate the Australian situation with him today, although Senator Frith and I would be happy to take him on sometime, because I think he has made a fundamental misreading of what happened in that instance. However, we will let that go, because that is all in good fun between senators who enjoy the subject of Senate reform.

My real point is that I am going to vote for this resolution not because I think it is going to pass, because I do not think it will. I am going to vote for it because it may say to the committee, "Okay, chaps, get your act together; decide what you are going to do; set some kind of a termination, at least in your own minds, even if you are afraid to tell anyone, because it may mean that they will drag their feet and not bargain in good faith; but somehow bring this matter to a conclusion."

As far as I am concerned, I think it is unlikely, to put it mildly, that we will find, no matter how deeply we study this, an area of compromise which will be acceptable to all of the major partners in this proposition.

However, I have to confess that the committee is set to try, so try it will, but I do hope that, regardless of the outcome on this resolution before us now, the committee will pull its socks up and make up its mind about what it is going to do after September 22—if it is determined to do nothing until then, and there is no good reason for that. What are they going to do after September 22, and what kind of termination date can we look for in respect of this matter?

One of the things that is important in the constitutional process, it seems to me, is reasonable time limits. Unreasonable time limits we have seen and we do not like. The Senate has exercised its functions. It has examined this bill in great detail. We are not being asked to rubber stamp anything. We have not rubber stamped it in any case. No one can fault us for our lack of thoroughness. How far do we take this process and to what constructive ends do we take it?

It seems to me that when we next meet in committee we ought to decide what our program will be. I do not know why we cannot make some findings on that immediately. There is nothing that I can see holding us up. We should decide what we are going to do and set some kind of a termination date as to what or when we are going to report to this chamber. That will depend, of course, on the program we outlined for ourselves.

I have to warn the Leader of the Government that if he is expecting that this matter will be resolved as quickly as he would like to see it, I think he may be disappointed.

● (1650)

While I do not challenge the integrity of anyone in the Senate, and while I do not quarrel with the word "ostensible"—if some senators don't like it, I certainly won't use it—it seems to me that in the minds of many the element of delay is not absent from the mix which they perceive in the way in which the committee at present and the Senate as a whole has dealt with this matter. Delay is not an unreasonable attitude for the Senate to take—we have done it before—but unreasonable delay is. After we have done all that we can reasonably do as intelligent men and women in ventilating an issue, then we ought to decide.

[Senator Roblin.]

If we decide we do not want this bill, that is within our legal power. I would strongly reprobate it if we were to do that, because I think it is wrong, and I think the Leader of the Opposition thinks the same thing, too. I don't think I'm going to catch him thwarting the House of Commons—I might, but I don't think so. I told him the other day that he had convinced me it was his view that he was not going to thwart the House of Commons, and I am waiting for him to stand up and tell me that I am wrong, because I think I am right. The only thing is I do not want to wait as long as he wants me to wait; that is the whole thing. I want to have a decision made within a reasonable amount of time. I agree that we can have delays, yes, but not unreasonable delays.

Honourable senators, I do not think that I have added much to the progress of mankind in these last few minutes, but I appreciate the opportunity the Senate has given me to express my views and to express the hope that this committee will pull its socks up and get the job done.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I was not going to enter this debate, but Senator Roblin has brought this intervention upon his own head. I am a member of the committee. What I am going to say initially bears out the wisdom of the rule that proceedings in committee should not be discussed until the report of the committee is available.

It was not until yesterday that I learned that Senator Roblin disagreed emphatically with the course of action the committee had adopted. He said just now that the chairman started proceedings and that he immediately spoke up. That is not my recollection of what happened. The chairman did not begin the proceedings; rather, he noted that the witnesses on tax reform were not there. At that point Senator Roblin said that that gave him an opportunity to raise a point concerning the work of the committee on Bill C-22. There was no formal beginning of the proceedings, and that is why the chairman said that the motion which Senator Roblin sought to move was not in order. The committee was not operating at that point and, indeed, if it had been, the motion would have been out of order because there was an established agenda of business for that meeting—an established agenda of business which had nothing whatsoever to do with Bill C-22. The meeting was on tax reform.

Now I go back to the earlier meeting about which Senator Roblin has said he is happy to have put some things on the record. Well, I wish that I could confirm what he has said—that he stood resolutely, that he spoke firmly, and that his view was put aside and that Senator Bonnell's motion was supported by the majority. Coming out of that meeting I was not aware that there was a majority and a minority on that particular motion. It was my impression that all the senators present, some more enthusiastically than others, supported the decision of the committee to proceed as they had decided. Obviously, then, Senator Roblin was attending one performance and I was attending another.

Senator Roblin: I just got it right, that's all.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, it is wonderful to have one person in this place who always gets it right. The rest of us can then use that person as a sort of star by which to correct our compasses from time to time.

Senator Roblin has said that the work which the committee decided to undertake was irrelevant to the purposes of the committee. I do not agree. We have before us the message from the House of Commons. That message contains certain assertions. The body of evidence which is most readily available to us as we undertake to evaluate the assertions in the message from the House of Commons—and we do not want to repeat the work of the special committee or, indeed, that of the committee of the other place—is contained in the records of those committees. That is why the work that has been assigned to the staff of the committee is essential if we are to perform the task which the Senate gave to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

Honourable senators, I think it is important that we take that task very seriously, because it brings us to the main purpose for which the message and the motion were referred to the committee. As I understand it, that purpose is to ascertain whether some form of accommodation, some sort of compromise, is attainable. I think that Senator MacEachen was absolutely correct—

Senator Flynn: As always!

Senator Stewart: —when he said that the purpose is not to delay. He was correct, honourable senators, when he said that.

Senator MacEachen: Now we have two stars!

Senator Frith: There is always magnetic north and true north.

Senator Stewart: The purpose of the committee's assignment is not to make an ostensible effort to achieve an accommodation; rather, it is to achieve a genuine accommodation. Let me say why I think it is important to do so.

The argument has been made that the pharmaceutical industry will invest large sums of money in Canada if it can expect to operate within a reasonably favourable legislative environment. I certainly understand that argument. But what would be the prospect if all the Liberal senators were to abstain and this measure became law? If I were in the pharmaceutical industry, I would not turn a single sod on the basis of a bill passed in those circumstances.

Senator Haidasz: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: Look ahead to the next election. At least one party and possibly two would be using as a major political argument the fact that Bill C-22 was rammed through both houses. That is what would be said.

Senator Murray: If this is “ramming”—

Senator Stewart: Well, we have had a great deal of ramming here this afternoon. We have been told that if we even contemplate defeating the measure, we will be violating the conventions of the Constitution. That is the argument that will be made.

Now, I ask the following question: In the event that after the next election we have a government formed by a prime minister who is not of the Progressive Conservative Party, what is the prospect for this piece of legislation? I am looking at it now from the viewpoint of someone who is proposing to invest millions of dollars in new plant. There is no prospect at all, except repeal—that is the story.

Honourable senators, it may be that the polls will turn around and that the present government will be re-elected. That is a possibility. But that is not a possibility on the basis of which I would invest millions of dollars.

● (1700)

Senator Guay: Don't bet on it.

Senator Stewart: If the government and honourable senators want to see the Canadian pharmaceutical industry put on a sound basis, they should try to achieve some sort of accommodation.

Senator Murray: I think they may have taken some comfort from Mr. Turner's advice.

Senator Stewart: Without an accommodation, even if the measure were to pass, there would be the kind of uncertainty in which no one would be prepared to invest large sums of money; and, of course, there is the possibility that the bill would be defeated—which, of course, might simplify the situation for the pharmaceutical industry, because then at least it would know where it stood.

Senator Murray: The government has to take its chances.

Senator Stewart: But surely the government is concerned for the pharmaceutical industry. It is not simply concerned with saving face. It is concerned for the pharmaceutical industry for the good of this country—and that is what is at stake, and that is why it is so important that this committee should achieve the task that has been assigned to it.

I do not think it helps anybody—neither the pharmaceutical industry, the people employed in that industry, nor Canadians generally—for the Leader of the Government to heap scorn on the possibility of achieving a workable compromise. I do not believe that is at all constructive.

Senator Guay: Shame!

Senator Stewart: The time has come for the Leader of the Government to convince his colleagues that if they are really interested in the Canadian pharmaceutical industry and its future, they should undertake to put on the statute books of this country the kind of legislation which has the prospect of surviving for 8, 10, 12 or 15 years—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: —otherwise there will be no satisfactory legislative foundation for massive investment in this industry in this country. I mean that quite seriously. I do not think that we are helped at all—

Senator Murray: What about Mr. Turner's comment?

Senator Stewart: —by having a partisan game played here. We have to look at the political realities of the future, the prospects of the future, and see how we can give the industry a good foundation for investment in Canada. That is the work of the committee. It is important that the committee know what the evidence is before it ventures upon this task. The staff is not being given time to luxuriate. The time limits given to it are quite rigorous. I am sorry, but I did not hear Senator Roblin's comment.

Senator Roblin: I was talking to a colleague, asking whether it was possible that you had read the report of the special committee.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I do not think that our committee has the role of acting as a review court on the report of the special committee.

Senator Flynn: That's what you said.

Senator Stewart: No. I said that it is necessary for us to see how the evidence presented to the two committees bears upon the assertions in the message from the House of Commons, the message sent to the standing committee. That is the situation.

This whole business would be much improved if we could get out of this mode—I believe that is the current jargon—of thinking that there is some sort of deliberate delaying operation going on here. The real aim is to achieve a sound legislative regime for the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. That may not be possible, but Senator Roblin admitted that there was a possibility. I believe he said that it is rather unlikely that a compromise will be achieved, but that there is a chance. Well, let us proceed optimistically. Let us proceed—to borrow some words from Senator MacDonald—in good faith, and let us give it a try, and at the end—

Senator Flynn: Ten months?

Senator Stewart: —we may have an arrangement that we can all accept. Otherwise, it is probable that sooner or later this measure will die.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, it may be more in the nature of comic relief when I step in to speak in this highly charged political discussion. But it is not a bad thing once in a while in this chamber to have an independent voice, even though it be a lone voice at this particular moment.

I have heard a great deal from the public on this bill, as have other honourable senators, since it first saw the light of day, and the concern on the part of the public is every bit as widespread as that expressed by honourable senators on both sides. I believe that the Canadian public is extremely browned-off at the delay. I have heard the remarks and points put forward of why and how; but the fact remains that the Senate has not emerged from this debate shining with glory. It has taken an inordinately long time to deal with a very important bill. I am not trying to attach blame, but what has happened has not helped the image of the Senate in any way. Most thinking people in this country would not deny the Senate its right to consider, give second thought to and amend bills. I do not believe that is the issue. But when we are faced with something as important as this bill, we should be making every effort to hasten to find a proper solution.

[Senator Stewart.]

Since the House of Commons sent its message to the Senate, and seeing the obvious reaction of the opposition in the Senate, I must say that I felt that a desirable solution would be to find an accommodation or compromise of some sort. What the possibilities were I did not have the slightest idea, but I felt that there could be some chance of moderating attitudes on both sides of the chamber, and I am still somewhat of that opinion.

I have heard Senator Murray talk about the government's position. I heard the minister say that there is no compromise, and I have followed the public utterances of the opposition in this chamber. Unfortunately, I believe that both positions have been a little hard. For the sake of argument, the "no compromise" viewpoint on the part of the government seems to me to be definitely hard, and I thought in the case of the opposition that its amendments were so sweeping they could not have been accepted.

Among other matters involved with the bill and the amendments, it seems to me, from listening to the arguments of the opposition, that eliminating the Drug Prices Review Board was an unnecessary amendment, and personally I do not happen to agree with it. I feel that the time has come to stop delaying and to push forward with this matter.

There seems to be something about Ottawa—I do not know what it is, but one sees it in the public service and also in Parliament—where we appear to be like a cocoon, where we are ingrown and inward looking, and we are satisfied to thrash out things ad infinitum. Very often we take a very long time and a great many words to say something that could be said very much more quickly. Decisions could be taken more quickly.

• (1710)

This may have nothing to do with it, but I was surprised when I heard about the preparation of a summary of the evidence, of the mammoth circus, which was the original committee. I do not ever remember a situation in this chamber where the staff was given a monumental task to analyze all the evidence and all the representations made in committee hearings. I believe that is part of our responsibility. I cannot tell honourable senators that I have read every word of the proceedings of the special committee, because it would not be true, but I have certainly read enough to get a feel for a great number of the meetings and the representations. It was not necessary to delay proceedings by nearly three weeks in order to give the staff time to go through 10,000 pages, or whatever, to make a nice summary of what happened. My view is that if senators were not able to follow what was happening, then they should not be here.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, oh!

Senator Guay: He is getting fed up.

Senator Molson: Getting fed up with me? I do not blame him; that is reasonable. It has been said quite often during the discussions that Quebec wants this bill and that the other provinces do not. According to the evidence, that is not quite the case. Senator Rizzuto and Senator Cogger have referred to a meeting in Montreal. Unfortunately, I did not receive notice of that meeting and therefore did not attend. Senator David was also there. I am not sure that the Senate realizes the composition of that meeting. It did not involve just a small group of people trying to bring pressure. It was made up of a most impressive group of people in the province of Quebec.

Senator Haidasz: Who was there?

Senator Molson: The chairman of the Montreal Urban Community, representatives from the Board of Trade, the Conference of Suburban Mayors, the Chambre de Commerce de Montreal, the Quebec Conseil du Patronat, the Université de Montreal, McGill University, Laval University, L'Institut de recherche clinique de Montreal, and a whole flock of other people. It was a most impressive gathering of people, including people representing approximately 100,000 of our old people, like some of us here. It constituted a very loud voice in Quebec, and they were not just talking about dealing with the drug industry. It is also a case of employment and a case of high tech.

I recall when the Conservative Party in its wisdom scrapped the Avro Arrow program. It is one of the saddest blows in a technical sense taken by Canada that I have known in my lifetime. Now, it is not the same party—the Conservatives are trying to bring us more research—but another party is in that position. I do not think that there is anything in the nature of research and technology that we in Canada can afford to bypass, not to mention jobs. We do not want to be just hewers of wood and drawers of water all our lives. We need the high tech industry, and this is one instance where we could get it.

The argument that the poor will have to pay more is another point. I have looked at all the figures that were put forward. It is true that there may be some very moderate difficulty or hardship in some cases. However, the vast majority of prescription drugs, if protected in a reasonable way, as has been suggested, will not work hardship. It is said that Ontario does not want the bill because it will cost more for drugs. It will cost the province more, but that is not hardship. The other day in Montreal there were 54,000 people at the baseball game. The next day the attendance was 35,000. The following day at a rock and roll concert at the Forum 15,000 people attended. I hear so much about all the hardship prevailing, but, yet, you cannot get a $20 seat anywhere for any of these events in Montreal. I think that sometimes we get a little carried away.

I do not criticize the chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, because, as their work load is set out, the delay seems to be necessary. However, when a committee of the Senate meets on September 3 and adjourns to September 22 without doing anything, I do not think there is anybody in the world who would say that we are in a hurry.

Senator Sinclair: With all due respect, I wonder if Senator Molson would permit a question.

Senator Molson: Yes. -

Senator Sinclair: The honourable senator has said that we adjourned without doing anything. We adjourned after consultation with the staff, having made a decision that we needed a summary, not of all the evidence as the honourable senator has said but only the evidence with respect to the issues that were raised in the message.

Senator Molson: I still revert to the thought that over the many years I have been sitting around here most of that work gets done without having to get a staff to spend the next three weeks on thousands and thousands of words to come up with a summary. Be that as it may, as I say, the committee decided on its program, and I am not critical of the committee beyond the point I have raised. I think that the decision is certainly a rather questionable one.

From where I sit and from what I have heard of the evidence, I can only say that I think that the Quebec position, that they would like to see this industry and this employment in their province as weighed against the possible disadvantages, is a valid one. I would like to think that there is some room for compromise. I hope that both sides will find it possible to draw back a little bit and give compromise a chance.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Senator Rizzuto: Honourable senators, allow me to convey some information about a poll taken by the Gallup Institute last week.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I believe the honourable senator has already spoken in this debate, but I stand corrected.

[Translation]

Senator Rizzuto: Honourable senators, I thought this would be useful to you. If it is not allowed, I will circulate this copy so that the senators will know about it tomorrow.

[English]

Senator Frith: Do you mean that leave is not granted?

Senator Doody: He has not asked for leave.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senator, let me have that copy, I can speak.

Senator Rizzuto: Are honourable senators granting me leave to convey that information?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave being granted honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Rizzuto: Honourable senators, we are referring to the position of the public and speaking of public opinion. This is normal. We are aware of the response of certain organizations in the Montreal area. Several senators have referred to it.

We are aware of the response of those who were there at the meeting.

I have also insisted on the importance which this bill has for many people in Canada, but especially in the province of Quebec, in the Montreal area.

One of the questions asked by the Gallup Institute poll was the following: Do you agree with the position of the Senators and should they continue to debate? 49.4 per cent of the Quebec people agreed. The other question was: Do you feel that the bill should be adopted as it is? Forty per cent of the people said yes.

If we examine carefully the public opinion poll replies as such, I do not think it can be said that we are blamed by the Quebec people. They are not saying that the Senate has made a mistake and was wrong when it decided to study this bill. The poll results which I have just received this afternoon are an indication of what the Quebec people think.

Senator Flynn: This is absolutely irrelevant.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before we proceed with the motion, I have a point of order. Some honourable senators have mentioned the fact that the general rule—and we do not want to be slaves to Beauchesne—is that the proceedings of a committee may not be referred to in debate before they have been laid upon the table. The preferred procedure is not to comment on committee proceedings before they are laid on the table. We had a bit of an illustration of that today when we had these various versions of what took place before the committee. I am not blaming either side. Nor am I blaming Senator Roblin, Senator Stewart or other senators for continuing on with it, because, once we got that far with it, of course, no one wanted to refrain from putting the record straight as they saw it. However, I think we should make sure that this is not considered a precedent for breaking with what I think is basically a good practice, and that is to refrain from commenting upon proceedings before they are laid on the table.

• (1720)

Senator Flynn: I do not agree that the position taken by Senator Frith should be accepted as the one that we should follow. Senator Frith, you are not asking the Chair to rule—

Senator Frith: No, I am not.

Senator Flynn: —and I do not agree that we must necessarily accept your point.

Senator Frith: It depends on what you mean by my point. If you think my point was that I was making a ruling, that is not so. I am saying that I think we have had an illustration today in part of our debate of why it is undesirable to comment on committee proceedings in debate before they are laid on the table.

We are now all aware that Senator Flynn takes the opposite view; he thinks it is a good practice to comment. All I am saying is that I hope that by having done so today we are not making it a precedent that it is in order to do so any more than we thought that the decision as to whether rule 47 applied was a precedent one way or the other. That is all I wanted to put on the record.

Now that I know that there are some senators who think it is a correct practice to do it, I hope we are making it clear that this is not a precedent one way or the other.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend would have done me justice if, when making reference to me, he had observed that I was replying to statements that had been made about my conduct.

Senator Frith: I did exactly that.

Senator Roblin: No, I was listening on the television; I heard it very clearly. I do not blame Senator Stewart for entering the debate as he did because he was following me. However, I want to make it clear—

Senator Frith: I did not say that. I said that I did not blame Senator Roblin—there is only one Roblin in this house, and it was you to whom I referred—or Senator Stewart.

Senator Roblin: I think it unfortunate that my friend did not give the whole story as I did when I made my remarks with respect to the matter. Furthermore, I reserve my position to disagree with my honourable friend at any time.

Senator Flynn: I want to make a point that the nature of the motion necessarily invites a reference to the decisions made by the committee.

Senator Roblin: Of course it does.

Senator Flynn: It is relevant, and it has to be accepted under those circumstances.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cogger:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., concerning amendments to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, together with the Message from the House of Commons dated August 31, 1987, on the same subject, be instructed to report the same to the Senate no later than Wednesday, 23rd September, 1987.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say “yea”?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say “nay”?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

Motion of Senator Kelly negatived on the following division:

THE SENATE

DELAY IN COMMENCING SITTINGS

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I should like to rise on a point of order. For some considerable time now the Senate bell has started ringing at two o'clock, and equally for some considerable time we have not commenced our proceedings until at least ten past two. Is there any valid reason why this chamber should always act in that way? It seems to show a certain lack of attention.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Molson: I am not quite sure to whom I should address the question, but may I ask the chamber why this is happening?

THE HONOURABLE FREDERICK WILLIAM ROWE

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM THE SENATE

As this may be the last opportunity that I will have to do so in his presence, I should like, on behalf of the government, to bid him farewell and to acknowledge with gratitude not only his 16 years of exemplary service to the Senate but also his 56 years of devoted service to his fellow citizens. It was in 1931—before he had reached the age of 20—that Senator Rowe began as a teacher in Newfoundland and went on to be a high school principal and supervising inspector. He interrupted that career for further studies at university. He took a B.A. at Mount Allison and a Bachelor of Pedagogy at the University of Toronto, as well as a doctorate in that subject from the latter university.

From teaching he went into the Newfoundland public service as its first Deputy Minister of Public Welfare, and from the public service into politics, where he won five elections to the Newfoundland House of Assembly and served in eight portfolios: Mines and Resources, Public Welfare, Education, Highways, Finance, Community and Social Development, Labrador Affairs, President of the Council, and Deputy Premier under the premierships of Mr. Smallwood.

Somehow he also found time to lecture, to give radio talks, to write books—seven of them—to bring up a most remarkable family, and to pick up some awards and honours, not surprisingly, such as an honorary doctorate from Memorial University of Newfoundland.

Since 1971 he has brought to the Senate all of that training and experience, that deep commitment to Newfoundland and to Canada, and an inquiring mind to his duties in committee and in this chamber. I have had the pleasure of serving with him on several committees, notably Foreign Affairs, and I have travelled with him. He is a most agreeable companion and always a hard working and dedicated colleague.

Honourable senators, since Confederation—and in this context when I speak of “Confederation”, I mean 1949—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The real Confederation!

Senator Murray: As Senator Doody reminds me, the real Confederation. Since Confederation, Newfoundland has sent many eminent people to this chamber.

I am reminded that Senator Rowe was vice-president of the Confederate Association of Newfoundland during 1947 and 1948. All his life he has done the old colony very proud. Since 1971 he has also done the Senate, Parliament and Canada very proud.

On behalf of my colleagues in this place and on behalf of the government, in saluting his excellent contribution to Parliament and the country, I am pleased to wish him continued good health and a long and happy retirement.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it gives me great pleasure to second the remarks made by Senator Murray about our retiring colleague, Senator Rowe. On a previous occasion, in referring to Senator Rowe's retirement, I had the opportunity to draw attention to his maiden speech in the Senate, after he arrived in Ottawa in 1971. In fact, he made his maiden speech in March 1972. Obviously, the inquiring mind to which Senator Murray referred was also an imaginative and progressive mind, because, in his maiden speech to the Senate, Senator Rowe called for the legalization of marijuana. He is still ahead of his time, because that progressive action has not yet been taken. In addition, he suggested that consideration be given to supplying hard drugs, where such action is necessary, “in order to protect the public from the insane depredation of those who are addicted to hard drugs.” So Senator Rowe's interests were quite pertinent, but included matters apart from drugs, such as the penal system, the abuses of the free enterprise system by both labour and big business, and the importance of a bilingual Canada. He also drew attention to the problems of the youth of Canada as exhibited at that time by considerable student unrest throughout the country. So our friend Fred launched his career in the Senate in a stimulating way and drew to the attention of his colleagues at that time the many problems that existed.

While it is true that he has had a distinguished career as a member of the House of Assembly and a minister of the government in Newfoundland and as a member of the Senate, all of which are certainly creditable achievements, my admiration for Fred Rowe is based more on his career as an author than as a politician. Most of us, I believe, would like to add to our credit the fact that each of us had authored seven important books. That is Fred's achievement. As Senator Murray mentioned, he wrote several books, including History of Education in Newfoundland in 1952, The Development of Education in Newfoundland in 1964, Education and Culture in Newfoundland in 1976, Extinction: The Beothuks of Newfoundland in 1977, and A History of Newfoundland and Labrador in 1980. His most recent work was published in 1984 and is entitled The Smallwood Era. Certainly, it was a most welcome addition to our political literature and was described by another colleague of ours, Senator Hicks, as "one of the most interesting political commentaries published in Canada in our generation."

Therefore, I salute Fred Rowe for his work as an author. I am delighted to know that his publisher, McGraw-Hill, has asked him to continue his writing career and has undertaken to publish his memoirs, which Fred tells us will be commenced as soon as he has the opportunity to take up that work following his retirement from the Senate.

I am delighted to be able to make these comments of appreciation to Senator Rowe, both on my own behalf and on behalf of all of us, and to wish him much success and happiness, and particularly continued success as a literary figure in our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I would like to join the honourable senators who have spoken before me in paying tribute to my colleague and lifetime friend, Senator Fred Rowe. It is not often that I find myself agreeing with the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but this time I am most happy to do so.

Both the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition are difficult acts to follow. Most of the things I had to say have already been said, but I would just like to comment briefly on two points. First, Senator Rowe's doctorate was an earned doctorate, it was not an honorary doctorate. I do not know how many people were aware of that, but I assure you that that is the case.

As Senator MacEachen mentioned, one of Senator Rowe's early books, Education in Newfoundland, was not only a book about education in Newfoundland, it was a mini-history of Newfoundland. I have given that particular volume to many people in many parts of the world and they have appreciated receiving it. As I said, it is a mini-history of Newfoundland.

As has already been mentioned, Senator Rowe served in many portfolios in the Smallwood Liberal government of Newfoundland and acquitted himself well in all of them.

In conclusion, let me say this to Fred and his wife Edith: I wish them many more years to enjoy travelling the world. Fred is quite a world traveller and an historian of note, and I wish him well in all of his future endeavours.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, my forefathers came from that great place, Newfoundland, and I had the privilege of travelling to the place of their birth with none other than the Honourable Fred W. Rowe and his good wife. We travelled down to Lamaline, that very prosperous part of the province of Newfoundland and Labrador. I think it behooves me at this time to say a few words.

Fred and I got started in provincial politics at approximately the same time in the early 1950s and came to the Senate at approximately the same time in 1971. Fred got his doctorate at Toronto and I got my doctor's degree from Dalhousie. The only difference between us is that he got his with honours and I got mine by the skin of my teeth!

Senator Hicks: Dalhousie's pretty tough!

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I first met Fred Rowe in 1955 when I was Minister of Health for the province of Prince Edward Island. I went to St. John's, Newfoundland, on "The Bullet", after landing in Gander because Torbay was fogged in. Because there was no TransCanada Highway in Newfoundland at that time, I had to take the train, and it was so crowded that I had to stand. Because of that I got off the train at Clarenville and took a taxi from there to St. John's. At that time I was scheduled to meet with the Honourable S.J. Hefferton, the then Minister of Health for the province of Newfoundland. I also met with the Honourable Premier Smallwood, who took me up to the executive chambers to meet the Honourable Fred Rowe. That was the first time I had met the Honourable Fred.

● (1410)

The next time I met the Honourable Fred Rowe was in 1966 when I was Minister of Welfare. I went to Newfoundland to meet with the Honourable Miles Murray, the then Minister of Welfare for the province of Newfoundland. On that occasion Premier Smallwood again took me up to meet with the Honourable Fred. It seemed to me that if someone wanted advice in Newfoundland, they had to see the Honourable Fred Rowe.

The Honourable Fred Rowe ran in many ridings. Any time the Liberals wanted to win a riding they simply asked the Honourable Fred Rowe to run in that riding and he would win the seat for the government, whether that was in Labrador from 1952 to 1956, or White Bay South from 1956 to 1966, or Grand Banks from 1966 to 1971.

The Honourable Fred Rowe held many portfolios. He was Minister of Resources, Minister of Public Works, Minister of Education, Minister of Highways, Minister of Finance, Minister of Communications, Minister of Community and Social Development, Minister of Labrador Affairs, President of the Executive Council, and Deputy Premier of Newfoundland.

The Honourable Fred Rowe was partly responsible for the great Churchill Falls development. He was in on the ground floor of the planning of that development. He was also chairman of the "Come Home Year" committee in 1966, when all Newfoundlanders were invited home to Newfoundland, and many Newfoundlanders did go home. That was one of the greatest success stories of the province. The tourism department still uses promotions that were devised by that committee.

The Honourable Fred Rowe has also distinguished himself in the educational field. He was principal of the largest high school in Newfoundland, Curtis Memorial High School. He received an honorary degree from his university. He received many awards for his endeavours in the heritage field and many literary awards. He has written many books.

Honourable senators will recall that during the debate last year on the fisheries dispute between Canada and France regarding fishing rights off Saint Pierre and Miquelon, we looked to the Honourable Fred to give us the history of those fishing rights.

The Honourable Fred Rowe, although he will reach the age of 75 on September 28, is still young at heart. He still has young ideas. In many ways he is ahead of his time. He has been ahead of his time in some of his views, and he has been ahead of his time in leadership in Newfoundland. Sometimes I regret that he did not have the opportunity to follow the great Joey Smallwood and become Premier of Newfoundland, even if that were only for four years. If that were the case, he could have shown everyone what he could do with the great province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Honourable senators, while Senator Rowe was a member of the federal Parliament, two of his sons were members of the Newfoundland Legislative Assembly. One of his sons became the leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland. One of his sons is a Rhodes Scholar, and both sons have made a name for themselves in their native province as well as in the rest of Canada.

Fred Rowe is the proud father of four wonderful boys and has a wonderful wife. To his good wife, Edie, and to his family, I wish them much happiness, good health and many, many, more years to give the rest of us an opportunity to glean from his knowledge and experience. I hope that we have not heard the last from Fred Rowe.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to take a moment of your time to endorse the comments that have been made by our colleagues here in the chamber in tribute to Senator Rowe. I do not take your time to repeat the well deserved accolades that have been heaped on Senator Rowe today but to endorse those comments that have been made.

Senator Rowe is well recognized as an educator, a civil servant, a politician, as a cabinet minister and as an author, as Senator MacEachen has so properly pointed out. We in Newfoundland remember him best for his contribution to education. His work in that field will be long remembered in the province. Everyone who remembers the Smallwood era thinks most kindly of the contributions that were made to the basic services that were so lacking in our province at the time: health, roads and education. When one thinks of education in Newfoundland one thinks immediately of Fred Rowe. I would like to thank him for the contribution that he made in that area and continues to make in our province.

With regard to the many books that he has written—and I have read most of them—the one that we in the province are most indebted to him for is his history of the Beothuks, the indigenous Indian tribe in our province. He took it on himself, quite laudably, to debunk the myth of the extermination of the indigenous people by the white settlers. It has long been held that this was a deliberate act of genocide by the white settlers in Newfoundland, and Senator Rowe has convincingly exposed this myth to be just that. We are all indebted to him for it.

I look forward to reading his latest project—his memoirs. So anyone who is congratulating and wishing him well on his retirement is premature, because he has no intention of retiring, he is just diverting his efforts into an area that he knows so well, the field of literature.

So, in his new endeavours, I wish him all the best; and to his wife and family I wish all the very best, with many years of good health and more contributions to the province and to the country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few words to what my colleagues have already said concerning Senator Fred Rowe. I must say that in the years that I have been here I have enjoyed very much travelling back and forth to Newfoundland with him. We have had occasion to look after each other on numerous occasions for one reason or another. Senator Fred has been a great help to me. I must say that in these travels back and forth I have got to know him quite well and have come to know and understand his vast experience and his various accomplishments. I would like to assure the previous speakers that everything you have said is correct. It is correct because I have had it on the best authority—from the subject himself!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Lewis: I would like to say, Senator Fred, that I will miss you here and in my travels back and forth to Newfoundland. I look forward to Senator Rowe's further endeavours in his writing. I want to wish him, Mrs. Rowe and their family the best of everything.

• (1420)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I am very glad that I can look down the row of seats here and see that Senator Rowe is still alive, because I have seldom heard such a magnificent and, I must admit, well-deserved series of accolades paid to anyone, particularly during his lifetime. I do not want to try to add to them, because I think most of the important things that I know about Fred Rowe have already been said.

During most of the several years that I was a minister in Nova Scotia, Senator Rowe—Fred Rowe as he then was—was a minister in Newfoundland, occupying the various portfolios which have been referred to. At one time each of us was the Minister of Education for our respective provinces and we had occasion to meet and do business with one another on behalf of our respective governments at that time.

I, like Senator MacEachen, think that perhaps the most remarkable thing about Fred Rowe is that, in addition to his full-time occupation as a public servant in various capacities for the long period of time which has been mentioned this afternoon, he managed to write no fewer than seven scholarly works having to do with the history, culture and, particularly, the subject of education in Newfoundland. Senator Rowe has chided me on more than one occasion because I have not taken up my pen and written anything about my own political experiences in Nova Scotia. Now that Senator Rowe is leaving the Senate, I suppose that I will no longer be chided. However, I would not be surprised if he kept up the good work, and perhaps—I am not promising anything—it may have some results.

In any event, Senator Rowe's career has truly been a remarkable one. He is the sort of Canadian who endears this country to Canadians from every province. His interest in his own province of Newfoundland is, of course, legendary, and he has never missed an opportunity to speak on behalf of that province. At the same time, there is no question that he is a great Newfoundlander who has also become a great Canadian.

I join all those others who have spoken in wishing him and his family many happy and successful and, insofar as Fred Rowe is concerned, I am sure, productive years on his retirement from this particular phase of his career.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ethel Cochrane: Honourable senators, I rise, with some regret, to bid farewell to one of our colleagues from Newfoundland, the Honourable Senator Rowe, who is retiring from this chamber after many years of service to his people, his province and his nation—Senator Rowe being the oldest senator from Newfoundland, and I being the youngest.

Like myself, Senator Rowe began his career as an educator, devoting himself to teaching the children of Newfoundland. He has written extensively about education in Newfoundland and about the history of the province. He served his province in public life for three years as Deputy Minister of Public Welfare before spending 19 years in the legislature, holding several cabinet portfolios including those of Minister of Education and Deputy Premier.

Since 1971 our colleague has continued his service to his province and the nation as a representative of Newfoundland in this chamber.

Let us wish him well in his retirement and hope that his replacement will prove as able and worthy of respect as Senator Rowe.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I, too, would like to join all honourable senators who have preceded me in saying a few words on this occasion, because I have very much in common with Senator Rowe. We both became Canadians at about the same time. I came to Canada in 1948 and he came to Canada in 1949. We both came to Canada through the front door as landed immigrants. When I was first appointed to the Senate, Senator Rowe was one of the friendliest senators I met. He gave me encouragement and advice. Since that time, over the past ten years, I have served on committees and gone on parliamentary delegations with him. I have benefited a great deal from my association with him.

Senator Rowe has written several books, to which both Senator MacEachen and Senator Hicks have referred. I wish to make a comment about one book he wrote in 1967, The History of Newfoundland. Everybody knows that Senator Rowe is a highly educated man. I will also add that he is articulate, literate and erudite. But no one is perfect. Senator Rowe is among those who are not perfect, because in that book he made a spelling mistake. He wrote that a man landed in Cape Bonavista, and he spelled the name of that man J-O-H-N C-A-B-O-T instead of spelling it G-I-O-V-A-N-N-I C-A-B-O-T-O, Giovanni Caboto.

Honourable senators, I wish Senator Rowe a happy retirement.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, this has been one of the most enjoyable half hours of my life. Where have you all been for the past 16 years? Let me first thank all those who have had something to say about me today and those who have, in one way or another, extended their good wishes in recent days and weeks. It is a pleasure mixed with some sadness, of course, to sever, to some degree, one's relationship with one's fellow men and women. However, my wife and I do have the satisfaction, although we did not move to Ottawa permanently, to have spent a great deal of time here. We made many friends, indeed, in Ottawa. I want to express to them my thanks and my good wishes.

Senator Bonnell mentioned that when we came here in December of 1971 there were arguments in this chamber about this, that and the other thing. I referred to a few of those in my maiden speech. He left out this, though, and I think it is worth noting, that the principal item in the minds of senators was reform of the Senate. Sixteen years ago it was under discussion, and it is still under discussion.

Senator Stanbury: It was in 1871, too!

Senator Rowe: That is quite true. My friend, Senator Stanbury, has reminded me that reform of the Senate has been a live issue right from the time of its inception.

Honourable senators, reference has been made to some of my books and to the fact that I am in the process of writing another. I mention this now because it may be of particular interest to my colleagues here and perhaps to people outside the Senate as well. Several months ago my publishers, McGraw-Hill Ryerson, to whom I would take off my hat any day, wrote me and asked if I would be prepared to give them the right to publish my memoirs. I was very pleased, of course, and told them I would. Following upon that, yesterday the agreement arrived for me to sign, authorizing me to write, on behalf of McGraw-Hill Ryerson, my memoirs; and I hope that within the next 12 months or so the book will be available.

● (1430)

I am not in the book-selling trade, but one reason for my mentioning this—and I know that a lot of people are interested in this—is that I plan to incorporate in it at least one chapter on the Senate. I have not yet started on that chapter, but I believe it is time that I and other Canadians devoted more time to the history and background of this institution.

I do not need to tell honourable senators that over the years many people who have been talking about the Senate have done so from ignorance. They have not known what they were talking about. I will not go into that now, but I will mention it in my book, because I consider it important that my views, and those of many honourable senators and of many others outside the Senate, should be made known.

I have regarded my appointment here as something of an honour, and in one way or another I have tried to make some contribution to the work of the Senate. I felt that I could not do better—and I have no regrets about this—than to devote as much of my spare time as I could to writing another book which would serve, I hope, to make Newfoundland better known, or known to a greater extent, than has been the case in the past. Therefore, I make no apology for stating now that in my new book, which I hope will be published sometime in the coming year, I will be able to present to the Canadian reading public a book which, among other things, will contain some kind of an analysis of the Senate and related matters.

When making some notes the other evening I followed up on something that I had commenced at a reception given a few weeks ago for Senator John Godfrey and myself. I went over those notes last evening, and I feel impelled to say that I have always felt proud—in saying this I exclude myself—of Newfoundland's reputation in this chamber. We have nothing to be ashamed of. As a Newfoundlander I feel very proud of that. Our history goes back beyond Senator Petten to his father, who sat in this chamber for a number of years. It goes back to people such as Major Sandy Baird. Some honourable senators will remember him. Not only was he a distinguished soldier but he was also a scholar in many ways.

Speaking of individuals—I know that in doing so one lays oneself open to invidious charges; but I will take a chance—I have had the pleasure and honour, while in the Senate, of meeting a number of people. One of the first persons I met when I was first appointed to the Senate was Senator Jacques Flynn. By chance my wife and I, with Senator Flynn and his wife, went to Rome together, and I believe that is an episode which none of us will forget.

[Senator Rowe.]

I am sure that honourable senators would expect me to deal first with Newfoundland. However, I should like to bring in the whole of Canada in saying a few words about the Senate. Sometimes I want to laugh, and sometimes cry—and perhaps sometimes curse—when I read some of the trivia and drivel that is written about the Senate.

Honourable senators, for 27 years a man may be the premier of a great Canadian province, and whenever he opens his mouth the province, the nation and, indeed, the world listens. What is it that brings about a transformation almost overnight when he is appointed to the Senate? He becomes a non-entity. You may say, "Could that happen?" Well, it did happen. It is happening here all the time. It happened in the next office to mine up on the fifth floor of the Senate, which was then occupied by Senator Manning.

Senator Manning had been premier of Alberta for 27 years; yet, when he ceased to be premier he ceased to be almost anything. It is no use anyone telling me that it did not rub him the wrong way, because I am sure it did. I am sure it still does. No matter how important the speech was that he wrote in that room on the fifth floor, when he delivered it in the Senate the chances were that no one saw any reference to it anywhere. They did not do that when he was active in politics; then why did they do it when he was out of active politics? A man who has been premier of a province for 27 years does not lose overnight his capacity to contribute to the country; yet, that is what one could infer from this.

However, I will be dealing with that a little later. I was doing a little cogitating last night. I could mention former premiers who have been appointed to the Senate. I have mentioned Senator Manning. There was also Senator G.I. Smith. We have with us Senator Hicks, Senator Roblin and Senator Robichaud. There was also Senator Harold Connolly. Those senators did not cease being men of ability and integrity overnight. Yet one would get that impression if one relied on the writing of some columnists or, I regret to say, even some newspaper editors.

The fact of the matter is that the Senate, this institution, this body, has accepted within its ranks some of Canada's leading men. That did not happen overnight. The Right Honourable Arthur Meighen was a distinguished member of this body, and others followed him. In the field of medicine we have had in this chamber some of Canada's most distinguished medical practitioners and specialists. I could mention the names of six people. We have already heard today from Senator Bonnell. We had with us Senator Joe Sullivan, and we now have with us Senator Haidasz, Senator David, Senator McGrand—I regret to say that I have not seen him here recently—and Senator Barootes.

● (1440)

Scholars: Eugene Forsey, a man whose name is a household word in Newfoundland for very good reason—he is a Newfoundlander; Senator Maurice Lamontagne, who used to sit where Senator Hicks now sits; Senator Yuzyk and Senator Cameron. These men were distinguished Canadian scholars, but, perhaps with the exception of Senator Forsey, not many Canadians knew that they were anything.

Senators from the field of business: I am not a businessman, but, believe me, I know the value of businessmen and businesswomen to Canada. I jotted down five or six names. They include Senator Sidney Buckwold, Senator Doug Everett, Senator Molson, my old friend—though I have not seen him for some years now—Senator Paterson, who used to sit near where I used to sit opposite. There is also Senator Bourget. Younger senators may not remember him, but he was one of the leading businessmen of Canada. Senator Paul Desruisseaux is another one.

I could go on. For example, from the field of journalism we had Senator Grattan O'Leary, who was one of Canada's leading practitioners of that art. However, even Senator O'Leary received very little attention once he got to the Senate. Whose fault was that? I am sure it was not Grattan O'Leary's fault. Was it the fault of the people who spent so much time criticizing the Senate that they did not have time to read the speeches of such people as Senator Manning or any other senator?

I have taken up more time than I had anticipated. I have a plane to catch. However, I do hope that I will have a chance to meet many of you again—and I am sure that I will as time goes on. I thank you all for the more than generous comments made about me here today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO WINNING CANADIAN TEAM

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, my remarks will be brief but, I think, in keeping with the mood here this afternoon, which seems to be one of congratulations and good wishes.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, last night, like millions of other Canadians, I spent several hours in front of the television. I became increasingly proud of being a Canadian as the third period went on.

Today, I would like to move, seconded by Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), that the Honourable the Speaker transmit to the management and members of Team Canada the sincere congratulations and best wishes of the Senate for their remarkable victory last night, which gave them the 1987 Canada Cup.

[English]

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker *pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

16 September 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that The Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 16th day of September, 1987, at 4.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. Before Senator Petten leaves the chamber, I want to say to him that my remark with regard to his holding his seat on an hereditary basis was addressed entirely to merit, which he obviously inherited from his father.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, yesterday I gave notice of a motion, and, in view of the time and the excellent feeling that exists in the chamber, I wonder if it would be appropriate to interrupt the proceedings to ask your permission for the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to sit now, at 3 o'clock.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Will you be dealing with Bill C-22?

Senator Sinclair: Not today.

Senator Flynn: Tomorrow?

Senator Steuart: Very soon!

Senator Bazin: Expeditiously?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Sinclair:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987 CROP YEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask the Leader of the Government a question that I have asked him a number of times before. He is aware that grain producers in western Canada are suffering from a severe reduction in price on that commodity in the international market which is having consequences on their financial well-being. I wonder if the leader can advise us today whether a deficiency payment is under active consideration by the government. If he is unable to advise us that such is the case, would he undertake to inquire of the Minister of Agriculture when some relief can be expected for the grain producers who are in this situation, bearing in mind that we are nearing the completion of the harvest season for 1987 in some areas and, indeed, the completion of all harvest operations in all areas of western Canada?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, would the minister give an undertaking that he will inquire of the Minister of Agriculture as to what options the government is considering to give some hope to the producers in western Canada who are facing a disastrous situation, and as to when they can expect some relief? I did not ask the leader to make an announcement today. I know that the government follows a certain procedure in these matters, and I would expect it to do so in this case, that being through the Minister of Agriculture. However, these people need some hope, and so far it has not been forthcoming.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am aware of the options that are being considered by the government, but I do not think that it is useful at this time to go into any detail on the matter. I shall inquire of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to see what further information, if any, can be communicated to the honourable senator on the matter at this time.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN TO PORT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the Port of Churchill. This week an article appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press entitled: "The Port Seeks Grain Supply Increase".

Honourable senators, from past experience we all know that the Port of Churchill can make a fair profit by handling 600,000 tonnes of grain per year. This year, although the railroads have committed themselves to 3,000 cars per week, this goal has not yet been reached. In fact, only an average of approximately 650 cars per week have been arriving.

Honourable senators, as you know, this year there is a lot of grain and many of the farmers want to get rid of their grain. The Port of Churchill is wide open. If it were possible to receive sufficient grain, the port is capable of shipping 750,000 tonnes this year, thereby making a sizeable profit. In fact, there are ships waiting at the Port of Churchill for grain right at the moment.

Perhaps if the railroads were encouraged to supply more cars—in fact, if they were able to supply 1,200 cars per week from now to the end of October—the Port of Churchill would be able to ship more than 700,000 tonnes of grain, which would result in a sizeable profit for the town of Churchill and for the Government of Canada, as well as for the farmers in western Canada.

Therefore, my question is: Could the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate make representations to his colleague in the cabinet, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, to encourage the railroad to provide more cars so that western farmers can ship their grain—even though it is at a low price—and so that we can provide Churchill with the amount of grain that they would like to handle in order to show a profit, which they do not get a chance to do very often? If we could have the cooperation of everyone involved, I am sure it would result in a great achievement, benefiting all of us in the west.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall convey my friend's representations to the Honourable Charles Mayer. I shall also ask my colleague whether he would care to comment, for the benefit of the Senate, on the statements made by Senator Guay this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

ESTABLISHMENT OF SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS NETWORK

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would be so kind as to convey our congratulations to his party and to his government for setting up a communications network by satellite in order to show themselves to the people of Canada. I hope they make sure that they invite to appear on that satellite such people as Mr. Grisé, Chairman of the Quebec Caucus, who stated that Liberals are a band of traitors. It is this kind of language that I am very grateful for. It will help us defeat the government at the next election.

Senator Flynn: What is the question?

Senator Gigantès: The question was whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate would kindly convey my thanks to his government for setting up this network.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

INCIDENCE OF ACCIDENTS ON MIXED-USE PATHWAYS IN OTTAWA

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which perhaps he could convey to the proper authorities. I would be interested in finding out from the minister responsible for the National Capital Commission what kinds of accidents take place between cyclists and pedestrians and between cyclists and other cyclists on the National Capital Commission mixed-use pathways. If it is possible for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to obtain that information, I would appreciate having the statistics for the last three years.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): If I may, I would suggest to Senator Stollery that he try to draft a question with somewhat more precision, indicating what statistics he is looking for, and put it on the order paper. We will then undertake to obtain that information for him as soon as possible. At the moment it is a little unclear as to what exactly he is looking for.

Senator Stollery: Honourable senators, I will certainly do that. The reason I raised the matter at oral Question Period is because that information is actually quite difficult to obtain from the National Capital Commission. What I am looking for are the statistics of accidents between cyclists and pedestrians and between cyclists and cyclists on the National Capital Commission mixed-use pathways around the Ottawa region. I think that is fairly specific. However, I will give the Leader of the Government in the Senate a written question, but would advise him that, so far, the National Capital Commission has been reluctant to provide those statistics, and that is the reason for my question in the chamber here today.

POTATO INDUSTRY—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK—POTATO STABILIZATION PAYMENTS FOR 1986 CROP YEAR

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate can inform me whether the government is considering paying a retroactive subsidy to the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick for the crop year 1986 in order to compensate farmers for their tremendous loss due to the low prices paid for potatoes produced in those two provinces in that year.

Honourable senators will recall that before the provincial election in Saskatchewan a wheat subsidy was paid. Since we have a provincial election pending in New Brunswick, the announcement of such a payment would aid the premier in being re-elected and, at the same time, it would help the farmers of Prince Edward Island to cope with their bankruptcies.

Senator Bonnell: I would ask the honourable leader whether the government is giving consideration to that question, and, if so, can we expect an answer soon?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot be more precise than I have been. The matter is under consideration by the government at the present time.

My honourable friend will appreciate that the potato question is not a matter related solely to Prince Edward Island, although I concede that it is very important in his province, as it is in New Brunswick. It is a national question, and it is being considered in that context.

TRANSPORT

ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT LINK BETWEEN NEW BRUNSWICK AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I thank the honourable leader for his remarks. However, I have another question respecting an altogether different matter. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me if the Government of Canada has made a decision with respect to a permanent link between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island so that, in the near future, tenders from the general public might be called for that work?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I would advise the honourable senator that that matter is still under consideration by the government.

Senator Bonnell: Is the honourable leader telling me that no decision has yet been made?

Senator Murray: As of 24 hours ago no decision had been made, and I am not aware that one has been made in the interim.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise me whether the environmental report in relation to that project has been returned to the government, and, if so, whether that report is satisfactory in that there is no detrimental impact on the environment of either Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick, and, further, that there is no detrimental impact on the fisheries or oceans?

Senator Murray: I shall have to make inquiries, honourable senators.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION ON MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Usually, when ministers make announcements respecting the membership of boards, commissions, et cetera, senators receive on their desks a list of those who have been appointed, together with their qualifications, their background, et cetera.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate why it is that, in the case of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, senators are forced to rely on the newspapers to find out who are the members who have been appointed to that board and their backgrounds. It would be useful if those of us who are from that region could be notified and given that kind of information. We are in a position to provide, in a small way, some assistance to those who are appointed to an agency of that nature. I have searched, my secretary has searched, and I have inquired. I did make a call to the minister's office, but that information apparently was not available.

● (1500)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, in keeping with the decentralized nature of this agency, the announcement in question was made several weeks ago in Moncton, where the headquarters of the agency are located. I very much regret if, in doing that, honourable senators, and parliamentarians generally, were not sent copies of the news release in question. I will see that that is done immediately. I will have a copy sent by hand to my honourable colleague's office.

Senator Muir: I thank the leader for that.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Balfour, for the second reading of the Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Grafstein).

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, Bill C-84, respecting curbs on refugees, goes to the heart of Canada, our image of ourselves, our vision for our future. Will the twentieth century yet belong to Canada? This legislation appears to say no! Is that good enough for us? Is it good enough for Canada? From our earliest history the idea of Canada was rooted in the belief that Canada was a refuge for the oppressed. First the French, then the Anglo-Saxons, and then the oppressed of the world, east and west, north and south, came to Canada, slipped through our borders or were washed up on our shores, sharing one common dream—a better, freer life, new opportunities for themselves and their families. Aside from our fellow Senators Marchand, Watts and Adams, who are enriched with their aboriginal heritage, and who, by the way, graciously share the concerns of many on this side of the house, is there a senator in this chamber who is not an immigrant or a refugee, or a descendant of an immigrant or a refugee? Indeed, earlier today I asked my leader in the Senate, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, whether he could tell me if his roots were refugee or immigrant. He could not tell me that, but he said he believed they were immigrant. Honourable senators, Canada is a nation of immigrants. Do we not, honourable senators, share a common definition of national interest that we can build a better future in Canada by expanding our diverse, rich, humane immigrant foundation?

Let us for a moment look at the present demographic profile of Canada: Our birthrate is stagnant, our population is aging, yet our economic expectations continue to rise. We can now foresee that in the decade ahead our growth curve is flattening and it may even fall. So, the question we should ask ourselves in our own self-interest is not how many refugees we can keep out but how many refugees can Canada safely absorb and how quickly. Our humanitarian policy and our national interest converge on this question. Paul Johnson, the noted historian, in his splendid History of the Modern World traced the displacement factor in the absorption of immigrants and refugees, which did not cost society but, in fact, were sources of new growth, engines of growth. Johnson demonstrated that those displaced who came to the new world work harder, produce more to catch up, create more wealth, create new jobs, and in that sense they accelerate our entire economic growth pattern. In Canada we understand this; Canada has been enriched by those who have been displaced and who have come to our shores. Metro Toronto, the city I so proudly represent, is living proof of that economic thesis.

So, honourable senators, when we turn to Bill C-84, what do we find? First, let me deal with the preliminary issue that brought Parliament back this summer. Is there an emergency? Is there a national urgency? Earlier this month, when I asked Senator Murray what the basis was for this emergency, we were told that it was not the 174 boat people; it was loopholes in our immigration laws that caused the national emergency. Yesterday we heard from Senator MacDonald, on behalf of the government, on second reading of this bill, that the refugee crest had passed. He told us that earlier this year over 4,000 refugee applications had been made on a monthly basis, and now this has declined by 50 per cent to 2,000 per month. But, honourable senators, are these the facts? The government was informed on September 9 by the 47th Fast Track Monitoring Report, signed by Ralph Girard, Co-ordinator of the Refugee Determination Task Force of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, that refugee claims had dried up to 500 refugee claimants a month, which is way below normal.

It now appears, honourable senators, that we are not even achieving our minimum immigration quotas. The crisis that we have now is that we do not have enough immigrants. Immigration officers are now seeking immigrants to fill quotas from certain countries. Therefore, I ask Honourable Senator Macdonald and the government, what emergency? What crisis? Is this a hoax that feeds on the fears of Canadians instead of fulfilling the dreams of Canadians? Therefore, it appears that if there is not presently an emergency, if there ever was one, we have dramatic legislation that exceeds in scope even the government's own concerns.

Honourable senators, we all know that refugee surges are not new. We have had refugee surges in the past; in the 1940s from Europe, in the late 1950s, in the 1960s, in the 1970s and in the 1980s, Hungarians, Czechoslovakians, Vietnamese and South Americans came to Canada, yet there is no public comparable statistical evidence to support the argument that the recent surges—which have now passed—in the number of refugees entering Canada are any greater than the surges of the past.

But the Canadian public is concerned about abuse. The Canadian public is concerned about real problems, not apparent problems. If there is a real problem, the problem is the backlog in the immigrant/refugee system. Solve it. Improve the efficiency of the system. Rather than that, the government chose to come forward, not solving the problem but keeping the problem intact with a new, long drawn out and cumbersome refugee process.

One wonders, honourable senators, when one examines the bill, in fairness and charity, whether or not there is a different agenda from that stated by the government.

Does this bill modernize the system, or do the retrograde measures increase the complexity and inflate the problems? In our present system, the way a refugee's claim is made, one party hears the claim, a second party advises on the claim, and a third party decides on the claim. What three people can do over three, four, five or six months one person could do in weeks. Yet, the present system, as one expert has pointed out to me, has not been improved. The present system invites abuse, invites delay, invites emergencies, yet there has been no solution to that fundamental problem. Naturally, the queue grows longer as the system backs up.

The government could very easily improve the process without dehumanizing it. This bill, even if one accepts the good faith of the government, exceeds the reach of the government under our Constitution. A person may be detained for up to 28 days if the department cannot identify that person. Many refugees travel without travel documentation. Documents are destroyed to avoid the refugee's return to his country of origin or to an intermediate country that was the source of demeaning living conditions, discriminatory refugee determination process or, indeed, denial of protection. This bill now allows detention for 28 days—without adequate review, and after 28 days it allows review only on the narrowest grounds, that the department is making reasonable efforts to identify the applicant.

Honourable senators will recall very well that in the report of the Commission of Inquiry into the RCMP, headed by Mr. Justice Macdonald, he recommended that the War Measures Act be amended to prohibit detention without charge beyond seven days. No detention beyond seven days! So, in cases of war, Mr. Justice Macdonald recommended that nobody should be detained beyond seven days. Yet, refugees can be detained for up to 28 days without an adequate inquiry. What type of standard are we establishing for ourselves? What type of message are we sending to the world? The U.N. Convention on Refugees requires that we, as signatories, not penalize refugees for their illegal entry or persons without authorization provided they came directly from a country where they were oppressed, and provided they present themselves forthwith to the government authorities.

• (1510)

That U.N. convention also demands of Canada that we not impose penalties on the movement of refugees because of their illegal entry to or their presence in Canada.

Beyond that, our Charter dictates that everyone has the right not to be arbitrarily detained, citizen or not. Yet the detention provisions say that persons are punishable for illegal entry. What it does is extend arbitrary powers which become invisible powers—very unfair and obviously not necessary. Our Charter of Rights is rooted in our deep belief in Magna Carta, which dictates against arbitrary detention. This prolonged detention process in itself is a countermeasure against the purpose of the bill. The one thing that is crystal clear about refugees is that they do arrive without proper documentation. Thus, the problem and the backlog will be exaggerated.

Does the bill ease the alleged crisis, or does the bill trigger a true crisis requiring a throwback to the period when countries had large detention centres? This bill is not only offensive in this respect, it is offensive to our international obligations. The U.N. Refugee Convention, to which we are a party, and the U.N. High Commissioner of Refugees, in an extraordinary letter to the Minister of Employment and Immigration on August 12 of this year, stated the following:

I have the honour to refer to an amendment to the Immigration Act, 1976 (Bill C-84) which the Government of Canada has most recently tabled in Parliament. My office fully understands the Canadian Government's preoccupation regarding abuses of procedures for the determination of refugee status and related problems. Certain provisions of the proposed legislation, however, give rise to serious concern inasmuch as lack of procedural safeguards could risk exposing bona fide asylum seekers and refugees to forceable return to territories where their lives or freedom would be threatened (refoulement).

He goes on to say:

This pertains in particular to Clause No. 8 of the Bill introducing a new section 91.1 in the Act relating to the authority to direct ships to leave or not to enter the internal waters of Canada or the territorial sea of Canada, apparently without examination of passengers' status. The principle of non-refoulement to which Canada fully adheres as a party to the 1951 U.N. Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1967 Protocol thereto enjoins any action on the part of states which may result in refoulement.

The letter goes on to talk of Canada's example in the world.

As you are no doubt aware the situations now being faced are not unique to Canada. Institution of the procedural safeguards referred to above would serve as an important example to the international community and help preserve the principle of asylum throughout the world.

In light of these considerations I am confident that all persons who seek Canada's protection will be afforded adequate procedural safeguards against refoulement and that these will be incorporated in the operative part of the Bill in question.

What did the U.N. High Commissioner of Refugees mean? To turn back boats is the most direct and obvious denial going to the heart of the refugee problem. The minister has said that no genuine refugees will be turned away, but how can he tell? Will we have portable refugee determination platforms on the high seas, or will he suspend those platforms from helicopters? If a boat is turned away, how will we ever know if that boat contained real refugees or not? Was not this exactly what Canada accused others of when the Vietnamese boat people fled their land? Canada protested when Thailand did precisely that, and now Canada, humane Canada, generous Canada, is proposing laws to do what we preached to others would be wrong. Is this leadership? Is this the international example Canada wishes to give?

Bill C-84 also undermines a key umbrella of protection given to those who are alleged security risks. Under the present law, before such persons are removed they are allowed to claim refugee status. If recognized as a refugee, this gives this person an umbrella protection while he is here against the very oppression from which he fled. But once this umbrella is removed and there is no access to the refugee process, this puts him in jeopardy of being removed to his country of origin despite his claims. It makes it easier to get rid of those people who may most need assistance. Is this the best way, honourable senators? Is this the best way to protect the oppressed? Surely there are better solutions. Surely there is a better mode of solving this particular problem.

But while the bill is offensive to so many laws and policies of Canada, the most offensive part which has caught the public attention is that part of Bill C-84 that criminalizes church groups, volunteer groups, immigrant aid societies and lawyers who aid a person without documentation to come to Canada, even if those Canadians do so without any type of recompense. Now, honourable senators, we have for the first time in Canada a law against the Good Samaritan. Is that the type of model that we are constructing for our children? Is that the model of the Statute of Liberty that we are trying to project in our own minds, to hold out that we are prepared to assist the oppressed, or is it a new model that we are projecting for our children and ourselves which says, "Butt out; mind your own business; slam the door; keep out of trouble"?

Last year, honourable senators, Canada received the Nansen International Award for its contribution and assistance to refugees. It was a magnificent gesture on behalf of the world about Canada's enlightened policy to refugees. Now this government, having accepted that award, wants to criminalize the process and the efforts of those Canadians within and without the government that made that very award possible.

For those so concerned about Canada-U.S. relations, let us take a look at American law. American law does not penalize a volunteer for helping a refugee enter America as long as that refugee reports to the immigration authorities. It is only the assistance in evading the law, in evading the authorities, that is illegal. Under Bill C-84, volunteering to report to the authorities may be a crime; and if a person comes without documents and is aided in coming to Canada an offence is committed.

In the United States, under even less draconian measures, under less stringent measures, refugees who have not reported to the authorities have triggered a new underground movement, a new freedom railway, a new sanctuary network. We know Canadians will reach out despite these Canadian draconian measures, if they are passed, because their conscience and their values demand that they help others in need. Honourable senators, do we want to create a new generation of conscientious objectors in this country over this measure? Surely not! So, the House of Commons has penalized the Canadian's basic instinct of charity. Is this the public will of Canada? And what a crime it is! Normally, in criminal law, an offence is committed and one is penalized for assisting others in the commission of an offence. But here there is no offence, only charitable assistance. Crime or otherwise, what a distortion of the criminal process, what a demeaning of our criminal justice system!

Honourable senators, I can go on at length; I can move from the unnatural to the bizarre, as one expert wrote me. The search provisions of Bill C-84 are more draconian than those under our drug laws. Should drug busts demand higher standards than refugee busts? Under the Narcotic Control Act, homes cannot be searched without a warrant. But this Bill C-84 allows private homes to be searched without a warrant not just for illegal immigrants but where there are reasonable grounds for an official to believe that evidence will be found of helping ten or more refugees. Under our Criminal Code, when documents are seized from a lawyer they must be sealed and taken to court and a judge determines whether or not the solicitor/client privilege applies. This Bill C-84 offers no protection for solicitor/client privilege. Again, a fundamental breach of the Charter of Rights, a fundamental breach of the right that says that every citizen, every person on our shores, has the right to counsel.

Under the Customs Act, the search can only be made after an oath that there are goods liable to forfeiture, and a search must be made between dawn and dusk. There a search must be made for goods, not just for pieces of paper. But Bill C-84 offers no comparable protection. Even the powers of search under this bill with warrants are a violation of our Charter. Bill C-84 states that a warrant may be issued where there are reasonable grounds to believe that evidence "may be found" that a person sought to help ten or more refugees come to Canada. Our own criminal law demands a much higher standard, a much higher evidentiary onus. There a warrant may only be issued upon reasonable grounds that evidence will be found about the commission of an offence.

Honourable senators, I am indebted to many experts who have written to me and who have spoken to me about these numerous other provisions that offend fundamental Canadian law and practice. This chorus of Canadians wishes to be heard.

• (1520)

Clearly, honourable senators, the courts will find that the standard in Bill C-84 allowing for search based on a possibility rather than on a reasonable belief will invite unauthorized intrusions of privacy, and those will be challenged successfully in the courts. However, I do not stand here as a lawyer. I stand here as a senator. Honourable senators, the courts will find that the provisions of this bill fall below those relating to our criminal standards, as set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as they deal with the protection of individuals against unreasonable search and seizure.

This brings me, honourable senators, to a fundamental drift in the government attitude towards legislation and towards Parliament. There is implicit in this bill a very dangerous trend, a trend that suggests we are moving towards irresponsible government. It is a dangerous and irresponsible trend that says that Parliament cannot legislate its own will in a careful, clear and precise manner consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and our international treaty obligations. Rather than taking its responsibilities in doing the painstaking work of drafting legislation that fits the problem, we find the Government of Canada saying, "Let the courts decide." We know, honourable senators, the courts were not established for that purpose, nor are they willing to become social engineers. Under our form of parliamentary democracy, surely this is still a job for Parliament.

Speaking only for myself, honourable senators, I believe that when we review this bill in committee, as we will, line by line, we will convince senators on all sides, and, hopefully, the government, that this measure requires serious change if we are to accomplish the goal which all Canadians share of a fair and humane refugee policy.

What is the role of the Senate? There has been some debate in the country about this. It is clear that a week of evidence in the committee of the House of Commons did not cover hearing from the range of Canadians from the regions who wished to be heard. All witnesses were crammed into one week. There are those who wished to be heard and could not be heard. The role of the Senate now is to listen carefully, expeditiously and quietly to the voices of Canadians from those regions who want to be heard. Canadians are humanitarians. Canadians want fairness. The role of this chamber is to defend against any obvious breaches of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and any obvious breaches of our international obligations.

The current system has lengthened the queue, and queue jumping offends Canadians. But clogging the system invites queue jumping, and that is a greater problem. Canadians want fair, humane reform, and I hope, in that spirit, the Senate committee will fairly, systematically and expeditiously review the background, the current conditions and the legislative solutions proposed in Bill C-84.

Honourable senators, let me end on a note from the Scriptures. As a drop-out from several theological institutions, I know that the Scriptures can offer us some guidance. Late last night, as I thought about this bill, I turned to the Gideon bible and I would commend the Senate to Matthew, chapter 25, verses 32 through to 46. I will not read those verses, because they are more familiar to many senators than they are to me. I would only turn to verse 43, which states:

I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: . . .

The concluding verse of that chapter states:

And these shall go away into everlasting punishment:

Surely, honourable senators, we are not seeking a way to invite everlasting punishment. We can think of more creative ways to do that.

I ask that the Senate refer this bill to a committee where all senators will have an opportunity to examine the obvious abuses of this particular bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I rise to take part in this debate and to make a couple of brief observations on Bill C-84.

At the outset I wish to make a point of how unfair it is for the government to have classed this piece of legislation as emergency legislation. An emergency involves something that has to be dealt with immediately, and that is not the case in this instance.

On March 5, 1986, Senator Barootes introduced a bill for first reading in this chamber, which, coincidentally, was known as Bill C-55. The objective of that bill was to increase the membership of the Immigration Appeal Board from 18 to 50 to deal with the backlog of refugee applications that had accumulated up to that time. If my memory serves me correctly, there was a backlog of approximately 19,000 cases. Senator MacDonald, who presented the bill in this chamber, said that the backlog has now reached 30,000. When that bill was dealt with and given third reading in this chamber, it was intimated that the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. McLean, would introduce more comprehensive legislation either at the end of the spring or in the summer, which would have been more than a year and three months ago.

The number of refugees who entered Canada during the period from March 1986 to August 1987 increased progressively to the point that in January of this year they were entering Canada at the rate of 1,000 a week. Four thousand entered in January and another 4,000 in February. The comprehensive bill which was promised to be introduced in this chamber to cope with this particular difficulty did not appear on the order paper until August of this year, when the government decided to recall Parliament.

Honourable senators, this is doing a disservice to Canadians, because the government is presenting a bill under the guise of an emergency bill and it is not an emergency bill at all. The refugee debate has created hard feelings in the immigrant community and in Canadian society as a whole. There are people who now fear foreigners. Even immigrants of my generation who came to Canada after the war feel some resentment against other immigrants who have just arrived, because they feel that they are jumping the queue, as senator Grafstein has indicated. I think the government should address itself to this grave situation in order to alleviate this feeling of xenophobia which is prevailing among Canadians at this time.

The other observation I should like to make at this time relates to clause 95.1 of the bill, which describes under what circumstances a person can be found guilty of having committed an indictable offence. Without reading the clause word by word let me just say that it states that anyone who aids or assists an immigrant, a refugee, a person, to gain entry into Canada without travel documents can be subject to severe fines of up to $2,000 and a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both. I would like to ask the sponsor of this bill whether he is in agreement with this particular aspect of this bill.

Honourable senators, let me describe a hypothetical situation to you. Let us take a person who desires to escape from a country where there is a dictatorship, where there is a totalitarian regime, and where there is no freedom as we know it. Let us take a Chilean, for instance. If a person who was persecuted in that country decided to seek refuge in Canada, is it reasonable to expect that that person would be able to obtain a passport or a travelling document from a government that is hostile to that particular person? Let us then assume that that person is assisted by a Canadian who volunteers to do so out of the goodness of his own heart. I am referring to someone who may be a member of a religious group or a volunteer group which assists immigrants and refugees integrate into Canadian society. They perform a noble task for Canadian society. If one of those persons happens to lend a hand to a person such as I have described, that person could be charged under clause 95.1 or clause 95.2 and could be fined and/or imprisoned. Such a person would become a criminal. I say that, while we have the assurance of Senator MacDonald that the law will not be interpreted in this manner, the simple fact that this provision exists will not only intimidate people who engage in this sort of activity but will frighten them, and many people will suffer as a result.

● (1530)

Let me say that, while I do not condone illegal entry into Canada, I understand and I feel compassion for those people who desire to come to this country. I had that feeling myself.

[Senator Bosa.]

Honourable senators, I was 12 years old when World War II broke out and I saw what happened in Friuli, the northern region of Italy where I was born. I have seen a fratricidal war. I have experienced what life is like when people do not have the basic necessities such as food and clothing. I desired very much to come to Canada at that time and I would have done anything to do so.

I did eventually come to Canada in 1948, having been sponsored by my father who came to this country in 1927. I came through the front door to this country in accordance with our immigration policy. Honourable senators, I can only reiterate that, while I do not condone illegal immigration, I can understand anyone's desire to come here. I hope that Senator MacDonald, who has responsibility for this particular piece of legislation, will be able to see some of the anomalies that are contained in this bill. Perhaps he, himself, should suggest some amendments in order to rectify whatever hardships or injustices these clauses may impose upon people who engage in voluntary work in helping immigrants settle in this country.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if Senator MacDonald speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, before I ask that this bill be referred to committee, I should like to congratulate Senator Grafstein and Senator Bosa upon their interventions. They have spoken with a feeling I think we all share in what has been referred to as a common definition of our heritage. I think I could have answered the question put to Senator MacEachen when he was asked where he came from. He is a second generation Canadian, as am I, and our fathers came from the same country; they were immigrants. There is no question but that the concerns that he has are sound and that the deliberations of the committee will clarify or change a number of those concerns.

Yesterday I tried to point out that this debate is often muddled by extremes and that there are passions on both sides. There is one side that I will not share—that is the one which might be referred to as draconian—and there is the other extreme, which I feel sometimes does lose sight of what is, as I said yesterday, an intolerable national problem. Statistics will be easily determined by the committee. Yesterday I said—and this has to be subject to verification—that Canada expects this year 30,000 refugee claims. By the end of the year there will be a backlog of approximately 40,000 such claims. It has been said that the crest has subsided. I shan't get into that because I am persuaded that that is not the case. When we speak of emergencies, we speak of highly publicized incidents. As I mentioned yesterday, the boat arrival in Nova Scotia was just another signal sent around the world indicating that Canada really is the last place where a person can physically set foot on the soil, claim to be a refugee, and then go into a system which would take as long as five years or more to have his status verified.

We are seeking a determination to re-establish the distinctions between legitimate immigrants, legitimate refugees and illegal aliens. This bill does not seek to escape the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There is no "notwithstanding". This is good news for the Canadian Bar Association—as long as there are lawyers there will be all manner of challenges. Honourable senators, I read recently with great delight of the appointment of the chairman-designate, Gordon Fairweather, who will leave the Human Rights Commission to be the new chairman. That is an absolutely first-class appointment and one which will assure us that we will abide by the conventions.

Senator Grafstein quoted scripture when he said that this is not the Good Samaritan approach. I say to him that this is about as "according to Luke" as this government can make it.

Senator Frith: That's not saying much for Luke!

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, there are other areas, particularly those to which Senator Bosa has alluded, which tempt me to get into specifics. I think I will resist that temptation and, at the appropriate time, I will make the motion to refer the bill to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

● (1540)

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I believe it has been agreed that this bill is to be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I so move.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps it should be noted for the record that we gave unanimous consent to that. In order to make this technically immaculate, I think the record should show that we gave leave to refer this bill to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee rather than to the Social Affairs Committee.

On motion of Senator MacDonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 67(1)(m)(ix), bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prela-ture of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, are the very nature and the modus operandi of Opus Dei compatible with the concept of democratic organization?

My answer to that is no!

For the simple reason that Opus Dei, created in the shadow of a Facist régime, nurtured by the spirit of the radical right, enamoured of ideas of grandeur and the quest for honours, shuns light and public scrutiny.

Bill S-7 which was tabled in the Senate is the most telling evidence and the most disturbing illustration of this mysticism of the secret of Opus Dei.

Drawing suspicion in a number of jurisdictions, Opus Dei is attempting to swarm like the African bees which were brought into South America and are now headed for our hemisphere through Central America and Mexico where their presence has become endemic. Although Opus Dei has already set foot on Canadian soil, there is still time to spell out on what conditions it will be allowed to exist under our democratic system.

I have made a serious effort to try to understand the true aim, the raison d'être of Opus Dei. In fact I did spend a lot of time on this endeavour, abandoning more pleasant and undoubtedly more productive activities. If at the end of this voyage through piles and piles of documents, articles and books, I had at least reached the conclusion that Opus Dei is essentially composed of and especially governed by pure hearted and innocent men, well meaning people, then I would rectify today the orientation of the intervention I made in June.

Alas, such is not the case. I must conclude that in the matter of Opus Dei we are dealing with illusive and constantly fleeting shadows.

I have been able to gather some information by referring to author-investigators who are much better qualified than I am and their verdict was disturbing.

Daniel Artigues, who I believe is Spanish, wrote the following in 1967 in the French magazine Esprit by way of a conclusion to a most thorough research:

On the other hand, while the organization . . .

That is Opus Dei, in full the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.

. . . while the organization has somewhat relented on the veil of secrecy surrounding its activities, its behavior toward those who question its value remains unchanged. In 1965, Alfonso Carlos Comin, a well-known Catholic Sociologist, in a spirit of Christian good will but also with a sharp critical mind, has written a public message to Opus Dei in the Barcelona magazine El Ciervo. The initial article by Comin was titled "Dialogue with Opus Dei" (Dialogo con el Opus Dei). Three months later, Comin analyzed the reactions to his article and noted that writers who were sympathetic to the organization almost exclusively confined themselves to personal attacks. None of them had answered questions that come to mind when one examines the case of Opus Dei.

In the magazine entitled L'information médicale et paramédicale, the issue dated August 15, 1972, published in Montreal, Hermas Bastien wrote an article titled Le Dossier de l'Opus Dei. Here is his conclusion:

Secrecy, coercion, hypocrisy plus a few devils that have slipped through human motives, contribute to the success it has achieved in Spain, under the guise of catholicism, nationalism and dictatorship, always pretending to do good and to work for Christian perfection while, strangely enough, showing a compulsive need to hide away.

In the previous paragraph, the same author wrote:

Finally, the organization has used and abused all possible credit, private or public. Such was the advice of Escriva.

He is the founder of Opus Dei, and he wrote:

He who seeks only God is justified, in order to further his apostolate, to apply this principle as worded by one of our good friends: one spends what must be spent even if what is spent is owed.

Opus Dei is handling considerable amounts of money, amounts that are mysteriously shuffled from here to there across the world, sometimes in Swiss bank accounts, as is rumoured, or else in banks whose collapses were clouded in mystery. One can presume that this money is not mere peanuts when we know that this organization is centered mostly on the upper ranks of society, that it deals with people who are in a position of influence, of prestige in the circles of business, professionals, trade and commerce and yes, even the Church and yes, even politics.

Opus Dei, if one is to believe according to its own panegyricists, is not a secret organization according to some definitions or the conclusions of some investigations. However, I would like to quote here Daniel Artigues:

It is a powerful organization that is shrouded in mystery. In these conditions, accusations and denials are vainly spread about.

Here is what the investigator from the magazine Esprit had to say and I quote:

The conclusion cannot be escaped: this manner of organizing the access of Catholics to commanding positions, this quest for power are the opposite of the wordly dedication characterized by modesty and selflessness as advocated by the Council (Vatican II) and, I would add, as preached by the Gospel that is common to all Christians.

However, I have difficulty with the argument that the Holy Father approves of that body, that the founder of Opus Dei is in the process of being canonized, that some of our superiors, the Canadian bishops, although not all of them, and I emphasize not all of them, see no objection to Opus Dei taking root in Canada.

[Senator Corbin.]

The Opus Dei formula seems well suited to some countries, within ultraconservative churches, within top-notch rightist political regimes. But what need have we of such an agency in democratic systems as we have in Canada and the United States? Opus Dei does not fit in at all with our traditions. We all aspire to remain open, democratic, tolerant, receptive societies. So why do they come around to us with an application for civil incorporation as an organization shrouded in mystery, suspicion, dissimulation?

● (1550)

Let no one suggest that my sense of democracy is dulled because I am against Opus Dei settling down in Canada. What I say is clear. I find it shocking that they want to clothe in a legislative, and thereby legal garb, an agency that is the very opposite of true democracy.

We in this house who oppose Bill S-7 allowed it to be put forward for first reading in the name of democracy. But now that we are still at second reading stage, we will decry Opus Dei. In committee, we will unveil Opus Dei—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Hear, hear!

Senator Corbin: At the report stage, we will do all we can to show it stark naked, and at third reading stage, we will oppose the bill.

Senator Flynn: You don't say! Beforehand—

Senator Corbin: —as is our democratic right.

Senator Flynn: I know, but you assume that scrutiny in committee will not clear up your objections.

Senator Corbin: Not at all. I am keeping an open mind.

Senator Flynn: Oh well, you said beforehand! Do not suggest you will oppose it.

Senator Corbin: I am already convinced the committee will fall in the traditional Opus Dei cul-de-sac.

I have no intention of unduly delaying the legislative process. But we reserve the right to go on and complete our research in order to be in a position to inform all our parliamentary colleagues. The idea that I wanted to block this bill is a mere hallucination. I have never had such intentions. To the contrary, I thank Heaven for this opportunity to show our Senate colleagues and fellow citizens the other face of Opus Dei.

That Parliament has or has not in a distant or recent past allowed the incorporation of organizations that are or claim to be of a religious or pious nature does not affect our duty to scrutinize Bill S-7. Nothing must be taken for granted in a legislative assembly.

I find it wrong to try and sell us through intermediaries the idea of the integrity and angelic purity of Opus Dei by surrounding it with the cape of the Pope, who cannot know all the time what is going on everywhere in the church, no more than Canada's Prime Minister can know what is going on in the Canadian Security Service for instance. This is why we want to know what the Reverend Haddock and other members of Opus Dei who came here to hive off are doing in Canada. I have no problem about personal sanctification per se. I aspire to it, like most everyone else. But I cannot get it into my mind that one must necessarily incorporate in order to go to heaven.

As a general rule, people incorporate in order to make transactions, deal in big business, to receive, board, give or loan money, property—the money, gifts and property of well-meaning albeit naive or ignorant individuals. The law is there or should be there at least to protect the individuals, the members, rather than just the institute and the sole person who manages it in Canada.

Our parliamentary responsibility, as I see it, is to go to the bottom of things and decide whether we should or should not grant Opus Dei a corporate status. We must also try to protect the rights of its members, whether called regular, oblates, extras, co-operators, priests, and thereby protect Canadian society in general.

Senator Bélisle, the mouthpiece of Opus Dei in Parliament, sweated a lot over his intervention on June 29, but without succeeding in advancing his cause.

His only relevant comments came at the very end of his speech. For the rest, we heard the same broken record played by the Opus Dei every time someone, somewhere, dares to question its raison d'être or has the courage, if not the wisdom, to sound the alarm.

Senator Bélisle had this to say, and I quote:

However, the Canada Corporations Act allows a person to be incorporated for business purposes, while the same act does not provide a procedure for persons who want to be incorporated on a non-profit basis.

Senator Bélisle's reference to the Canada Corporations Act is wrong. He should have quoted the Canada Business Corporations Act. The old act, to which he referred, that is the Canada Corporations Act, no longer applies to business corporations. However, this act is still in place for non-profit corporations wishing to incorporate, but it does not apply to individuals wishing to incorporate.

Indeed, in the first part of my intervention on Bill S-7, I mentioned that the request of Opus Dei comes to us at a time when the reform and modernization of the old and primitive Canada Corporations Act are still not completed. As I have just pointed out, the part of the old act dealing with business corporations has been revised to take modern practices into account, but on three occasions since 1979, the Canadian government has been unable to reform the legislation dealing with the non-business sector, which includes both corporations and individuals.

I said at the time, and I say it again, that this reform must take place. It has been held up for too long! And let no one accuse the Senate of procrastination in this case as this house has twice approved legislation at all stages, legislation which then died on the order paper of the House of Commons. Moreover, a third piece of legislation introduced in the Commons by the government met with a similar fate.

It is no longer practical or even acceptable to grant exceptional favours by privileged legislation to incorporate the type of organization referred to in Bill S-7. Only exceptional and urgent circumstances could justify such a procedure.

All Canadian non-profit corporations must in my opinion be subject to identical legislative procedures and standards to achieve similar conditions of existence before the law.

This would certainly not be the case if Parliament were to adopt Bill S-7 in its present form.

Senator Bélisle made a surprising statement during his intervention on the bill when he said, and I quote:

However, clause 7 of the bill obliges the Regional Vicar to appoint an auditor who is, by definition, an independent accountant.

I do not understand how Senator Bélisle can come to the conclusion that, "by definition", an auditor would be an independent accountant in the specific case of Opus Dei. The bill contains no such guarantee. I would say that the opposite is true. Indeed, the practice is to choose the auditor at the annual general assembly of members. In the case of Opus Dei, the members are a single person, the Very Reverend Haddock. That is self-absorption of the worst kind. I would even go further. As Opus Dei avoids the control of provincial laws as concerns auditing, which I suspect is its reason for wishing to incorporate federally, no one outside the excessively limited framework of Opus Dei itself will ever know if this corporation is behaving properly. Anyone with a minimum of sense would require that the "independent" person appointed as auditor meet at least the standards set by the provinces as concerns qualifications and responsibilities. Otherwise, it will be a farce! If Opus Dei has its corporate headquarters in Montreal, it should comply with provincial law.

Senator Bélisle also said the following:

Furthermore, the general statute, in other words, Part III of the Canada Corporations Act, Section 158, makes companies incorporated by special legislation subject to the same control requirements as any other corporation.

Under section 158 of the Canada Corporations Act, which, I repeat, is the old act, the Regional Vicar of Opus Dei in Canada would be subject to sections 102, 133, and 150 of this same act.

What do these sections provide?

Section 102 would have no meaning in practice as it prescribes an annual meeting of the members of the corporation. In this case, the corporation has only one member, the Regional Vicar of Opus Dei for Canada—me, myself and I. This is tantamount to saying that section 102 does not mean anything at all and exempts Opus Dei in Canada from holding an annual meeting. It might be interesting to know whether indeed the Regional Vicar holds a meeting for and by himself. Section 133 requires the corporation to produce an annual return.

Such a provision—and this I emphasize before an assembly which includes well known and competent board members of Canadian companies—is essential for the control and democratic government of any corporation. To whom will the annual return of the Opus Dei curacy be addressed? Would it be to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to the Canadian Parliament, to the protective cardinal, to the Pope, to the archbishop of the diocese, to Senator Bélisle, to the active and qualified and not so qualified members of Opus Dei in Canada? We do not know, and we will never know. This calls for an answer.

Section 133 makes it possible to find the identity and particulars of the Regional Vicar. It makes it possible to identify the corporation by its corporate name and civic address. It would enable us to find the identity and address of the comptroller, and this is important.

Section 150 of the original Canada Corporations Act provides for the winding up of the corporation by the court, at the request of the attorney general, on specific grounds, namely failure to comply with any one of sections 102, 128 or 133 of the act.

Contrary to what Senator Bélisle would have us believe when he claims that the Regional Vicar of Opus Dei, once incorporated, would be subject, and I quote:

To the same control requirements as any other corporation.

It is debatable whether, and even unlikely that, the corporation of the Regional Vicar would be liable to winding up procedures were it to fail to meet the requirements of section 128.

The fact is that section 150 does not apply section 128 to corporations incorporated pursuant to special legislation, as would be the Regional Vicar of Opus Dei under Bill S-7.

Besides, since there is no shareholder or member of the corporation sole other than the Regional Vicar, the financial statement and the report of the comptroller, designated by him, are intended for him, and for him alone. And there is nothing to prevent him from designating another member of Opus Dei.

So I ask you: How are the members, the Canadian citizens, protected in Opus Dei? What guarantee, what rights do they have? What protection do they get under the legislation we are asked to pass for the benefit of a single individual? Should the Opus Dei situation turn sour, as was the case in many other jurisdictions, what would be left to people who, in good faith, gave Opus Dei their worldly possessions, their life?

I, for one, because this is Opus Dei, am not prepared to grant this extraordinary privilege to a single individual.

And in case you might have lost the over-all perspective of the objections raised by my colleagues, Senators Hébert and Le Moyne, I would remind you that my remarks relate to strictly legal considerations which, in my estimation, have their importance because of the nature of the organization which seeks to be incorporated in Canada.

If there are no secrets for Opus Dei, it seems to me that Parliament has every right to request the Institute of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei to produce its statutes and regulations.

If it is mandatory for Opus Dei to produce such statutes and regulations for the archbishops concerned before it can establish itself in a Canadian diocese, then it stands to reason, if not for the same reason, that Opus Dei, which seeks civic incorporation and wants to honour us with the accomplishment of the mission of laity within Canadian society, has to do the same thing with respect to the Canadian Parliament.

Should Opus Dei be reluctant to accept our invitation, then our worst fears will be confirmed.

After all, neither the Canadian Parliament nor the provincial legislatures are forcing Opus Dei to incorporate; it is Opus Dei which is asking for this privilege, it is the Very Reverend Haddock who has asked for this, the ball is now in his court.

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: And he is a "simple abbé" yet!

Senator Corbin: He is called "Very Reverend".

Senator Le Moyne: A mistake.

Senator Corbin: Some people simply love titles.

Senator Le Moyne: There are many! He is a "simple abbé", nothing more. He is not even Canadian.

Senator Corbin: You do not hold that against me, Senator Le Moyne, do you?

Senator Le Moyne: No, not at all.

Senator Corbin: I am only quoting from official texts.

Senator Le Moyne: I do have something against that man.

Senator Flynn: Do not get mad for nothing!

Senator Corbin: Well, Senator Flynn has just taken my last breath!

Otherwise, I would advise the "reverend" "abbé", Haddock, to try to seek incorporation in each of the provinces, as the Roman Catholic bishops did. Thank you, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Stollery, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

TWENTY-NINTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, September 17, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

TWENTY-NINTH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord for the proposed expenditures of the said Committee with respect to its examination of the 1987 Constitutional Accord signed in Ottawa on June 3, 1987 by the First Ministers of Canada. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 58,821
Transportation and Communications	44,640
All Other Expenditures	6,360
	$109,821

Respectfully submitted,

ROYCE FRITH
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When will this report be taken into consideration, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now. I am prepared to explain why.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this is the budget for the Senate's share of the expenses of the Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord. I find it a little uncomfortable to have to propose its adoption since I did not think we should have any truck or trade with a joint committee under the 1982 Constitutional amendment. Therefore, I voted against the adoption of the resolution to set up such a committee.

However, the Senate did decide to establish such a committee, and this represents the Senate's portion of the expenses. Since we did go ahead with it we ought to pay up. The Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration Committee looked at it today and did not quarrel with it. I ask that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRTIETH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, September 17, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

THIRTIETH REPORT

Your Committee has examined and approved the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories for the proposed expenditures of the said Task Force with respect to its hearing representations thereon. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 25,400
Transportation and Communications	107,886
All Other Expenditures	2,500
	$135,786

Respectfully submitted,

ROYCE FRITH
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When will this report be taken into consideration, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Frith to tell us what the situation is with regard to the expenses authorized for committees up to the present. Is there some money left in the budget?

Senator Frith: No, honourable senators. That question, of course, is relevant to this as well as to the motion we just adopted.

The report to the committee today—and I do not have the exact figures; I can give you the rough figures—is that if these motions are adopted and are added to what has been adopted up to now, the overrun on committees would be some $900,000. If one applies the rule that has been applied in the past that one usually spends approximately 70 per cent of one's budget, it would amount to some $600,000.

Senator Flynn: On division!

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Frith. When he says "if one applies the rule," would he mind telling us what rule he is applying?

Senator Frith: I suppose that "rule" is not the correct word. If one applies the factor that is based on experience in the past, namely, at the end of the day—a popular expression these days—which in this case—

Senator Phillips: It is past the end of the day.

Senator Frith:—can be clearly stated as being March 31 of each year, the committees, based on past experience, spend approximately 70 per cent of what they have estimated.

That does not mean that the total committee budget is necessarily 70 per cent. The system the committee uses, as honourable senators are aware, is to ask at the beginning of each year that the committees give an estimate as to how much they expect to spend in the forthcoming year.

It is difficult for the chairmen of the committees to do that, because they do not know what special studies might be referred or what bills might be referred.

Senator Flynn: And there are special committees.

Senator Frith: Yes, but even the standing committees have a certain amount of difficulty estimating what their work will be, but they do try to estimate that. It is on that basis, plus some contingency, that the Internal Economy Committee establishes a budget for the committees and then recommends that budget to the Senate.

Then, of course, as Senator Flynn has pointed out, there is the problem of anticipating whether there will be any special committees struck. So it is very difficult to know what the situation will be. Of course, the Catch-22 situation—

Senator Phillips: Twenty-two is correct.

Senator Frith: Yes, Senator Phillips is quite right. The Special Senate Committee on the Subject Matter of Bill C-22 is a good example. The Catch-22 situation applied to that committee. The Catch-22 situation is this: Is the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration going to say to the Senate, "We, the members of the Internal Economy Committee, have now decided, for practical purposes, what work the Senate will be able to give to its committees. And you might as well not talk about special committees, because we are deciding that there will not be any money for them, or we cannot estimate accurately what money will be required."

So, it is a recurring problem, what can accurately be called a chronic problem, and a problem I do not think the Senate will be able to escape if it does not want to have the Internal Economy Committee decide a year in advance what the Senate's committee activities will be.

That is why it is not unusual for us to find that we are over budget on the committee portion of the budget at this time of year. How we will stand towards the end of the year is not clear, but the Internal Economy Committee has taken the position that it will ask for a review, as it did today, in September, and as it will ask to review the situation again in November. At that stage the Internal Economy Committee will be in a position to know better if the budget will come out all right because of some understanding, or the committee might ask that some committees retrench, or it might ask for supplementary estimates. It sounds like the wrong way to run a railroad. But if someone can tell us a better way to run a railroad, in other words, if someone can suggest any system other than having the Internal Economy Committee making decisions each year in advance as to what the committee activity will be, I think the Internal Economy Committee would be glad to consider such an improved formula.

• (1410)

Senator Frith: That's correct.

Senator Murray:—undertaken by standing committees or by the creation of special committees.

Quite a few months ago, before I became Leader of the Government and when I was chairman of one of the standing committees, I suggested that we consider each year putting into the budget a certain amount, based on our experience, for the ordinary legislative work of the committees and then another amount for special studies by standing committees or for the creation of special committees, and then that we allocate that money generally between the two parties so that a certain number of studies could be undertaken at the initiative of honourable senators on both sides of the house. That is not the last word by way of a solution to the problem, but I think it is a suggestion which, if I may say so, is worth considering.

I do not know at the moment whether we will be in a crisis situation with regard to committee budgets before this fiscal year ends. The information that I have been given informally—and if I am far off I would like to be corrected for the record—is that, in terms of the budget that was contemplated for committee work as against the total of budgets that have been approved for committee work, we are approximately 100 per cent in excess of the original figure. If that holds then we will be in somewhat of a crisis. In terms of financial management, that is a difficult proposition for the Senate to justify in going back for additional funds. I will not emphasize the point any more until we see what situation we are in as we get closer to the end of the fiscal year, but I think it is in the interests of this institution that we put our heads together and try to come up with a solution to the problem that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has alluded to.

Senator Frith: I agree, honourable senators. There is a real possibility that the budget for committee work will be found to be overcommitted as of, say, November, perhaps the end of the year—fiscal or otherwise. I agree that if a solution can be found, that would be very desirable.

But I do not believe that the Senate would want serious limitations placed on its future work by being told that there would be only a certain amount of money available. But that is to be seen; maybe some senators might feel that way. I agree with the Leader of the Government in the Senate that we should renew his proposal and have the committee consider that proposal.

As to whether it is a crisis or not, that, of course, depends on one's viewpoint. It will depend on whether the Senate got its money's worth from the committees, and whether the country got its money's worth from the Senate and its committees, which resulted in this overspending, that is, going beyond the original budget. But it still might not be a crisis. Supplementary estimates would not be that outrageous a solution since other bodies of government such as the House of Commons and government agencies regularly ask for supplementary estimates.

Anyway, I agree with the Leader of the Government that that is a decision to be made when we determine our position. I also agree with him that we should look at every possible solution, including the one suggested by him.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, this, of course, is a problem for the Senate. We have, on an ad hoc basis, from time to time decided to set up additional committees or provide for additional work, and this has been done on the basis of what senators at that time collectively thought the work priority of the Senate should be.

I would think that there are some dangers in the Senate itself giving committees of the Senate—and every committee of the Senate is subject to decisions made by this chamber—the responsibility of deciding, in a formal way, the future activities of the Senate itself in any given year.

There will, no doubt, be some over-expenditures in the committee portion of Senate expenditures, but my experience over the years has been that there are other parts of the Senate's overall budget that may not be fully spent. Within the global budget of the Senate, it has been the practice—and I think a good practice—to move moneys from one item to another.

This morning we had a long and, I think, productive meeting of the Senate Internal Economy Committee. Without disclosing any secrets as to the various items discussed by the Senate Internal Economy Committee at that time, I think it is correct to say that, with regard to certain other possible expenditures in reference to certain other departments of the government, the general attitude of the members of that committee was that necessary and legitimate expenditures should be incurred.

I think that we need to make our decisions from time to time in this chamber based on all the facts as we see them at that time and not pre-judge months ahead, by way of a committee finding or recommendation, what the work of the Senate or its committees may be.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the fact that my honourable friend, Senator Argue, has intervened reminds me that he has a motion before the Senate at this point to set up a special committee having to do with health care, and I presume that will require some kind of a budget—this at a time when we are, if not 100 per cent overcommitted, at least considerably over committed in terms of committee budgets.

My friend, Senator Phillips, tells me that some 80 per cent of the budget has gone not to the legislative work of committees but to special studies.

Senator Frith: The overrun, not the budget.

Senator Phillips: The expenditures to date.

Senator Murray: I made the point when I stood up that the major charge on the budget has come not from the ordinary legislative work of committees but from special studies undertaken by standing committees and from the budgets of special committees.

In addition to the normal legislative work of studying bills and so forth, we have had the Special Committee on Terrorism, the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries and the Special Senate Committee on National Defence proceeding with studies of various kinds, all of which, I am sure, will make a valuable contribution to public policy. My point is that, in terms of financial management, we work on the basis of fiscal years. There is no reason in the world why we cannot look at a whole series of these suggestions and establish some priorities between us as to which special studies we want to go ahead with.

• (1420)

It is true that departments and agencies do come back to the government from time to time for supplementary estimates, and I am sure that we will also do so. However, I think it is difficult to justify, just as a simple matter of financial management, finding in a given fiscal year that we have overcommit-ted ourselves by as much as 100 per cent. I will leave it there for the moment.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Would the deputy chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration entertain a simple question?

Senator Frith: What was the adjective? Civil? I am prepared to accept a criminal and, perhaps, an uncivil question, yes.

Senator Barootes: No, "simple".

Senator Frith: "Simple"—I thought he said "civil".

Senator Barootes: To the extent that he asks whether there is a better method of operating a railroad, would the deputy chairman tell me, referring to the twenty-ninth and thirtieth reports, both of which have to do with the Constitutional Accord, whether these studies show any duplication or overlapping which might have been avoided and which might have resulted in some financial savings if only one of the committees had undertaken the work?

Senator Frith: Very definitely, and that is one reason I consider the joint committee a constitutional abomination. It ought not to have been established. Senator Barootes is quite right. The simple answer to his question is, yes, it would certainly have avoided a lot of duplication if we had not set up the joint committee and if we had gone, as the Constitution provides, with our own study and allowed the House of Commons to go on with its study.

Senator Barootes: Senator Frith was one of the very few who felt that way at the time. However, if we had gone along with only the joint committee, there would have been a saving of $25,000, as I add this up.

Senator Frith: Yes, but the problem with that is chronology. We had set up our own committee before the joint committee was formed. Therefore, to establish the "Barootes formula," we should have rejected the joint committee.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in the committee this morning I pointed out that the committee was more or less making an NSF vote. There is no fund, but we continued to go ahead and vote. I ask the Honourable Senator Frith this: Has the Senate ever committed $2 million to committee study before?

Senator Frith: I do not know.

Senator Argue: It probably should have.

Senator Frith: I suppose I should take that also as a rhetorical question, with the implication that therefore it ought not to do so now. I think there are differences of opinion about whether this year's activity has been worthwhile. It may have cost more than it has ever cost before. If we took a poll, I think we would find that some senators would say that the work of the terrorism committee was a waste of time, while others thought it was worthwhile. I have no doubt that we would find a small but strong-minded minority who thought that the work of the Special Committee on Bill C-22 was a waste of time. We would also find a number of senators who thought that it wasn't. We have these disagreements, but I believe that many senators would consider that this year's budget, including the overrun, was worthwhile and that, if necessary, a supplementary estimate should be asked for; but I do not for one moment suggest that everyone would be of that opinion.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to take up the excellent suggestion of my colleague of the same ancestry, Senator Barootes, who thinks that we should not have any duplication. There was a monstrosity expensive case of duplication some time ago—namely, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations—which did not produce anything that our own Committees on Foreign Affairs and National Defence had not already produced. It was the most lavish exercise that one could imagine. It went around the country twice. We heard the same witnesses twice—all over the place, all the time, for no reason at all—to produce a report that was a copy, a paraphrase, of things that had already been written by Senate committees.

So, if we are going to look at duplication—which means not doing a second time what has already been done—we should look at both chambers and say, "If the Senate has done it, perhaps the House should not saddle the Senate with the expenses of the most expensive special joint committee to produce something that already existed."

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I should, perhaps, state for the record that a good deal of interest was shown by honourable senators in taking part in that committee. That committee became a joint committee because honourable senators asked for that procedure. Without belabouring the point, I should also indicate to my honourable friend that a simple committee of the House of Commons on such a matter would have had a very tiny representation from his party. Making it a joint committee enabled his party to have a rather greater representation proportionately than otherwise they would have had.

Finally, I am glad to hear him express his support for the work of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. One point that I should draw to his attention is that the Senate committee brought in a much stronger recommendation in favour of bilateral free trade with the United States than did the joint committee.

Senator Gigantès: I remember a chapter in the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations, which special staff was hired to draft, to quote from the work of a particular Harvard professor. After it was read to us, I said, "Isn't this saying that Canada should seek small ponds in which to be big fish?"

We are now talking of 40 pages, 8.5 by 14, to say in obscure language that we should only bite off as much as we can chew—something that was fairly well known before we went around.

So, if we are thinking of the Senate's being at all wasteful—and there seems to be some suggestion that some of the work done by the Senate is not useful—I should like to point out that the other house does things which are not useful in which we have to participate and which have cost us money. Of course, if they start one of those studies, we will have to participate, because they would exclude the Liberals.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, as one who has been a member of the Internal Economy Committee for quite a few years—more than 20 years now—I should like to make a few comments. I thought it was interesting, when Senator Argue rose to speak, that he made what could be judged a Freudian slip when he began to refer to the committee as the “eternal” committee. I should tell honourable senators that this morning it seemed that way. Without going into what happened, perhaps I might suggest that at times it seemed almost like a zoo.

In any event, we all showed great patience with each other and reached some conclusions.

I might say to the Leader of the Government that his references, not intentionally misleading, to the 100 per cent overrun of estimate at this point—because that is what it is—

Senator Murray: Overcommitment.

Senator McElman: Overcommitment of estimate at this point, could be misleading in that when he talks about percentages he should talk about percentages of what.

● (1430)

I suggest to you that the money allocated in the budget for committees for the fiscal year is, in truth, a small amount considering the commitments that one can reasonably expect to be made at this time. A cost that is more pronounced than it has been in previous years, and I would guess that it is probably the most costly factor with respect to committees, is transport and communications, which is one of the specific items included in every budget, be it for a standing or special committee. The costs for transportation and communication have skyrocketed over the last very short period of years. As we all know, committees have been moving about much more than they did in previous years as they conduct studies. It has been said repeatedly in the Senate by honourable senators on both sides of the house that the Senate has some obligation to get out into the country, to get the views of people. That point of view is one to which I subscribe, as do, I think, most senators. However, I am sure that the increased costs in these areas have contributed very heavily to the costs involved in committee work.

As to the global amount that we have budgeted for committee activity, it was one of the items that, as we considered budgets for this year—and I think Senator Phillips will agree with me—took up a good part of the time. Many opinions were expressed. I expressed an opinion, as did some others, that we were budgeting far too little for committees. I recall very well saying in committee that the total budget for all our committee activity, both our many standing committees plus any special committees we might establish, was a smaller amount than some committees of the House of Commons spend individually.

Senator Guay: Right on!

[Senator Gigantès.]

Senator McElman: So, when we consider this matter, I do not think that we should get too greatly exercised. I realize that the government and the minister have a special responsibility as to budgeting for activities of Parliament. However, we should bear in mind that the Senate has been, while not penurious, very cautious down through the years in its budgeting. I suspect that this year it has been overly cautious with respect to expenditures for committees. So let us measure what we do with our committees, which, I am sure all will agree, is one of the most important aspects of our work in the Senate, if one wants to put it in relative terms, by the good work we do in our committees and compared with the good that is done by Commons committees. I am sure we will find that our budget is very small, indeed modest, as compared to the work we do for Parliament and for the Canadian people relative to what the other body does. Let us keep the whole thing in perspective.

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I would like to take a moment to emphasize what Senator McElman has just said. Last year I had the occasion to serve on the joint committee looking into international relations and the Special Senate Committee on Youth. As one who, over the past 15 years, has served on quite a few travelling committees of the House of Commons, but on only one travelling committee of the Senate, which was the Youth Committee, I take this opportunity to say how struck I was by the very tight budget under which the Youth Committee operated. I say that because almost at the same time that I was travelling on the Youth Committee, I was also travelling on the International Relations Committee, which was jointly funded, if I recall correctly, two-thirds from the House of Commons—

Senator McElman: It is 70/30.

Senator Stollery: Yes, 70/30. I would not go so far as to say that on the International Relations Committee we travelled extravagantly, but I would certainly say that on that committee which we shared with the House of Commons we travelled luxuriously in every sense of the word whereas on the Youth Committee with the Senate we went from what I would consider budget-priced hotel to budget-priced hotel and carried on the work of that committee with a minimum of services.

I know that other colleagues who served on that committee will remember a few of the episodes of those trips. At one time I think we went through four cities in the same day in order to save spending a night in a hotel. Therefore, I think it would be wrong to leave the impression that in any way the Senate operates extravagantly. In fact, in my view the Senate committees operate in a very frugal manner. I particularly recall that experience, because I was sitting on both committees almost at the same time, and it would not be an exaggeration to say that it went from a budget operation on the one hand to an extremely luxurious travelling committee on the other, and that committee originated from the House of Commons.

Therefore, I do not think that any impression should be left that the Senate committees are over-funded. Clearly, for many years Senate committees did not travel as much as they might have done. Since it appears that Senate committees may now be travelling more, I for one, having spent quite a few years in the House of Commons, would like to say that I think that the funding for those committees should be increased, and increased quite dramatically.

Motion agreed to and report adopted, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 29, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (1440)

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, it is the intention of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to meet just about every day next week to consider Bill C-22. Therefore, that committee will be fully occupied and will occupy the time of many of the senators.

As well, Bill C-84 has been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I understand that they have scheduled a meeting for Monday, September 21, at 11 o'clock, to hear the minister. They will put their work schedule for the rest of the week in place at that time.

If Bill C-2, the Canagrex Bill, gets second reading today, I assume it will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. If so, it is quite possible, and I hope probable, that that committee might have an opportunity to meet next week as well to deal with the bill. Although the Senate will be adjourned as a sitting chamber next week, nevertheless, the committees will be busy on very important matters.

Motion agreed to.

SENATE TASK FORCE ON MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD AND YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), I move:

That the following Senators be appointed to serve on the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, namely, the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Bielish and Macquarrie.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. James Balfour moved the second reading of Bill C-2, to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words in support of Bill C-2, an act to dissolve the crown corporation Canagrex.

This bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last year for pre-study. Indeed, a committee report was issued in June of this year.

As the report noted, the Canagrex corporation ceased to operate in practical terms in 1984. It was in November of that year that the federal government announced its intention to phase out Canagrex.

The aim of the legislation before us is simply to dissolve the corporation officially.

No one doubts that exports are essential to Canadian agriculture. Indeed, half of all farm cash receipts in this country are derived from export sales.

There also can be no doubt that the international marketplace is tougher and more competitive than it has ever been before in our history. Government support and encouragement of export development initiatives is more vital than ever. The federal government fully appreciates these facts and, indeed, export development is a very high priority. That is why we are involved in providing key export development tools to the agriculture industry: market identification and intelligence, promotional and informational services, loans and guarantees, and grants and contributions.

The question the government had to ask themselves in 1984 was whether Canagrex was the best way to provide these necessary services. The decision of the federal government was that the services could be provided more efficiently and more cost-effectively through the cooperative efforts of the Department of External Affairs, the Export Development Corporation and Agriculture Canada.

In retrospect, I believe the decision was a sound and responsible one.

During the time since Canagrex ceased to operate there have been many important successes in agricultural export development. In a challenging world trading environment, we are succeeding in creating new export opportunities for Canadian agriculture. The lesson we can draw from this experience is that objectives can be attained without necessarily creating new corporations, agencies or bureaucracies.

Honourable senators, I have no hesitation in recommending the passage of this legislation.

Hon. Daniel Hays: Honourable senators, I would like to speak to this bill. I would like to thank Senator Balfour for his brief, but fair, summary of what has happened.

The main difference between the thrust of what he has said and what I have to say is that I do not agree that it is a good idea to dissolve Canagrex.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has carried out a pre-study of Bill C-2, which dissolves Canagrex. The committee tabled a report, pursuant to that pre-study, on June 23, 1987. As Senator Balfour indicated, Canagrex has, in effect, been dormant since November 8, 1984, the date of the government's expenditure and program review announcing, among other things, a $60 million cut in the Department of Agriculture's spending. With no staff and no budget for almost three years, Canagrex could not now be easily revived.

Looking into the way in which Canagrex is finally being brought to an end has been an interesting study from at least two perspectives. One, the manner in which the executive branch of the government can ignore the apparent will of Parliament. By that I mean that Canagrex disappears not because of what happens in Parliament but because of what happened in cabinet leading up to the November 8, 1984, financial statement of the government.

As a practical matter, Canagrex was dissolved almost three years ago. Yet the government is only now obtaining the approval of Parliament to carry out that decision. If an initiative, such as Canagrex, were started without the approval of Parliament, I am sure that would be looked on as something very bad. It is apparent that putting an end to an initiative that Parliament has directed to be taken is not equally bad. I believe that is a wrong approach.

I believe that had the government respected the spirit as well as the letter of the legislation until the matter was actually dealt with by this Parliament, the fate of Canagrex would have been very different. It would have had an opportunity to operate longer to establish its worth, and people who wished to make representations about the government's decision to end the initiative would have had a meaningful opportunity to influence members of the House of Commons and senators, who should have been much more involved in the decision to end Canagrex.

The second interesting perspective arises out of the reasoning behind the government's decision announced in November 1984, which is a striking example of the triumph of conservative ideology over reason and common sense.

In studying the subject matter of Bill C-2, the Senate committee heard from representatives from three government departments having some responsibility for agricultural trade: Agriculture Canada, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, as well as the Export Development Corporation. The information provided by the witnesses, to my mind, makes it quite clear that the Canagrex initiative was well worth trying, and that the government's criticisms of it and doubts about its usefulness are undeserved. In any event, the most troubling aspect of the matter is that the government pre-judged Canagrex and could not rise above that prejudice to give the agency an opportunity to help the agricultural economy at a time of great need.

• (1450)

I quote from a Department of Agriculture witness who appeared before the Agriculture Committee:

It is clear that the intended purposes of Canagrex were admirable. It was to identify new markets, to promote exports of Canadian products, to participate in bilateral trade deals, to provide export counselling to industry, to make grants, contributions, loans and loan guarantees to exporters and to import, export, buy and sell agricultural products.

The witness went on to say that most of these functions were now being carried out by various government departments. The committee was told that this was happening in a more cost effective manner. On the other hand, it was also told that, while Canagrex had a 30 person staff, Agriculture Canada, by itself, now has 70 people working on international trade, not to mention those working in other departments.

The fact that so many people in so many departments are now working to do the job that Canagrex was doing does not mean that it has been adequately replaced.

All of the witnesses appearing before the committee told us that the focus which Canagrex would have given to Canadian international agricultural trade had to be substituted for within government departments. The committee was told, and I quote:

Co-operation and aggressive networking or sharing of information are the ways I see to replace, although perhaps not perfectly, the focus that Canagrex would have had had it been allowed to live longer.

These statements expressed the point exactly; Canagrex was a useful and important vehicle that was not permitted to realize its potential.

From the point of view of the agricultural industry, one of the main benefits of Canagrex was the "one-stop shopping" aspect that it afforded. Although the committee was told that Agriculture Canada's Export Market Division is now taking over that role, the committee was also told that the Department of External Affairs Trade Section still has the main responsibility for trade.

As well, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, with its Program for Export Market Development, and the Export Development Corporation have major roles to play. I am aware that these departments and agencies played a part in the process while Canagrex did operate. Nevertheless, it would seem that terminating Canagrex has removed a focal point and has simply complicated the business of exporting, especially for new entrants into trade. Many of the complaints made during Senate committee hearings on the original Canagrex legislation had to do with excessive bureaucracy, red tape and an inability to find information easily.

I believe that with Canagrex there was the possibility of assisting the agricultural industry to develop a greater export potential. If one were to look on the bright side, one could take comfort in the knowledge that the dissolution of Canagrex forced departments to focus on agricultural trade issues and to at least try to get on among themselves. As Yvan Jacques, Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture Canada's International Programs Branch, told the committee, "the spirit of Canagrex has lived on." It is evident, though, that the government, as a whole, has had to play catch-up since it shut Canagrex down.

I regret the demise of Canagrex, and I hope that in the near future a federal Government of Canada will see fit to provide the framework that the agricultural industry presently lacks for a more focused and effective initiative to assist our agricultural sector in fully realizing its export potential.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I also thank Senator Balfour for his explanation of the bill. It seemed to me, however, that he has been misled if he believes that the private sector has moved in to fill the role that was intended for Canagrex.

This bill represents the final act of a doctrinaire Conservative government in destroying an important government-sponsored trade vehicle. As Senator Hays has said, Canagrex actually died by executive order three years ago.

Senator Sinclair: It was murdered!

Senator Stanbury: The only reason for its death is that it was a Liberal idea which would have been of tremendous value to the agriculture producers, but which ran counter to the blind dogma of the Tory party. Their dogma demands that government intervention is bad, even when a great need exists and there is no private organization to fill that need.

The Canagrex idea had its origin at the convention of the Liberal Party in 1973. It came from Ralph Ferguson, then a farmer from western Ontario, and a group of other farm delegates. The idea was to produce a trade vehicle to serve Canadian agricultural producers abroad. There was great respect for the Canadian Wheat Board at home and abroad, but there was no such vehicle for producers of other farm products.

The need was clear. My first exposure to it was in February 1974 when I led the first trade mission to Baghdad. I came home with an order for 40 million eggs at a time when the Canadian Egg Marketing Board was unable to dispose of its surplus. That was just one of the farm products then in massive demand internationally.

CEMA sent an emissary to Baghdad to investigate what I had found, but he came home discouraged. The Iraqis had no facilities to store or to distribute the eggs. They would have rotted on the docks. However, the authorities in Baghdad—who in 1974 had lots of money available—said, "That's all right. We will give Canada the job of building the storage facilities and the distribution system." That would have been a multi-million dollar project, not unlike the telecommunications job given to Bell Canada by Saudi Arabia a year or two later.

But we had no organization in Canada which could put together the marketing of an agricultural product with the ancillary capital projects required to get that product to the foreign consumer. Had Canagrex been in place, that opportunity, and many similar opportunities, would not have been lost.

Eugene Whelan, the then Minister of Agriculture, asked me to head a task force to discuss the possibility of an agency, an agency which later became Canagrex. I met with all of the producer organizations across Canada and found enthusiastic support for the idea. Unfortunately, there followed a long period of negotiations between the officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Agriculture as to which department should have the responsibility for the corporation. That was finally resolved, and the legislation was passed incorporating Canagrex. It was not the animal that we had first contemplated, which would have been run by the producers and would have been less complicated in purpose, but the final result met our needs, and we were happy to have it.

Unfortunately, it never had time to get into action before a doctrinaire Conservative government got into the act, supposedly on behalf of private enterprise, and to prevent government intervention in the field.

But what has been the result? No element of the private enterprise community has filled the vacuum. Segmented and fragmented efforts have been made, but a coordinating agency has been missing. Instead, the government has to gerry-build a conglomeration of departmental agencies, employing far more civil servants than Canagrex or anything before to handle, in a typically uncoordinated and bureaucratic manner, some of the functions to which Canagrex would have brought an aggressive focus.

It is too late now to save Canagrex, but at least we can be optimistic that a less doctrinaire and more realistic government will resurrect it in the near future.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators, may I—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Balfour speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Stanbury. I am not sure if I caught my honourable colleague's comments accurately. Did he say "40,000 eggs" or "40,000 dozen eggs"?

Senator Stanbury: I said 40 million eggs.

Senator Argue: A lot of eggs.

Senator Haidasz: They would make a lot of omelets; two for every Canadian.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

NEWFOUNDLAND

QUESTION NO. 8 ON ORDER PAPER—BREAKDOWN OF SPECIFIC FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SPENDING—REPLIES BY MINISTERS
TABLED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a reply to a written question asked by Senator Marshall. It is Question No. 8 on the order paper, and it contains a great deal of information. As the answer is voluminous, Senator Marshall has generously agreed to allow it to be tabled rather than printed. Copies are available from the Journals Branch.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What is the question?

Senator Doody: I shall read it:

1. What is the breakdown of spending directed to the Province of Newfoundland, by federal district, on (i) regional development; (ii) equalization payments (where applicable) and (iii) established program funding?
2. What is the list of each project and the amount allocated by federal district?
3. What is the cost-sharing ratio in each project?

I am sure that it is of great interest to all honourable senators.

Answers tabled.

MR. WILLIAM J. CULLETON, ASSISTANT EDITOR OF DEBATES
(ENGLISH)—FELICITATIONS ON COMPLETION OF 25 YEARS' SERVICE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to draw to the attention of the Senate the fact that Mr. William J. Culleton, Assistant Editor of Debates (English), has just completed 25 years' service to the Senate. I am sure all honourable senators would wish to recognize the fact and congratulate him on the event.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE REPORT DEPOSITED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that Senator Tremblay has deposited with the Clerk of the Senate the report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord of 1987.

Honourable senators, when shall the report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Doody, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—ORDER RE CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move:

That commencing on Wednesday, 7th October, 1987, and on each subsequent Wednesday, the Speaker shall, unless otherwise ordered, interrupt the proceedings at 3.00 o'clock p.m., at which time the Senate shall adjourn during pleasure to form a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no problem with the motion or with granting leave. However, I do wish to bring to the attention of the Senate that, of course, government legislation does have a place on the order paper, and I would fully expect that a way will be found to accommodate the legitimate desires of the government in having its legislation passed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think that is quite reasonable. It is also the role of the Senate to give priority to legislation, for the reasons expressed by Senator Doody.

However, we have discussed this aspect of it and I have assured Senator Doody that we will cooperate to find a way to solve both of those imperatives. By that I mean our desire to deal with the accord and the government's legitimate right to have priority given to its legislation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate respecting the sale of Teleglobe Canada to Memotec some time ago. This question is a follow-up to a number of questions I asked him earlier this year, and particularly on February 17.

• (1410)

At that time the Leader of the Government in the Senate, after a number of highly defensive answers, did give an undertaking on February 17. He said:

I think the honourable senator can be satisfied that if there is the slightest indication of any leak or impropriety on the part of any person, those matters will be followed up by the RCMP or the appropriate authority.

Inasmuch as the Montreal Stock Exchange has found some impropriety, namely, insider trading, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not the government is going to initiate the investigation that I asked for on February 17. The Leader of the Government promised that there would be an inquiry as to the process inside the government as to why and how Memotec's bid was accepted over and above all other bids.

This is as important today as it was then, because neither the Montreal Stock Exchange nor the Toronto Stock Exchange has the competence to investigate actions taking place in the government process. They do, of course, have the competence to investigate whether or not insider trading took place on either one of those markets, and they have done that. However, if they find that to be the case, which they apparently have in the case of one person, they do not have the competence to look into the government process to see whether or not there was a leak or if information was passed to anyone in advance of the date that Memotec's bid for Teleglobe was accepted.

I would like the minister to tell us if the government will be taking any action to clear up this matter and, if so, when that action will be undertaken.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the honourable senator who has just spoken raised these matters some months ago. I took the occasion today to review the exchange that we had at that time. His concern was, and apparently still is, that there might have been a leak somewhere in the government that led to the unusual trading in the stock of Memotec at a given point.

I gave the undertaking that he has referred to, namely, if there was any indication of a leak from the government or any questionable involvement by anyone in the government, those matters would be followed up. As far as I am aware, nothing of the kind has been discovered. Therefore, I must assume nothing of the kind has happened.

However, I would like to add that the investigation to which I referred earlier by the director who was appointed under the Canada Business Corporations Act is continuing to ascertain if there is any evidence of additional civil liability by other persons. As the honourable senator has noted, a number of people have been charged under the Quebec Securities Act. Since that matter is now before the courts, it would be inappropriate for me to comment, except to say that the charges against them relate to trading in securities of Memotec while allegedly in possession of confidential information about the corporation's proposal to purchase Teleglobe. The charges also relate to the possibility of improper trading, using confidential information after learning the intention of that company to make a bid.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a supplementary question. The press reports tell us that the basis of the charges was that they were aware that Memotec had made a bid for Teleglobe, which was not public information at the time. I understand that.

Senator Murray: If I understand the situation correctly, all of the people involved are people who have a relationship with Memotec and not people who have a relationship with the government.

Senator Olson: If I ever heard an unusual statement, that is one—that is, that they do not have any relationship with the government that is in office.

I will leave that for the moment, because it is also clear that somebody—a number of people, apparently—believed that Memotec's bid was going to be accepted. There was some leak or some indication or firm information—I cannot say absolutely firm information—given in advance that led some of those who have been charged, and perhaps others, to invest money in the hope that they would make more.

An Hon. Senator: Speculation!

Senator Olson: Well, someone says "speculation." The question that needs to be answered, and which is not being investigated, is what kind of activity was undertaken inside the government, either by its advisers or by members of the government, that would indicate Memotec's bid was going to be accepted.

The leader has now said that there is no indication yet of impropriety there. He gave an undertaking that there would be an investigation, or what he called a follow-up, if there was any indication of impropriety.

Is the fact that the Quebec Securities Commission has laid a charge of insider information not an indication of impropriety as far as the government is concerned?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when this subject came up several months ago I undertook to follow up on any information of that kind that was unearthed during the course of the various investigations that were ongoing. That undertaking stands.

I challenge the honourable senator to produce the information, if he has any, on which he founds the suspicions to which he has referred on a number of occasions—that is, that something improper was going on within the government.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I can state that briefly. I say there is evidence, an indication or the suspicion that something improper was going on inside the government, because those who engaged in the trading of Memotec shares knew in advance that Memotec's bid was going to be accepted. That is clear.

Senator Murray: Knew what in advance?

Senator Olson: When the government sees a prima facie case, the government should initiate an inquiry. I am asking the Leader of the Government if he is going to deliver on his undertaking that there be a proper in-depth inquiry by a committee of Parliament to find out what kind of action led to the conclusions that we are finding in some of the investigations conducted outside of government, but by people who do not have the competence to investigate the government's activities?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have heard no suggestion in the announcements that have been made by the various authorities that there was any impropriety from within the government.

If I understand the allegations against a number of individuals, it is that they traded in the stock of Memotec, knowing that Memotec intended to make a bid for Teleglobe. That, as I understand it, is the basis of the allegations, and perhaps I should not comment any further than that.

I tell the Senate that an investigation has been ongoing as to whether there have been any violations of the Canada Business Corporations Act. Mr. Andre, the minister responsible, told the House of Commons yesterday that he asked the director to expedite the investigation so that the government will have the results as soon as possible. The government will table those results in Parliament as soon as it is appropriate to do so.

● (1420)

Senator Olson: I have a final question. Perhaps one should never say that, but I think this is as far as I will carry this today. Is it the opinion of the government that the evidence that has been brought to light to date—that is, as to the impropriety of Mr. Blaikie and others involved in trading in Memotec shares—is not sufficient indication of impropriety or that some leak or other information got out of the government ahead of the actual date when the public knew that they were going to accept Memotec's bid? Is that insufficient evidence for the government to take some action?

Senator Murray: Again, honourable senators, I tell the house that nothing that I have seen in the reports of the charges that have been laid and of the investigation by the authorities in Quebec would lead me to believe that there is any suggestion of impropriety on the part of anyone within the government. I add to that that an investigation is ongoing by the director under the Canada Business Corporations Act, and we shall see what that investigation produces. When we receive a report, we will make it available to Parliament.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Can the government leader say whether or not the government has agreed in principle to making another deficiency payment to western grain producers this year? If the answer is in the affirmative, could he give us some general idea as to what the extent of the payment may be?

It is fair to say that there are two schools of thought out there: one is that the government will not make any payment at all; the other is that the government's payment is likely to be more generous this time than last time. I am soliciting the facts from the minister on that question.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I appreciate the minister's answer—and perhaps he has already answered this question—but can he assure the Senate that no gun is being held to the heads of the provincial premiers to the effect that they should cough up more money for agriculture or for grains and oilseed producers before a payment is made? That seemed to be an inference in a question asked in the House of Commons. My reading of the reply as found in Hansard was that it was not completely clear. I am not saying that as an accusation, I am just asking: Is it clear that there does not have to be any trade-off before a payment is made?

Senator Murray: Once again, honourable senators, our past record on these matters is the best guarantee of our future performance. We are not holding a gun to anyone's head. We do believe that it will be in the interests of the country and of the farmers that we—the federal government, the provinces and the industry—tackle this problem together.

Senator Argue: Well, honourable senators, I do not really think that that is a satisfactory answer. We were getting along pretty well up until now. The trouble that the grain industry is in in Canada has been caused by the fact that the Canadian government has refused to support Canadian farmers in a way comparable to the support provided by the American government to American producers. The American wheat producer gets close to $6 a bushel in Canadian funds; the Canadian producer gets less than half that amount. That tells the whole story.

Is the government considering increasing those deficiency payments on grain and oilseeds to western producers to an extent approaching $3 billion or $4 billion?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the assertions of the honourable senator not only do not tell the whole story, they do not even tell a good part of the story.

Senator Argue: What I said was that a Canadian farmer gets less than half what the American farmer gets in the U.S., and that is a fact.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is barely telling even part of the story so far as the relationship between the federal government and the farmers is concerned.

I repeat to him that we are determined to stand by the farmers of Canada. We hope to give them as much assistance as we can and to do so in collaboration with provincial governments, if that can be done. I think there is a role here for both levels of government to tackle this problem.

Senator Argue: What you give with one hand you take away with the other. Crop insurance, that is what you want to have.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to return to the question asked by Senator Olson with regard to two points. The first is that, in passing, the Leader of the Government in the Senate made reference to, I take it, the sub judice convention. I want to put on the record that I do not believe that the sub judice convention would apply to the investigations by the securities offices. But he did not really invoke it. I just make that comment in case it should be invoked with reference to the Memotec and Teleglobes question.

The other point is that I want to understand what his undertaking was to Senator Olson. I thought what Senator

Olson was getting at was that the charges or the allegations might not be based simply on what the persons charged—or against whom the allegations are made—may have felt about the intention of Memotec to make a bid but on whether they had information that, in fact, that bid had been accepted.

Senator Frith: I understand that. I will give the Leader of the Government a full opportunity to explain.

If the allegations relate to information had between the time the bid was accepted and the time it was made public, then it would be within the particular province of the government and, perhaps, of a committee of Parliament to look at what the proceedings and steps were in order to determine whether that was possible or not. I think that is what he was getting at.

If I understood the undertaking of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, it was that if there is evidence or some indication that that may be true then, of course, he would follow it up and would be sympathetic to further investigations beyond the investigations made either by the securities people or under the companies act.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me put it very simply: We are charged—

Senator Olson: You are charged?

Senator Murray: We have a mandate. I trust the honourable senator is speaking in jest, and I will take his interjection in that spirit.

We have the duty to administer and enforce a number of federal statutes, including the Canada Business Corporations Act. The purpose of the investigations at present being carried out by various federal officials is to ascertain whether there is any evidence of any offence under that or any other statute that is within our responsibility. I am not attempting to situate a possible offence at one time or another in the process. If there is evidence of a contravention of any of those statutes, then the appropriate action will be taken.

● (1430)

Senator Frith: Would the Leader of the Government not agree that any government has a responsibility to be sure that people cannot profit from the sharing of information—such as the knowledge of the acceptance of a bid—with someone prior to its being made public?

Senator Murray: Well, of course I agree. I think that is covered in not one but in several statutes that are the responsibility of the federal or, perhaps, the provincial governments to administer. The investigations that are taking place, as I indicated several months ago, are exceedingly thorough. Mrs. McDougall, the Minister of State (Privatization), has placed before the officials all of the information regarding the process insofar as it affects her ministerial responsibility. Her staff, her records, and so on, have been made available. As I have said, the investigation is very thorough. I presume that is why it has taken so much time.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Andre has asked the director to expedite the matter in view of the fact that these other charges have been laid in Montreal. We may have a report soon, in which case we will be able to share it with Parliament.

Senator Frith: These investigations are all private, are they not? They are not public.

Senator Murray: That is correct.

Senator Frith: As I understand it, then, the responsibility that the government feels in this matter, expressed through its spokesman, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, is not limited to the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Senator Murray: I was about to say that I presume the evidence arising from the proceedings that have been instituted in Montreal will be made public.

Senator Frith: What I was saying when you were consulting Senator Flynn was in furtherance of my purpose in the first place, which was to understand more fully what your undertaking was. It was to pursue, consistent with your earlier undertaking, the government's responsibility in such matters, which you have said is not limited to what is covered by the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator can take that for granted.

Senator Frith: Good!

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—PROSPECTS FOR RESUMPTION

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. All senators have been following with a great deal of interest what has been going on in Washington and Ottawa with regard to free trade or a comprehensive agreement to enhance trade between Canada and the United States. Can the Leader of the Government assist us by telling us what progress is being made as to the resumption of negotiations at this time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am not sure that I can add much to what honourable senators already know from statements made by my colleagues. The two governments continue to exchange views to see whether a basis exists for the resumption of negotiations. Our colleagues, Ms Carney and Mr. Wilson, reported to cabinet this morning, and we will have a further meeting later today.

Senator Sinclair: Could the government leader inform us whether the Prime Minister has utilized every initiative that is open to him to bring about a successful conclusion?

Senator Murray: We have been doing that for two years.

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, on September 15, 1987, I asked the Leader of the Government to explain how it was that in the two weeks preceding that date congressional leaders of the United States—who have and always have had the final word over the executive—had said they had only just become aware that a binding dispute-settlement mechanism was a deal-breaker, the bottom line, for Canada. After I asked him why we had not made these people aware of this fact much earlier during those two years that he has spoken about, Senator Murray said:

Honourable senators, I cannot explain what one senator or congressman, or two senators or congressmen, may have known or not known, or may have said on television.

Now here we are facing a proposition in which Senator Murray has said that the Prime Minister “has made it very clear that a binding dispute settlement mechanism was, for us, absolutely essential to any bilateral trade treaty with the United States.”

We hear that we are now discussing not a binding dispute-settlement mechanism covering everything, that is to say, something that is not necessarily binding but definitive. So what is this? I have a feeling that we have not just been kept in ignorance of the inner workings of the negotiations to preserve some kind of secrecy but that we have been misled, not by the Leader of the Government in the Senate but by his government. Would the Leader of the Government clarify this?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will not take the responsibility of trying to plumb the feelings of my honourable friend.

Senator Gigantès: Well, would the Leader of the Government give us some facts? Is a “binding dispute-settlement mechanism” still our absolute bottom line, as quoted in Hansard at page 1812 in the right-hand column? I repeat that you said:

... for us, absolutely essential to any bilateral trade treaty with the United States.

Is that still the bottom line today—on all issues, with no exceptions?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have before me the quotation that the honourable senator has attributed to me, but let me state again the fact that for Canada a binding dispute-settlement mechanism is an essential part of any bilateral free trade agreement with the United States. Does that satisfy my honourable friend?

Senator Gigantès: “Binding”? We will hold you to it. Not “definitive”—“binding.”

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

LUBICON LAKE INDIANS—NEGOTIATIONS FOR ALBERTA RESERVE—APPOINTMENT OF NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he can tell me when a new federal negotiator will be appointed to try to reactivate discussions with the Lubicon Lake Indians on the question of a reserve for them in Alberta—something to which they are entitled and have been waiting for over the past several decades.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am afraid that I cannot answer that question. My old boss, Mr. Fulton, was involved in that some months back and brought in a report to the department on that matter. Since that time various statements have been made and I believe that some negotiations have taken place. Another lawyer has represented the federal government in some of those matters, but I will have to make inquiries to see whether another negotiator is to be appointed. Is the honourable senator suggesting that we undertook to appoint another negotiator?

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that Mr. Tassé, who had been conducting those negotiations, removed himself from them for personal reasons, and that to date a successor has not been appointed. I was wondering whether or not the Leader of the Government could ascertain whether the appointment of a new negotiator might be in the works.

I ask the question particularly because of the recent outbreak of tuberculosis among those Indians, which is tragic evidence of a degree of deprivation which we in this house—and, indeed, in the country—really cannot tolerate.

Referring to the report of the Honourable Davie Fulton, for whom I share the Leader of the Government's respect, I wonder whether the leader can find out when that report will be made public.

Senator Murray: I will do that. I thank the honourable senator for refreshing my memory. It was Mr. Roger Tassé who took up the matter, following Mr. Fulton, and he has, indeed, removed himself. I shall see what the intention of the department is in this regard.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, we know from reports in the press originating with the Premier of Newfoundland that the discussions on the fisheries and boundaries question between Canada and France are under way. Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate, either today or at an early date, give us a statement on the status and progress of those negotiations?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall do my best. Meanwhile I remind my friend that we still have on our order paper the Committee of the Whole inquiry into this matter.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I realize that very well. I thought that perhaps a full statement by the minister might save the Senate some time, the time that would be used if we went into Committee of the Whole at an early date.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall take the advice offered by the honourable senator. I regret that he is tiring so soon of that Committee of the Whole initiative. Perhaps the honourable senator might indicate what information in particular he is seeking. I am not sure that it would be helpful at this time to discuss in any detail the negotiations between Canada and France on this matter or to discuss the Canadian government's position, which I think in general is quite well known. If there is some particular information he would like to have, I would invite him to pose some questions.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I had in mind particularly the reason for Senator Brian Peckford's withdrawal—

Senator Doody: "Senator" Peckford?

Senator Stewart: I am sorry, Premier Peckford.

Senator Doody: Do you know something we don't know?

Senator Stewart: There is a vacancy for Newfoundland—

Senator Frith: He might well appoint himself under the Meech Lake Accord!

Senator Stewart:—and I assume that if Mr. Peckford were to resign before an election his successor would be happy to appoint Mr. Peckford to that vacancy.

Senator Sinclair: On the suggestion of Senator Doody, of course.

Senator Stewart: We know that the Premier of Newfoundland has withdrawn his representatives from those discussions. The specific question to which I would like an answer now is whether those representatives were withdrawn because of some new concession to France or whether the concession is the one set forth in the original agreement, which agreement was in place before the Premier of Newfoundland or his representatives took their place at the table.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have before me a copy of the statement made by Premier Peckford on the matter the other night. I can, however, obtain a copy of Mr. Crosbie's reply, which, in my judgment, covers the situation quite fully.

SPORT

BEN JOHNSON—ALLEGED MISTREATMENT OF WORLD CHAMPION SPRINTER BY VANCOUVER AIRPORT CUSTOMS OFFICIALS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, knowing the government leader to be a fair-minded man, I wonder if he would share my concern and perhaps find some way for the government—or perhaps he could personally undertake to do so—to make amends for the disgraceful treatment to which Ben Johnson was subjected yesterday in Vancouver. Ben Johnson, as the leader will know, is a 25-year-old world class track superstar who has been breaking records all around the world, including winning the World Championship in Rome one month ago.

I hope honourable senators will forgive me for making a short statement, but I am thinking of the way the Americans treat their superstar athletes as compared to the way we treated this superstar yesterday. This 25-year-old Canadian has shattered all the world records. Yesterday he arrived in Vancouver. Apparently, there was no Canadian delegation to meet him. Instead, he was asked to pay $1,900 in duty on prizes he had won, including a Japanese ceremonial sword, and so on. As a result, he was delayed for two and a half hours, causing him to miss a flight which would have enabled him to attend a reception in Toronto at 8.30 last evening. The reception did not take place until 11 o'clock.

I anguish over the treatment of this young Canadian superstar, particularly when I think of how the Americans would have handled the situation. I am wondering whether there is anything the Leader of the Government or his colleagues can do to rectify the situation.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, of course, I know who Ben Johnson is, as do, I think, most Canadians, and we celebrate his achievements on behalf of Canada. I am not aware of the matters to which the honourable senator has drawn my attention. I shall look into them to see whether there has been some rather over-zealous enforcement of the rules or whether we simply have the rules to blame for this kind of incident. In any case, I shall look into the matter and see what kind of report I can bring back.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Would it be going too far to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to arrange for an apology to this Canadian superstar, who has broken world records, for having to pay $1,900 in duty on trophies that he won, trophies that he was bringing to this country and which we should be proud and honoured to receive? We should be honoured to have such a superstar. I think Parliament and the government owes the man an apology, and perhaps a public apology could be made.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if I could find the minister or ministers of some time ago who drafted the laws and regulations that caught Mr. Johnson in this unfortunate predicament—

Senator Argue: Why not be generous?

Senator Murray: —I would obtain the apology.

Senator Frith: What a gracious response!

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I am quite sure that if this young man came from the Prime Minister's riding he would not be treated in this way.

POTATO INDUSTRY—SUBSIDY PAYMENT FOR 1985 CROP YEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Earlier this afternoon I heard him say that the Minister of Agriculture wanted to treat all farmers fairly and equally. Could he tell us whether or not the government intends to assist the potato farmers of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and the rest of Canada for the terrific loss they suffered as a result of the poor potato prices of 1985, and will a subsidy payment be going out to these farmers before October 13, 1987?

Senator Argue: You'll find out!

Senator Murray: However, I have answered this question on a previous occasion. I am sorry, but I do not have anything to add at this time.

POTATO INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF INSPECTION FEES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Would the Leader of the Government take under consideration and tell the Minister of Agriculture with regard to Prince Edward Island, which is a very small province that exports about 90 per cent of its potatoes—consequently, it has inspections on 90 per cent of its crop—that he is not being very fair to P.E.I. by doubling the inspection fees, which inspections were always free until September 4, 1984? This year the minister doubled the inspection fees as compared to the amount by which he increased them last year. Consequently, Prince Edward Island has been harder hit than any other part of Canada simply because it exports 90 per cent of its potato crop. New Brunswick is next, because they also export a large percentage of their potatoes. The provinces who can probably afford these fees use most of their potatoes within their own boundaries and, therefore, do not have to pay these fees. Would the leader ask the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider this increase which amounts to doubling the inspection fees for potatoes in this country?

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to the following oral questions. Following the usual procedure, I will identify the question, and if honourable senators wish the answer read into the record, I shall be happy to do so. Otherwise, I will ask that the answers be printed as part of today's proceedings. I would add that some of these answers are quite lengthy.

GRAIN—1987 CROP YEAR—DECLINE IN PRICES—GOVERNMENT RELIEF MEASURES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The first answer is to a question raised on August 10, 1987, by the Honourable H.A. Olson regarding Agriculture—Grain—1987 Crop Year—Decline in Prices—Government Relief Measures.

Agriculture expenditures have increased by over 300 per cent to $3.8 billion in the first two and a half years of this government. In total, the government has taken over 400 initiatives worth over $6 billion, the bulk of which has been of immediate benefit to farmers.

Existing government programs address the problems of producers through various mechanisms. Two such programs are the Western Grain Stabilization Program (WGSP) and crop insurance. Payments to producers under these programs during the past three years total $2.1 billion and $1.1 billion respectively. The WGSP interim payment of $705 million paid out this spring is a record and will be followed by a final payment later in this crop year.

Additional payments have been made to grain producers under the Agricultural Stabilization Act (ASA). The ASA stabilizes the prices of other agricultural commodities including corn, soybeans, wheat, oats and barley grown outside the prairie provinces. In 1985/86, federal payments to producers amounted to $332 million. It is likely that a similar or even larger payout will be in made in 1986-87.

The government implemented the $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program (SCGP) in response to the world agricultural trade war between the U.S. and the European Community (EC). This program was available to all producers of the ten major grains and oilseeds grown in Canada.

Export subsidies of the U.S. and the EC have reduced world prices for grains and oilseeds to the detriment of Canadian farmers. The Prime Minister has clearly stated that the government has and will continue to support our farmers in the face of this devastating trade war. Consultations with farm leaders are in progress to arrive at a consensus on how best to assist farmers in the coming year.

The root of the price problem lies in foreign farm support policies and thus a true solution can only be achieved at the international level. For this reason, the reduction in agricultural export subsidies is a priority for Canada in its international negotiations. Canadian representatives are pursuing this issue aggressively at the current round of talks on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and at the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). The Prime Minister is also discussing the reduction of subsidies at a variety of international conferences and summits, as are Ministers Wise and Mayer. It is through such negotiations that we can ultimately achieve a fairer trading environment for all agricultural exporters.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

INUIT OF WESTERN ARCTIC LAND CLAIMS SETTLEMENT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF DISBURSEMENT OF FUNDS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question raised in the Senate on August 10, 1987, by the Honourable D.G. Steuart regarding Aboriginal Peoples—Inuit of Western Arctic Land Claims Settlement—Request for Investigation of Disbursement of Funds.

(The answer follows:)

One of the primary objectives of the Inuvialuit Final Agreement (IFA) was to give the Inuvialuit the ability to manage and control their own affairs. The Agreement therefore provided for corporate structures, accountable to the Inuvialuit, in which the government would have no involvement. These are private corporations responsible for the management of the settlement funds provided pursuant to the Agreement. The funds in question are outright payments from the federal government to the Inuvialuit. As the IFA provides no mechanism for an accounting of settlement moneys as private corporations, they are not subject to government audit or control. The government, therefore, has no basis on which to carry out an investigation as was suggested. Those Inuvialuit who have concerns with the investment decisions that have been made should raise those concerns with their representatives in the respective Inuvialuit Community Corporation or the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation.

REFUGEES

DISPOSITION OF SHIP USED FOR TRANSPORTATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question asked in the Senate by Senator Paul Lucier regarding Refugees—Disposition of Ship Used for Transportation.

The vessel Amelie, which was used to bring 174 refugees to Canada, is presently under Customs seizure in Halifax. The final disposition of the vessel is unknown due to legal proceedings in the Federal Court of Canada initiated by a foreign company claiming rights to the vessel for damages incurred prior to the seizure. Should the Court rule in favour of the Crown and if there are no successful third parties, the vessel will be sold by public auction or tender with the proceeds going to the Crown.

TRANSPORT

TRANSFER OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL SERVICE FROM OTTAWA TO GATINEAU

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is in response to a question raised in the Senate on August 11, 1987, by Senator Hartland de M. Molson regarding Transport—Transfer of Air Traffic Control Service from Ottawa to Gatineau.

The implementation of bilingual flight information services within the National Capital Region will not in any way affect the present provision of Air Traffic Control service. This service is provided by the Ottawa Control Tower and Ottawa Terminal Control Unit, and will continue to be provided by these facilities at Ottawa International Airport.

It is the intention of Transport Canada, however, to consolidate the provision of flight information services within the National Capital Region and, at the same time, to offer bilingual service to pilots wishing to file flight plans, obtain weather briefings, conduct air-ground communications of a non-control nature, and receive other information related to the planning of a safe and efficient flight. This step is being taken in response to complaints from the Commissioner of Official Languages about the absence of bilingual air-ground communications within the National Capital Region and from the Office of the Auditor General with respect to the duplication of services brought about by the presence at Ottawa of an Air Traffic Control Tower, a Flight Service Station, and a Weather Office, all providing overlapping service.

There are presently two Flight Service Stations (FSS) serving the National Capital Region, one at Ottawa Airport and one at Gatineau. The Ottawa FSS is under-utilized and is therefore being moved and combined with the Gatineau FSS which meets the criteria for a manned Flight Service facility. It is expected that this move will permit operating efficiencies not possible under the existing arrangement and at the same time fulfill departmental objectives in respect of the provision of flight information service in both official languages.

It should be re-emphasized that the present Air Traffic Control Service at Ottawa International Airport will not be affected. Implementation of the plan is scheduled for October 1, 1987.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF CONCERNS OF MILITARY FAMILIES—STATUS OF REPORT AND NATURE OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised in the Senate on August 28, 1987, by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding National Defence—Committee Study of Concerns of Military Families—Status of Report and Nature of Recommendations.

(The answer follows:)

The Advisory Group appointed by the Minister of National Defence to look into existing policy regarding political activity on military bases has been submitted. The report is now being carefully reviewed by departmental officials and the Minister. The Minister has taken note of the Honourable Senator's request to have the report tabled and will consider the Senator's representation when a decision is made.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987 CROP YEAR

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer to a question raised in the Senate on August 28, 1987, by the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn, and on September 16, 1987, by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding Agriculture—Deficiency Payments to Western Grain Farmers for 1987 Crop Year.

The federal government's major thrust is to resolve (export) subsidy and surplus-related problems at the international level. In the interim, the government will continue meeting with farm leaders and their provincial counterparts to design short-term assistance measures which will cushion the impact of the trade subsidy war.

The Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. John Wise, met with farm leaders in Winnipeg on August 27 to discuss future assistance to grain and oilseed producers. The majority of farm leaders had reached a consensus on a proposal for a future assistance program. Mr. Wise indicated to the leaders that he and his cabinet colleague, the Hon. C. Mayer, would have to be satisfied that the proposal was fair and equitable. If these criteria were met, the proposal could possibly serve as a basis for future assistance.

Mr. Wise clearly stated that the federal government will stand behind Canadian farmers. However, he did not commit the federal government to any dollar value for assistance. Any program and associated funding has to be approved by the government.

The $3 billion figure quoted in the media was one of several numbers suggested by the farm leaders as the amount of money required to maintain farmers' incomes. Mr. Wise and Mr. Mayer have heard suggestions ranging from $1.6 billion to $5 billion, and will likely hear others. It should also be noted that statutory assistance to grain and oilseed producers under the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Act amounted to over $1 billion for crop year 1986/87 and will again be substantial in 1987/88.

Mr. Wise clearly stated that the proposal would have to compete for funding with other urgent and pressing issues facing the government. This is especially true when the federal government is committed to reducing the deficit.

The government is now in the process of developing a wide range of options for consideration by cabinet as to how to assist Canadian grain producers. An assessment of the farm leaders' proposal is a part of that process.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—PROPOSED TUNNEL OR CAUSEWAY AND FERRIES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have an answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on September 3, 1987, by the Honourable M. Lorne Bonnell regarding Transport—Prince Edward Island—Proposed Tunnel or Causeway and Ferries.

(The answer follows:)

With regard to the first part of Senator Bonnell's question, the Department of Transport advises that no decision has yet been made regarding replacement ships for the Caribou/Wood Islands ferry service. The matter is, however, under active examination.

On the question of a fixed link between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, the Department of Public Works advises that last year the government funded a series of studies to examine the financial, economic, social and environmental aspects of a fixed crossing.

The results of these studies have recently been reported back to the federal cabinet and the government should soon be in a position to make a decision on the project.

THE LATE CHARLES H.E. ASKWITH

FORMER ACTING GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE BLACK ROD—NOTICE OF MEMORIAL SERVICE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is with sadness that I inform the house that Mr. Charles Askwith died on Sunday last, September 27. As you know, he was the former Acting Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

A memorial service will be held for Mr. Askwith at St. Alban the Martyr Anglican Church, 454 King Edward Avenue, Ottawa, on Saturday, October 10, at 11.30 a.m. I will arrange to have this notice sent to the offices of all honourable senators.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act in three ways: First, it would provide legislative authority for Canada's participation in the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency; second, it would provide funds for the purchase of shares in the agency; and third, it would incorporate an amendment to the Articles of Agreement of the World Bank into the existing legislation.

The principal objective of this bill is to establish legislative authority for Canada's participation in the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency, or MIGA. The convention establishing MIGA was negotiated under the auspices of the World Bank and opened for signature on October 11, 1986. MIGA's goal will be to help Third World countries find much-needed additional resources to finance their development by tapping the private sector. The agency's mandate will be to promote private investment in developing countries and to help create in these countries a climate conducive to foreign investment.

The agency will provide foreign investors with insurance against non-commercial risks such as currency transfer risk, expropriation and similar measures, breach of contract, war and civil disturbance. The agency also has a responsibility to conduct research and disseminate information on investment opportunities in developing member countries as well as to undertake other activities to promote foreign investment.

Foreign private investment will enhance the developmental prospects of host countries through the provision of non-debt creating transfers of resources as well as a transfer of technology and managerial skills. The government has emphasized the importance of the private sector to Third World development and the role to be played by non-debt creating foreign investment. The benefits of MIGA for the developing countries are substantial.

Canadians will also benefit from Canada's participation in MIGA. Over time, MIGA is expected to help improve economic conditions in developing countries. Canadians would stand to benefit from improved export opportunities. More immediately, Canadian companies investing abroad will be able to compete on an equal footing with companies from other countries that have joined MIGA.

The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency will complement national and regional programs rather than compete with them. Canada's Export Development Corporation already provides insurance and guarantee cover for some non-commercial risks. MIGA is therefore expected to focus on guaranteeing investments from members without a national program, co-guaranteeing investments with national and regional agencies, providing re-insurance for national and regional agencies, and guaranteeing investment jointly financed by investors from different member countries.

The convention establishes MIGA as an autonomous international organization. Although legally separate from the World Bank, the President of the World Bank would be ex officio Chairman of the Board of Directors and would nominate MIGA's president. In addition, MIGA is expected to draw heavily on the services of the World Bank Group. This relationship is intended to promote the agency as an international developmental institution and to assist it to gain recognition.

Canada is entitled to purchase 2,965 shares in the agency at a total cost of $32,081,300 U.S. Within 90 days of the convention establishing MIGA coming into force, Canada will be required to pay 10 per cent of the above amount in cash, a further 10 per cent in non-negotiable, non-interest-bearing demand notes. The remaining 80 per cent is subject to call. Accordingly, Bill C-68 also authorizes the Minister of Finance to pay up to $6,416,260 U.S. for the purchase of the shares allotted to Canada under the convention. These funds would come from Canada's official development assistance program.

The bill also provides for a minor amendment to the Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, which is the main component of the World Bank Group. The amendment raises the share of the total voting power required to accept amendments to the institution's Articles of Agreement from 80 to 85 per cent. This amendment was agreed to by Canada and the other industrialized countries as part of the recent negotiations for the funding of the International Development Association, the arm of the World Bank which provides concessional loans to the poorest countries.

Honourable senators, this bill will help developing countries marshal the resources they need to finance development. It will do this without creating new debt obligations for these hard-pressed countries. At the same time it will provide useful investment opportunities for Canadians. It is a bill which deserves our strong support.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, in a moment I shall move the adjournment of the debate. However, there is one question which occurs to me now that I would like to put to the mover of the motion in the expectation that he will elaborate on it at a future time, in the event that he cannot answer it at once.

I would like to ask about the reasoning behind the amendment which increases the proportion of share votes required to accept an amendment to MIGA's articles from 80 per cent to 85 per cent. I would like to know what motivated the nations that asked for this increase to do so. I understand that here in Canada, with respect to our constitutional matters, we are moving towards requiring the unanimous consent of everyone concerned for a constitutional amendment, and I am rather sorry to see an international agency such as MIGA moving the requirement from 80 to 85 per cent. It seems to me that that will make it very difficult in the future to secure amendments. If there is some explanation as to the reason behind this amendment, I would like to hear it now or at a future time.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I do not have an answer to the honourable senator's question at the present time. I shall certainly make an inquiry and I hope I will be able to provide an answer tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Dan Hays, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Wednesday, September 30, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-2, An Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, September 17, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports with the following observations:

The Corporation of Canagrex has been dormant since 1984. Bill C-2 seeks to wind up the affairs of the corporation and to dissolve its statutory framework.

The Committee is aware that the concept of Canagrex was hotly debated within the agricultural community and that there were strong arguments on both sides of the issue. No one disputes the need for agricultural export assistance. Export assistance is, if anything, more crucial now to the viability of many Canadian agricultural commodities than even three years ago.

During the course of its hearings on the subject-matter of the Bill C-2 the Committee heard evidence from Agriculture Canada, the Department of External Affairs (Trade) and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. In each case witnesses told the Committee that each department was working to develop agricultural trade, assistance initiatives. It appears to the Committee that these initiatives closely parallel those which Canagrex itself was created to provide. These include: providing market identification and intelligence; providing promotional and informational services; providing loans and guarantees; and providing grants and contributions to help accelerate product development and promotion.

The Committee reports the Bill C-2, An Act to Dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof without amendment. In doing so it notes that the corporation has been dormant for nearly three years and as a statutory shell currently serves no purpose. The Committee does urge the government to carefully examine the elements of the Canagrex mandate and to ensure that those which could be of benefit to the Canadian farmer are implemented under the mandate of the appropriate departments.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-51

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-51, An Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, since leave is not granted, this motion will be put to the Senate for approval tomorrow.

Senator Frith: It all depends, honourable senators. If it is a substantive matter, I believe a two-day notice is necessary. We could accept the motion tomorrow, if you wish. It comes as a surprise to us, it is the first we have heard of it. We would like to examine the substance of the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is Senator Frith suggesting the motion be brought forward tomorrow?

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted for tomorrow, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, I expected to be asked for an explanation that I could have given. I will do so tomorrow, if the Senate prefers to wait until then.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: It is getting to be a habit with them to give matters much thought.

Senator Frith: Wait and see, Senator Flynn.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

ELECTRONIC MEDIA COVERAGE OF MEETING

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be empowered to permit coverage by the electronic media of its public meeting on Wednesday, September 30, 1987, with the least possible disruption of the hearing.

Honourable senators, I did not know it was necessary to make a motion in this regard. That may be because of my lack of knowledge of procedure. However, I remember that when the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was holding hearings with respect to financial institutions we had before us a witness, and the electronic media, with their television cameras, were present at one of our meetings.

I am told that, in accordance with the procedure, the proper way to deal with this matter is to introduce the motion, and I do so at this time.

In addition to that, I should say that it would be my intention to limit the media coverage to approximately 15 minutes to enable them to take just a few pictures.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, this matter came up at noon today and the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, Senator Sinclair, was good enough to discuss it with me. At that time I told him I intended to speak in opposition to this motion.

Honourable senators, let us understand the request that is being made of us. While I am unenthusiastic about televising the deliberations of this chamber, I am totally in favour of making available to the electronic media any opportunity at all to televise committee hearings. However, we did set down some very clear rules, and those rules were laid down at the time of the hearings of the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee to which Senator Sinclair has already referred. It worked very well at that time. The term "electronic harsard" has a special meaning. At the time of those hearings we used a special room—in fact, the very room that we will be using today.

However, the difficulty in this instance is that the electronic media are coming in to film part of a documentary and are therefore not following the rules which this chamber agreed upon with respect to the unobtrusive positioning of a couple of cameras, certain switching equipment, et cetera.

If certain members of the electronic media desire to film, as part of their documentary, part of the proceedings of a committee hearing—in the same fashion as was done the last time for purposes of news clips—let them follow the same rules that we set down. They can do this. Perhaps it will cost a little more and perhaps it may cause them a little more trouble. However, I say to the chairman of the committee that I do not think he realizes the consequences of allowing a cameraman to come in with one camera and attempt to film a typical Senate committee hearing. I do not think that he fully realizes what is being asked. I say to the chairman that if he were to put it to these members of the electronic media that they should come on Friday, but that in the meantime they will have an opportunity to follow the rules which are all set out and with which we are all agreed, it would be a far better arrangement.

• (1410)

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I quite agree that I do not know anything about the electronic media. However, these people have been filming short segments of people walking down the hall, and things such as that. I do not think this is a big deal. At the same time I think the Senate should accommodate the media by trying to assist them. I do not think we should ask them to come to room 250, East Block, and set up switching and everything they need for the evening news. This is going to be part of a documentary. It will be a small part of it. I was only asking the Senate to accommodate them in that little way, that is all.

There is an expert who knows how to set up and build up and break down people. I am not trying to do that. I am trying to be helpful.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the same permission, I believe, was asked for yesterday and was granted with regard to Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I believe it was the same group.

I understand the point that Senator MacDonald is raising. I agree with him that this is in a different context.

Senator MacDonald: They had to leave.

Senator Frith: That is right. In his comments Senator Sinclair said that he intends to limit them similarly.

Senator MacDonald: No, sir.

Senator Frith: Yes, he said that.

Senator MacDonald: With all respect, Senator Frith, we are talking about two different things.

Yesterday the group were shooting their movies and were asked to leave when Senator Neiman began the proceedings. They were not there during the proceedings. They were simply shooting.

Senator Sinclair is advocating letting these people in with a single camera during the proceedings of the committee. That is a totally different thing.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Sinclair said that he intended to limit them. Perhaps Senator MacDonald did not hear that.

I recognize that some of the members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee felt that while we were in fact sitting, with the chairman present and with submissions being made about what our program should be, that was not treated as part of the meeting. I know that because several members were smoking, insisting that the meeting had not started, and, therefore, they were entitled to smoke.

It was quite clear that the committee, in any event, was sitting. How formal the proceedings were I do not know. The point is that whatever it is they want to do, we had an experience yesterday with them. It seems to me that it worked out fine.

Senator Sinclair: To satisfy Senator MacDonald, I would be quite prepared to tell these people that they can take pictures and then leave before we start hearing witnesses. We will talk among ourselves about some of our other problems.

The Hon. the Speaker: In light of Senator Sinclair's comments, I suppose we do not need a motion.

Senator Sinclair: I am in the hands of my colleagues, because I do not know the rules.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Does this require the unanimous approval of the Senate?

An Hon. Senator: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I repeat that in light of Senator Sinclair's comments, I suppose we do not need a motion. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator MacDonald.]

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray will not be with us this afternoon. He is detained on business elsewhere. I will be pleased to accept any questions as notice and attempt to get the information for my colleagues.

FIJI

VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I know the Deputy Leader of the Government is fully capable of being questioned and transmitting to the appropriate quarters the request for information that I intend to make.

Successive Canadian governments have established a good track record in the promotion of human rights both here and abroad. This present government is no exception. Indeed, there have been a number of constructive interventions by ministers, and the Prime Minister himself, in areas where there were violations of human rights.

Honourable senators, something not known to most parliamentarians, perhaps, is that the largest settlement of Fijians in the world, outside of Fiji, is located in British Columbia. There are approximately 30,000 people of Fijian descent living in British Columbia, primarily on the lower mainland, and they comprise both those of ethnic Indian and Melanesian descent—Canadian citizens and non-citizens. I have received calls of real desperation in recent days regarding the events taking place in that beautiful country of Fiji, which I know some of you have visited. It seems inconceivable to most observers that that beautiful country, with its tradition of democracy, should be subjected within just a few months to two military coups led by the same colonel. The first coup led to a serious attempt by the Governor General of Fiji to establish a National Unity Government. There have been ceaseless meetings held in Fiji to develop cooperation from both of Fiji's main ethnic stocks, but when the plan for the new National Unity Government was announced the other day, revolutionary Colonel Rabuka decided that that was still not to his liking.

I received a telephone call earlier today from Fiji via a Fijian representative living on the west coast. He told me that as of this morning all new members of the coalition cabinet are in jail, that they have been placed on bread and water, and that that has been their plight for the past four or five days. He alleges that all MPs have gone into hiding, that communications have been restricted, that censorship is fully in place, and that the Governor General had been asked to resign—he may even now be under arrest—to make way for a republican form of government.

Two justices who objected to the colonel's activity are said to be in jail, as of this morning, Justice Govind and Justice Mooney. A report in Associated Press 30 minutes ago indicates ominously that Colonel Khadafy has expressed his full support for Colonel Rabuka's activities.

As Canadians, we love to speak about violations of human rights in South Africa. Yet, Fiji is a Commonwealth country, and somehow we think that if a violation of human rights takes place within a Commonwealth country, we should be careful, because, after all, the thinking is that that is just a family problem and that they should be left to work things out for themselves.

I do not believe we should have a double standard. If there are violations of human rights taking place in Fiji, the members of the Commonwealth, and Canada as a senior member of the Commonwealth, should speak out and attempt to offer their good offices to try to restore democracy and harmony in that country.

At the very least, I hope that the Deputy Leader of the Government can give us assurances today that the subject of Fiji and the democratic rights of all Fijians, regardless of descent, will be placed on the agenda of the forthcoming Vancouver Commonwealth Conference. If we can be outspoken about violations of human rights around the world, as alleged by Amnesty International—and I think we should be, and we have even taken some action in that area recently in Parliament—then we must not stand by and do nothing about the events in Fiji. The main shops along Suva—and some honourable senators have been there—have all been burned down. The mobs have set fire to them.

I should like the Deputy Leader of the Government to bring to the Senate a report on what Canada is doing about the Fijian situation.

I have not seen or heard a word from Canada's Ambassador to the United Nations, Stephen Lewis. Perhaps he has spoken out eloquently on the subject, but those words have not appeared in the newspapers I have read or on the television news programs I have listened to. What has he said at the United Nations about this situation? Is this going to be kept as a Fijian family quarrel, or are we going to fight for human rights and put our actions where our sentiments have been for so long?

I ask the deputy leader, not out of a sense of political confrontation but in an earnest quest for the facts, to seek information regarding Fiji and what Canada intends to do about the situation there. Will we arrange to have this put on the agenda at the Commonwealth Conference? Have representations been made at any level to assure the democratic rights of the people of that country?

Finally, is there some source in the Canadian government that those people from Fiji living in Canada can turn to to find out whether their relatives are safe or whether they have been thrown into jail or otherwise mistreated by a seemingly capricious Colonel Rabuka and his supporters?

• (1420)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I want to thank the honourable senator for his eloquent and stirring address. I will see that a copy of it is forwarded to the appropriate department and attempt to get an answer as quickly as possible.

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, twice earlier this year I asked questions concerning the Fiji situation. I asked for the government's assessment of that situation as it progressed. Perhaps that assessment has been prepared over the summer and could be given at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly make inquiries in that regard.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

LUBICON CREES OF ALBERTA—SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS— RELEASE OF NEGOTIATOR'S REPORT—APPOINTMENT OF NEW NEGOTIATOR AND MEDIATOR

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would like to know why the Government of Canada has not been able to resolve the land claim of the Lubicon Crees, which would allow this community to get on with building its future.

I have been informed that in 1899 the Lubicon band was missed by the Treaty 8 Commissioners and that they are, therefore, not a signatory to this treaty. In 1939, realizing this situation, the government proceeded to register the members under the Indian Act and, in 1940, identified a reserve. This process was stopped because of government priorities during the war years and because in 1942 the department erroneously erased half of those registered from the Indian Act list. The majority of these removals were judged to be unfair by Mr. Justice MacDonald of the Alberta Supreme Court. I believe that the Government of Canada does not disagree with this history. In 1981 and again in 1985 the government sought to resolve the claim and redress this injustice.

The Lubicon Crees inhabit an isolated region of northern Alberta and until the late 1970s and early 1980s they enjoyed a traditional way of life based upon hunting. However, in the past few years oil exploration and related road building have caused severe damage to this way of life. These people, without a reserve, without health facilities or adequate housing and schools, are undergoing the terrible effects brought about by developments over which they have no control. It has recently been discovered that 25 per cent of the population of 450 has been exposed to tuberculosis, with 28 cases of active tuberculosis under treatment.

In short, the aboriginal rights of the Lubicon Crees have not been adequately recognized by Canada. The urgent health and social needs of these people are not being provided for by Canada. As a fellow Canadian and as an aboriginal person, I, personally, do not like to think that Canada does not have the sense of fairness and generosity of spirit required to negotiate a fair and reasonable resolution of this claim.

It should not take the pressure of major development projects such as the James Bay hydro-electric project or Beaufort Sea oil and gas exploration in order for the aboriginal peoples of Canada to have their aboriginal rights adequately recognized by Canada and to receive fairness in terms of the settlement of land claims.

I have also been informed that the situation of the Lubicon Crees has been considered by such respected bodies as the United Nations Committee on Human Rights and the World Council of Churches. As a Canadian, I am embarrassed that those international bodies have felt it necessary to express their sympathy with the plight of the Lubicon Crees, and that they are still seeking an adequate explanation from Canada.

The aboriginal people of Canada are looking for a sign that they will be treated reasonably and fairly by this government. They question whether there is the political will to understand aboriginal concerns and to resolve outstanding issues. The government's response to the Lubicon Cree will be an important indication of the commitment by this government to fair treatment of aboriginal concerns.

Over the next few days I will be discussing this subject with individual senators and with members of the other chamber to explore the various means by which further study of this matter could be undertaken. There are many unanswered questions that remain to be addressed. In the meantime I would like to address the following specific questions to the Leader of the Government. Since he is not here, I suppose they will be directed to the deputy leader.

The first question is: Will the government make a commitment to renew its efforts with the Government of Alberta and with the Lubicon Cree to reach a fair and reasonable settlement of this issue? Second, is the government prepared to release the report prepared by the Honourable Davie Fulton, and when can an announcement to this effect be expected? Third, will the government be appointing a new negotiator to meet with the Lubicon Cree on this issue, and when can an announcement to this effect be expected? Finally, would the government be prepared to appoint the Honourable Davie Fulton, if it is acceptable to him, to serve as a mediator in these negotiations?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank Senator Watt and I will bring that series of questions to the attention of the appropriate minister.

AGRICULTURE

WITHDRAWAL OF BRITISH COLUMBIA FROM MARKETING BOARDS

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, in the normal course I would not raise this question in the absence of the Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, but it is an urgent matter, and I wanted to have the question on the record as soon as possible so that I might follow up on it later. The question arises out of the announcement yesterday by the Premier and Minister of Agriculture for the Province of British Columbia that that province is going to withdraw from four marketing boards involved in the regulation of quotas for industrial milk as well as three marketing boards in the feather industries.

The withdrawal may have serious implications for Canadian agriculture, and the questions that I think should be dealt with are: Will this affect Canada's position under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade? That agreement provides that we are able to restrict imports of commodities such as these into Canada, provided that we comply with certain regulations. I believe that we are 80 per cent self-sufficient in the commodities. Will Canada be able to take steps to restrict imports of these commodities into provinces other than British Columbia so as to preserve these marketing boards in the rest of Canada? If so, will it take such steps? Finally, what is Canada's position with respect to payments under the Canadian Dairy Commission Program for industrial milk? I am also interested to know whether or not the Leader of the Government, in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, will be involved in the negotiations that will undoubtedly follow British Columbia's announcement yesterday.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will attempt to get an answer for Senator Hays as quickly as possible.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government to take as notice a question respecting the statement made the day before yesterday by William McKenzie, President of Memotec Data Inc., when he said that his company delayed announcing its bid for Teleglobe Canada for almost a month at the request of the federal government. He went on to explain that he first suggested making a public announcement on January 9, the same day as Memotec formally made its bid to the federal government for Teleglobe, and that he repeated it a couple of times after that, but the government did not give him permission to make a public announcement until February 5. He went on to say:

In my mind, there's no question that the longer you delay something like that with such a high profile, it becomes very difficult to keep that information (confidential).

● (1430)

I would like to know whether or not the government will confirm that this, in fact, happened, that it did make a request to Memotec that there be no public announcement about it. If that is true, then why, and what was the reason for delaying it for nearly a month when it is now obvious that Mr. McKenzie, the president of the company, wanted to make a public announcement that Memotec had made a bid for Teleglobe?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the question as notice, as the honourable senator has requested.

DIEFENBAKER CENTRE, UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

FINANCIAL CRISIS—FURTHER REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. On two occasions in the past I have raised the issue of federal assistance to the Diefenbaker Centre in Saskatoon, located on the campus of the University of Saskatchewan. The Deputy Leader of the Government will recall that this very fine facility, which is a major attraction in that area—one which recognizes the great contribution of a Canadian Prime Minister from Saskatchewan—was in the process of actually closing down.

There was no positive response from the federal government, and an announcement was made that the centre would close. However, at the last moment the Government of Saskatchewan came forward and provided funds to keep the centre going for a period of time in the hope that the federal government would still participate in the cost of operating the centre.

My question to the Deputy Leader of the Government is: Will the federal government give further consideration to this very important request? Since the request is not coming from me or other honourable senators but from the Government of Saskatchewan, is there any likelihood of an arrangement being made to ensure the continued operation of this very important facility?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will attempt to get an update for the honourable senator.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN TO PORT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by the Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay on September 16 regarding Transport—Port of Churchill, Manitoba—Transportation of Grain to Port.

(The answer follows:)

CN Rail committed itself to the supply of 3,000 cars for the Churchill grain movement, not 3,000 cars per week and this commitment has been met: as of week 7 of the 1987/88 crop year, CN had 3,065 boxcars in service for the Churchill movement.

To ensure that the grain movement to Churchill proceeds in as orderly a manner as possible, a coordinating committee made up of representatives from CN, CP, Ports Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Grain Transportation Agency meets regularly to address and resolve, where possible, operating problems.

In order to maximize the Churchill grain movement the committee noted that grain would have to be programmed from the Churchill catchment area and that directional loading would have to be implemented. However, producer deliveries in the Churchill catchment area as of week 8 had not improved and 800 out of 1,000 orders for Churchill were from Alberta.

As a result of the rail strike, it was estimated that the Churchill program lost some 1,000 unloads or more than 50,000 tonnes. This will be extremely difficult to make up given the short shipping season.

FIJI

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a few minutes ago Senator Stewart asked a question regarding the current political situation in Fiji.

I am informed that Senator Stewart's question, asked on May 26, was answered on June 30 and appears on page 1506 of Debates of the Senate for that date. The answer included an update by the Department of External Affairs on the then current political situation.

I assume that Senator Stewart is seeking a further update on the situation.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Yes.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cogger, for the second reading of the Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.—(Honourable Senator Hicks).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I noticed that the mover of the motion was about to rise. Perhaps he would like to answer my question of yesterday before I speculate on it and find myself out in left field.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Hicks is absolutely correct: The back field was in motion. I have no intention of closing the debate at this time. I simply wish to answer a question asked by Senator Hicks yesterday dealing with the section of the act which changes from 80 per cent to 85 per cent the percentage of voting power necessary to change the articles of agreement. The answer with which I have been supplied reads as follows:

• (1440)

As part of the eighth replenishment of the International Development Association, (IDA 8), the arm of the World Bank which makes loans to the poorest countries, donors agreed to increase the World Bank capital shares of six member countries. In order to facilitate the arrangement, the United States offered to sell some of its shares to the three countries making special contributions to IDA 8: Japan, Italy and Canada. The offer was conditional on members agreeing to increase the special majority required to amend the World Bank's Articles of Agreement from 80 to 85 per cent of total voting power, so as to protect the United States' veto over such changes. Canada, along with other donors, agreed to amend the World Bank's Articles of Agreement accordingly. On June 30, the Bank's Board of Governors approved a resolution containing the amendment. The amendment will take effect three months after it has been accepted by 60 per cent of the members with 80 per cent of the vote.

Had countries not agreed to raise the level of the votes required for the special majority, the U.S. would not have released its shares to Japan, Italy and Canada. It would have retained its veto, and the IDA resources for the poorest countries would have been reduced.

The Bank's operational and financial policies and its lending operations are approved by the Board of Executive Directors. The special majority does not apply to these decisions, and there is thus no American veto over the Bank's day-to-day operations.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Doody for that explanation, which is along the lines that I anticipated, and I shall have something to say about it later on in the relatively brief remarks which I propose to make this afternoon.

First, let me acknowledge that Senator Doody's explanation of Bill C-68 was, in my view, quite adequate, reserving the one point upon which I have commented. It seems to me that he covered the situation quite well indeed. It ought to be borne in mind, as Senator Doody told us, that the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency's, MIGA, mandate will be to promote private investment in developing countries and to help create in these countries a climate conducive to foreign investment. I have before me an official release concerning the nature of these amendments. It reads in part:

The Agency will provide foreign investors with insurance against non-commercial risk in developing countries. Examples of non-commercial risk include currency transfer risk, expropriation, breach of contract, and war and civil disturbance.

[Senator Hicks.]

I might interject here that these risks do not really comprise the major risks that lenders encounter when lending to developing countries. However, be that as it may, I suppose the disruption that might follow war and civil disturbance would be very great indeed, and there is no question that some protection against this kind of hazard is desirable. The release goes on to say:

The Agency will also carry out other promotional activities.

I think we should watch with interest to see what these are. The release goes on:

Foreign private investments will enhance the developmental prospects of host countries through the provision of non-debt creating transfers of resources, as well as a transfer of technology and managerial skills.

Canada's Export Development Corporation (EDC) already provides extensive insurance and guarantee cover for non-commercial risks. MIGA will be able to supplement and complement this coverage, to the advantage of prospective Canadian investors. MIGA will, for example, be able to guarantee investments in countries where EDC may not provide coverage.

I hope that this will work, and I hope that the desired result of increasing our assistance to the developing countries in the creation of industries and activities in those countries will indeed be a real thing. I have sometimes wondered why it is necessary in these international financial organizations to have so many agencies. Indeed, when the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs investigated the problem of the debt of Third World countries, we visited the financial authorities in Washington and New York. The question occurred to my mind several times as to why it was necessary to have so many agencies. I have sometimes thought that the World Bank and its affiliates, the International Development Agency—commonly referred to as IDA—and the International Financial Corporation—commonly referred to as the IFC—should be amalgamated and even combined with the International Monetary Fund. Instead of doing that, we are now creating a new agency with the specific purpose of certain restricted type guarantees to which Senator Doody referred and of which he gave an adequate explanation. I wonder whether we might not have a more effective control over international development and financing if all these agencies were brought under one control. I am glad to see here, however, that the president of the World Bank is the chairman of the board of the newly created MIGA, and I should think that that is a sensible thing.

With respect to Senator Doody's explanation as to the reason for increasing the number of votes required to amend the articles of association, I refer honourable senators to pages 36 to 40 of Bill C-68 as passed by the House of Commons. In those pages honourable senators will see a listing of the shareholders of MIGA. There are 100,000 shares. The largest shareholder is the United States with 20,519. So the 80 per cent requirement puts the United States in the position of having a veto. The second largest shareholder is Japan with just over 5,000 shares. Germany comes next, then France and the United Kingdom and then Canada with 2,965 shares. The United States has been very jealous of its veto powers in connection with the international monetary institutions. Perhaps, since they pay the most, one can sympathize with their view that they ought to have a veto against the multitude of countries which contribute very little but each of which has a vote, though in this case I am glad to see that the votes are in proportion to the number of shares held and the contributions made.

Therefore, when it was proposed that capital shares should be made available to some additional countries, it is quite evident that, if the 20,000 shares held by the U.S. were diminished or became less than 20 per cent of the total number of shares issued, it would have destroyed the U.S. veto power. This is why the United States insisted that the number of share votes required to amend the articles be increased from 80 to 85 per cent.

While I understand the explanation, I think we ought not to lose the opportunity of questioning the position of the United States in matters like this. I am referring not only to this particular institution now but to the World Bank and to the other institutions, because the United States has, from time to time, refused to go along with a call to increase the capital of the World Bank or the IMF, or whatever it may be, and it has used its veto when other countries were willing to put up the money though the United States was not willing to do so. The United States has taken the position that it will not allow other countries to increase their contributions, because to do so would destroy their own veto power.

• (1450)

I am not sure that in the way the world has developed since the days of the original Bretton Woods Agreement the United States is any longer entitled to that exclusive position which it has maintained. However, I understand that there is nothing that we can do in relation to this bill that is going to change this position. But I wanted to put my views on record and to suggest that Canada might, in as firm a way as seems appropriate in the circumstances that arise in the future, question the propriety of the United States maintaining this kind of veto in respect to the international financial agencies, because it does enable the United States to adopt—as indeed they have done on some occasions in the past—a kind of dog-in-the-manger attitude: “We will not increase our share of the capital of whatever the fund may be, and therefore we will not allow other members to increase their share of the capital either.”

Honourable senators, that is all that I have to say about this legislation. Certainly, if this is a decision of the international authorities to create this agency, Canada ought to participate, and I am glad that Canada is participating to the extent of being the number six contributor among all of the countries who will belong to this guarantee agency. I think that honourable senators ought to support this bill.

I do not know whether or not Senator Doody proposes to refer the bill to a committee. So far as I am concerned, it seems to me that little advantage can accrue from a reference to a committee. The essence of the bill is, of course, in the schedule which constitutes the articles of association of MIGA, and we in this legislature cannot change those articles. Indeed, they have been or are being adopted by all of the member countries who belong to this organization.

The other parts of the bill are very straightforward and provide authority to implement Canada's participation and Canada's contribution of the necessary funds. Therefore, I do not ask that the bill be referred to a committee.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Hicks for his dissertation. It demonstrates the amount of knowledge that he has in this esoteric area of international finance. It is complimentary to the work of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs that such expertise has developed here.

I agree with Senator Hicks that there does not appear to be any great merit in referring this bill to a committee. However, there is some predisposition here in the Senate that, except in cases of extreme emergency, we should perhaps make a habit of referring bills to committee. With that in mind, I suggest that it might be appropriate to refer this bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I would like to attach just one caveat. There is an October 11 deadline which has been conveyed to me through the minister. A telegram received from the President of the World Bank indicates that if the various countries who are participating in this agreement do not make their deposits prior to October 11, then a new meeting of the World Bank must be called. However, I think that still gives us plenty of time to do whatever is necessary. I simply would suggest that the Foreign Affairs Committee apply their usual diligence to and carry out their usual good work on this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 1, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE DONALD CAMERON

NOTICE OF RESIGNATION FROM THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, Her Excellency the Governor General has advised the Senate that Senator Donald Cameron, who has been a member of this chamber since July 1955, has tendered his resignation as of September 19 last.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think it would be the desire of many of our colleagues here to pay tribute to Senator Cameron. Having been given this notice today, I suggest that we think in terms of paying tribute on Tuesday next to our colleague who is no longer a member of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, October 6, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, once again I offer the apologies of Senator Murray for his absence. He had intended to be here today, but unfortunately he has had flight problems. He is still in Nova Scotia and will be here later this afternoon. However, he will not be here in time for Question Period.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—STATUS—NOTIFICATION OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I appreciate the information which has been given to us by the Deputy Leader of the Government. The points I will make might be as pertinent on Tuesday as they are today.

Honourable senators may recall that two years ago today letters were exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States launching the trade negotiations, and that leads me to ask a number of questions.

My first question is: Have the premiers been summoned to be notified tomorrow that the trade talks have finally been brought to an end and that it is impossible to reach an agreement? It is certainly widely believed at the present time in Ottawa that the game is over and that the government is now preparing explanations as to why the talks have failed.

In light of that, it would be interesting to know why it was found necessary, or thought useful, to send two ministers to Washington this morning, at the last minute, in the face of what appears to be a widely held view that the differences between the two countries are so great at the moment that an agreement is impossible.

However, we will all know by tomorrow, probably, whether, if a miracle has occurred, the talks have resulted in an agreement or will be terminated. Nevertheless, I think these two early questions will still be relevant on Tuesday. I would also like to ask the government whether, if the talks indeed end in failure, it will table for our examination the final position put before the United States by the Government of Canada. On the other hand, of course, if the talks are successful, we would like to have a look at the agreement or the memorandum of understanding between the two countries.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall certainly bring the honourable senator's questions to the attention of the Leader of the Government and ask that an answer be provided, without, of course, accepting any of the premises on which the question was based as being necessarily correct.

FIJI

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION—GOVERNMENT STANCE AT COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE—CONSULTATIONS WITH FIJIAN COMMUNITY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I would like to add a question to the questions that have been asked during the past two days and earlier this year by some honourable colleagues concerning the situation in Fiji. I also ask the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, when seeking the answers to those earlier questions, to ascertain for the Senate the attitude towards the situation in Fiji which the government intends to take at the Commonwealth Conference, which is to be held in two weeks. I understand that this matter is on the agenda. In addition, I wonder if he would let us know whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs or other senior representatives of the government have met with the Fijian community in this country in preparation for those meetings or for any of the other meetings which are to take place on this question.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to take parts of Senator Marsden's question as notice and attempt to get answers. However, clearly relevant is the delayed answer which I have before me in response to a question raised by Senator Perrault and Senator John B. Stewart yesterday. It reads as follows:

The Government of Canada is clearly on the record condemning the most recent coup in Fiji. In a communiqué dated September 25, 1987, Canada has called upon Colonel Rabuka to release immediately Prime Minister Bavadra and other political prisoners, and to put an end to military control of the press.

Canada continues to recognize the Governor General as the executive authority of government in Fiji.

Events in Fiji are evolving at a rapid pace and the government is monitoring closely the situation. A further statement by the Department of External Affairs on developments in Fiji is expected shortly.

This delayed answer may be helpful, but certainly it does not answer all the questions asked.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one other delayed answer.

AGRICULTURE

WITHDRAWAL OF BRITISH COLUMBIA FROM MARKETING BOARDS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question raised yesterday by Senator Hays regarding the withdrawal of British Columbia from marketing boards. It is fairly lengthy, so I would ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings and considered as having been read.

(The answer follows:)

The withdrawal of British Columbia from national poultry, egg or dairy agencies would have no effect on Canada's position under the GATT. No proportion of total production is specified as a condition to permit import controls under GATT.

Current import controls for Canada are the responsibility of the Department of External Affairs and will be unaffected, should British Columbia proceed with its stated intent to withdraw from the national supply management system. Within Canada, the marketing boards already have the power to control the flow of their commodities between regulated and unregulated areas.

British Columbia has only announced its intention to withdraw from the national supply management system. Actual withdrawal will not occur for some time. B.C.'s commitment to the Dairy Program continues until July 31, 1989. It is too early to speculate what position might be taken on the dairy subsidy almost two years from now.

British Columbia simply advised they would withdraw from most of the national supply management programs, a process that would not begin to take effect for about a year. In the meantime, it is expected that bargaining will go on within the agencies themselves, with meetings taking place later this month.

THE HONOURABLE DONALD CAMERON

TRIBUTE ON RESIGNATION FROM THE SENATE

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, a few minutes ago the Speaker advised the Senate that he had received notice of the resignation of Senator Donald Cameron of Alberta. I also heard what the Deputy Leader of the Government had to say about extending tributes next Tuesday. The fact is that the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which I am a member, is travelling to Washington on Monday of next week and will not return until Wednesday. Therefore, I shall not be here. I would not want the occasion to pass without having said a few words about Donald Cameron's contribution to Canada while he was a member of the Senate and, indeed, for many years prior to that time when he was the driving force behind the establishment of the Banff School of Fine Arts and, subsequently, the Banff School of Advanced Management.

● (1410)

These two institutions have made a great contribution to the education structure and process in Alberta, and, indeed, beyond Alberta, reaching out to the far corners of Canada.

It is fair to say that the Banff School of Fine Arts now has a reputation as a world centre for the teaching and promotion of fine arts and a number of other activities that have grown out of it. I have talked to Senator Cameron for many hours about the difficulties that he had to overcome in raising funds, for example, and, indeed, promoting the idea that there ought to be such a centre in Banff. There were many trials that he had to face, and the courage that he displayed in convincing people to support him in setting up that school is indeed gratifying.

As a preliminary to the Banff School of Advanced Management, Senator Cameron was extremely active in taking Canadian businessmen to many parts of the world. For example, he was one of the pioneers to take a group from Canada to China. He did this on many occasions. As I have said, it was a great contribution to the trading relations that developed as a result of many of those visits.

There is much more that could be said, honourable senators, and I am sure much more will be said on Tuesday. It is a pleasure to be acquainted with Senator Cameron, and to note the enthusiasm and energy that he has.

I understand Senator Cameron has been ill for some time, and I would like to express my best wishes to him and to the members of his family.

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-51—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay, pursuant to notice of motion of Wednesday, September 30, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-51, An Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, here are the explanations about this motion. Bill S-4 was adopted on second reading by the Senate and has already been referred to the Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. It seemed to us that to continue the study of Bill S-4, which has to do with one aspect of the question of tobacco and tobacco products, it would be logical to consider at the same time another legislative measure, namely the one referred to in the motion, which also relates to another aspect of the tobacco problem and advertising of tobacco products.

So it seemed logical to us that both bills be simultaneously considered by the committee.

I fully appreciate the fact that logic is not always considered to be a convincing argument, but this is why we propose that Bill C-51 be referred to our Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

We intend to analyze the bill sponsored by Senator Haidasz—if it can be so called—in the wider perspective offered by Bill C-51.

Those are the only reasons which prompted this motion.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to make a few comments about this because it raises many questions in addition to the precise point of pre-studying a particular bill. However, before I make my comments, which I will defer until next week, I will tell the honourable senator that I am not very keen to give support to his proposal to pre-study. I will go into that in greater detail later. In the meantime, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 6, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE HONOURABLE DONALD CAMERON TRIBUTES ON RESIGNATION FROM THE SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, Senator Donald Cameron's resignation, which His Honour the Speaker announced last Thursday, provides us with an opportunity to highlight his remarkable career which spans almost half a century in the field of education, combined with over 30 years as a member of the Senate.

Born in Scotland, he came to Canada in 1906 at the age of 5. Upon graduation from the University of Alberta he immediately started his career in that same institution and, in 1936, became director of the Extension Department. Soon after he was given the responsibility for setting up the School of Fine Arts in Banff, which provides summer courses for theatre, music and fine arts amateurs. Under the guidance of its director, it soon became famous throughout the world. Later on, Donald Cameron took over the running of the School of Advanced Administration.

His interests were not limited to education, as demonstrated by his involvement as director of the National Film Society, from 1943 to 1950, and later on as member of the National Film Board.

In 1958, he assumed the Chairmanship of the Royal Commission of Inquiry on education in Alberta, just three years after being called to the Senate in October 1955 in a group of 13 new senators, including Senators Croll, McGrand and Molson, deans of this Chamber.

Never having been active in politics, he insisted on being listed as an Independent Liberal. During his maiden speech in the Senate on January 26, 1956, he mentioned just how pleased he was that Prime Minister Saint Laurent had indicated that he had gone beyond political affiliations when choosing the new senators.

This explains why our colleague never got involved in a contentious or partisan debate, preferring to limit his contributions to areas quite familiar to him, such as of course education, as well as transportation and western economic development.

In his maiden speech which I referred to earlier, he expressed the wish that the federal government would provide additional assistance to post-secondary education, adding that a constitutionally acceptable formula should eventually be developed in view of the fact that education is a provincial responsibility. It can be said that his wish has been granted.

Always a perfect gentleman and most pleasant company, our colleague has friends in the Senate and in every circle he has ever been involved in.

His failing health, which has kept him away from the Senate for several years, has finally compelled him to tender his resignation.

[English]

Honourable senators, on behalf of those senators sitting to the right of the Speaker—that is, supporting the government, and, I am sure, also on behalf of all senators—I wish our colleague a return to better health so that he may enjoy peace and happiness in his well-deserved retirement.

We send him and his family our most cordial greetings.

We assure him that the Senate is grateful for his valued contribution to its work.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Flynn said in closing that he was speaking on behalf of those senators who sit to the right of the speaker and support the government. Then, I am glad to say, he added, "And I am sure I speak on behalf of all senators." And he did.

Senator Cameron has had a really remarkable career. Senator Flynn has covered a good deal of the ground, but it is worth while putting on the record other dimensions of this remarkable career.

As Senator Flynn has said, Senator Cameron was an educationist. He was certainly a westerner. He went to Lakeview High School and the University of Alberta and had degrees from other western universities. Senator Flynn has outlined in some detail the accomplishment for which he was most famous, and that was the founding of one of the world's most important educational institutions, the Banff School of Fine Art. He founded it in 1933. It was then called A School in the Arts Related to the Theatre. It held its first classes in August of 1933. Although things were very difficult in the beginning, Senator Cameron managed, and I will quote from a newspaper source, "to keep this school alive with every dollar he could lure, cajole or hustle from oilmen, businessmen, foundations and governments." Over the years his many endeavours kept the school open, and today, thanks to him, hundreds of students from Canada, the United States and various countries around the world will have studied in theatre, arts, musical theatre, ballet, painting, creative writing, journalism, literature, handicraft, modern languages, photography and figure skating.

I may say parenthetically that for two or three summer courses my daughter taught in the field of creative writing and publishing at the Banff School of Fine Arts. I visited her there, and I know most of us, for one reason or another, have had the very moving and enriching experience of spending some time at that wonderful location in that breathtaking part of Canada.

Senator Cameron's determination and persistence have permitted him to realize his dream of creating a major North American arts institute in Banff.

Senator Cameron was an author. He wrote The Impossible Dream in 1977, a book that is a record of the Banff School of Fine Arts from the opening of A School in the Arts Related to the Theatre in August 1933 to Donald Cameron's retirement as director of the centre 36 years later.

There are a couple of more fragmentary things that, until some research was done, I was not aware of his interest in. He was very interested in the subject of gun control. In the mid-seventies he became the sponsor of a tough gun control bill. He received many abusive letters for his efforts, but Senator Cameron was only interested in tightening up the laws, insofar as weapons and firearms are concerned, to help cut down on the rapid growth of crime.

He was also a strong advocate of closer links to China, and led the first and largest delegation from the western world to China. The delegation was made up of senior business executives who were alumni of the Banff School of Advanced Management established by Senator Cameron in 1952. After the trip, he was persuaded to publish a booklet entitled Tokyo Peking Diary, which is a short, factual statement of what he and the members of his group had seen.

Years later another journey enabled him to write another book entitled China Revisited. It was a unique book that had the actual transcript of the tape Senator Cameron made during his journey. He once said that no one is able to "roll out the red carpet" like the Chinese.

I remember Senator Cameron. He had been here for years when I came here in 1977. He was, as Senator Flynn has mentioned, an independent Liberal—and that was not just a label. I think he was a true liberal, a small "l" liberal—perhaps he would say capital "L" Liberal. He was certainly independent, and he was faithful. He attended the sittings of the Senate faithfully; he attended the committees that he was on faithfully. He worked faithfully and effectively at everything he did.

The image that I will retain of him as a senator is perhaps more homely. It consists of two things: one is his portrait at the Banff School of Fine Arts; and the other is the sharing of many evenings with him at the table in the Parliamentary Restaurant immediately at the right, which is sometimes called the senators' table. It used to be called the Liberal senators' table, but thanks to recent, welcome invasions by Senator Flynn, Senator MacDonald and some others, it is now fast becoming a bipartisan place for dining. I remember—as I guess many of you do—that he took his dinner there regularly. If you wanted to have a chat with Don Cameron, you could usually find him there in the early evening hours.

[Senator Frith.]

He has had a spectacular career. It is easy to apply the description of a great Canadian, but it certainly applies to Senator Cameron, because Canada would not have been the same without him and his school. I share Senator Flynn's wishes for a speedy return to better health, and I join with Senator Flynn in sending best wishes to his family.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I join in the fine tribute that was paid to Senator Cameron by Senator Flynn and by the deputy leader on our side of the house.

It was just 32 years ago that Senator Cameron, Senators Inman, Molson, McGrand, Smith and I were sworn in. Senator Molson is still here; Senator McGrand is not feeling too well, but he will be around a long time, you can depend on that! I knew Senator Cameron fairly well. He contributed in his early days to the extent that he was considered one of the members who carried his share. He was a participant, a contributor and a Liberal. Despite the fact that he liked to be known as an independent Liberal, he was independent on the Liberal side.

I know something of his school. Each one of my three daughters attended his school, and I was at the school with my wife for some time. His contribution to education in this country was unique. He liked it, he liked what he had to do, and he knew the people who were interested. There is not much more one can say about his career. It was a long and useful one.

● (1410)

Now that he has retired, I wish him happiness in whatever he is doing and better health than he has recently enjoyed. To his family I extend my warm regards.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, everything that has been said about Donald Cameron, his qualities and the work of his life which has been described, is justified.

I have a rather different view of him, because, when we were appointed in 1955 and came to be sworn into the Senate in January 1956, immediately Donald Cameron and I were allotted an office on the fifth floor. What many ladies and gentlemen in this chamber do not realize is that not many years ago, when you were appointed you were not allotted a big office with flowers, secretaries, and so on. In those days most of the offices were occupied by at least two senators. Some offices even contained four senators, and secretaries were just about as scarce as flowers.

Donald Cameron and I settled into a shared office for about three years before we became sufficiently senior to find some little hole of our own. We were then promoted to a room on the sixth floor—a room which had been opened up in the attic. We, along with Jean-François Pouliot and others, were up there for a time until, with seniority, we moved downstairs.

As one would under those circumstances, I got to know Donald Cameron extremely well. I did not know his secrets, because, when he was talking to his constituents or friends on the phone, I would have to leave the room and walk up and down the corridor, since there was no room for us to conduct our affairs in private. In every other way I got to know him extremely well.

He was a very hard worker. He made an enormous contribution to education in this country, all of which has been said. He made a very significant contribution to the Senate. He is a person of charm, ability and, above all, an extraordinarily hard worker.

Some years later, probably by accident, I was fortunate enough to receive an honorary degree from the University of Calgary at the Banff School of Fine Arts. I can only suspect that maybe those years of proximity in the office on the fifth floor contributed to my being given that honour.

During his years here Donald Cameron not only contributed to the work of the Senate both in committees and in the chamber, he made a friend of every senator who knew him. When his health failed a few years ago, he certainly was very sadly missed.

His wife is deceased, but his daughter is still alive, and I would like to join with all of you who have voiced their regrets, and those who have not yet done so, in expressing to her our sadness at losing him through retirement, the hope that his health will improve and that his remaining years will be happy and far healthier.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, may I simply and briefly associate myself with the remarks that have been made in tribute to the work of my Alberta colleague, Senator Donald Cameron. I need not repeat the history of Donald Cameron in this chamber and his contribution to education. It has been placed on the record.

However, I would like to underline the fact that Donald Cameron, as an Albertan, chose to sit in this chamber as an independent Liberal. It seems to me that there was no party discipline to subjugate the fertile mind of Donald Cameron. From that "independent" posture in this chamber, he made some very profound and worthwhile contributions over the years.

As Senator Frith has said, however, it is the Banff Centre that Donald Cameron leaves us as a legacy upon his retirement. In the 1930s it was Donald Cameron's idea that a centre should be established in the panoramic setting of the Rockies for the benefit of young Canadian artists. It was his tenacity and dedication to that vision which leaves us today the Banff Centre, which serves Canadian artists, as it was meant to originally, but which is now extended to include the Banff School of Business Management, from which many of us have benefited. I do not think I can add much to what was stated by Mr. Bill Gold of the Calgary Herald: "Without his vision, this wonderful achievement would never have happened."

Senator Donald Cameron is now a resident of the Bethany Care Centre in Calgary, Alberta. I join all senators in wishing him the fullest measure of serenity and happiness for each day of his retirement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, it is a long way from Prince Edward Island to Banff. Senator Flynn has spoken meaningfully and movingly about Senator Cameron, and I subscribe with heartfelt appreciation to everything he has said, as I do to all of those tributes which have been paid to a humane and urbane Canadian.

I was privileged to be in Banff just last week, along with Senator Rossiter, Senator Rousseau and Senator Olson, to attend a parliamentary conference held for Europeans and Canadians. One of the highlights of the program for the spouses in attendance was a visit to the Banff School of Fine Arts. The impressive legacy of our great colleague was displayed not only in the physical beauty of the institution but also in the enormous variety and sensitivity of the programs that were being offered.

I happen to have known Senator Cameron better when I was in the other House, but I have admired him as an educator and as one who seemed able to move freely among the agricultural community and also the business community. As Senator Frith has so rightly said, he made a great impression in the international community. Many times abroad, when talking with internationalists, the name of Donald Cameron has come up. I deeply appreciate the opportunity of knowing this man of broad humanitarian principles and deep convictions. Without entering into any of the contemporary ebb and flow of debate upon a system whereby people are appointed to a legislative body such as this, I often wonder who is to say that the appointment process ipso facto is somehow deficient? Under such a system, a great Prime Minister like Mr. St. Laurent could reach out and bring to the national legislature a great man like Donald Cameron. Is there not a danger that something might be lost if that process were discarded?

Honourable senators, Senator Cameron has adorned this place. He has exalted his occupation and has advanced the cause of Canada. Like all others who have spoken, I wish him well and extend to him my affection in his well earned retirement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "ELEMENTS OF THE AGREEMENT"
TABLED

On the tabling of documents:

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, on behalf of the government I would like to table a document, in both official languages, entitled "Elements of the Agreement". The document refers, of course, to the free trade agreement signed by representatives of the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States on Saturday last.

I may say that the document recommends the fundamentals of the agreement arrived at by the parties. These elements are being translated into a legal document as agreed, and that legal document, as soon as it is available, will be tabled in both houses of Parliament.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay, Chairman of Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Tuesday, October 6, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-8, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses), has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 16, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1, clause 1: Strike out line 21 and substitute the following:

“shall be”

2. Pages 1 and 2, clause 2: Strike out lines 25 to 29 on page 1 and lines 1 to 6 on page 2 and substitute the following:

“2. This Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.”

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR TREMBLAY
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when will the report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, today or tomorrow.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Bosa, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

GREY NUNS IN CANADA

250TH ANNIVERSARY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday, October 14, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Grey Nuns in Canada.

[Senator Murray.]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

PARTIES AND SIGNATORIES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have had a look at the document containing the free trade agreement, and I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a technical or legal question. Who are the parties to the agreement? Is it the two governments?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Yes.

Senator Frith: Who initialled the agreement on behalf of Canada?

Senator Murray: Having tabled the document, I do not have it before me but I believe the signatories are: the Minister of Finance; the Minister for International Trade; Mr. Derek Burney, Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister; and Ambassador Simon Reisman.

Senator Frith: Who signed the agreement on behalf of the United States government?

Senator Murray: Treasury Secretary James Baker, Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter, Assistant Secretary of Treasury, M.P. MacPherson and Ambassador Peter O. Murphy.

IMPACT OF U.S. OMNIBUS TRADE BILL—TREATMENT OF SUBSIDIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government could clarify for us what the relationship is between the U.S. elements of the trade agreement and the omnibus trade bill in the United States? Do the provisions of the agreement in any way exempt Canada from the application of the omnibus trade bill which is before the United States Congress?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, no, they do not. There is in the document what is commonly called a "standstill" provision, which is a matter of good faith between the two countries. But the agreement itself does not exempt us in advance from the provisions of the omnibus trade bill, if it should pass. Nevertheless, the United States Congress will have to consider that omnibus trade bill as it relates to Canada in the spirit of the free trade agreement, and Congress will be aware of how important this matter is to us.

Senator MacEachen: So I take it that the "standstill" provision, on page 35 of the elements of the agreement, is intended to exhort, if not obligate, the parties to exercise restraint, pending the passage of the bill in the United States. As the Leader of the Government knows, it is just an exhortation, because a similar provision was contained in the agreement between the President and the Prime Minister at the Quebec Summit in which both parties obligated each other to refrain from protectionist actions. Of course, we know what happened in the interim, and we will see what happens as a result of the similar provision in the present trade agreement.

The next point in my quest for clarification is with respect to the situation which will prevail when and if the omnibus trade bill passes Congress. Does this agreement in any way supersede the provisions of the trade bill as they might affect Canada, or is it the expectation of the Government of Canada that Congress will amend, or that the executive is obligated to seek amendments to, the omnibus trade bill that would bring it into conformity with the provisions of the elements of the trade agreement?

• (1430)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first of all, we do not know when, or in what form—or, indeed, whether—the omnibus trade bill will pass the Congress. As a matter of fact, I believe that some indication has been given by President Reagan that he would veto that bill as it stands.

As to whether the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States would supersede the omnibus trade bill, I do not see how that could happen, but of course much would depend on the date of passage in the Congress of any trade legislation. Once the Free Trade Agreement comes into force, any changes in existing legislation would, of course, be subject to the dispute-settlement process that is contained in the Free Trade Agreement.

Senator MacEachen: I did not quite get the last point that was made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is the Leader of the Government saying that if the omnibus trade bill passes—supposing that it does pass—the dispute-settlement mechanism is capable of preventing the application of that trade bill to Canada?

Senator Murray: The dispute-settlement mechanism would, of course, apply to legislation passed by Congress or actions taken in Canada after the coming into force of the Free Trade Agreement. It does not apply, as I see it, to the omnibus trade bill, assuming that that trade bill were to get through Congress prior to the coming into force of the Free Trade Agreement.

Senator MacEachen: I know this is a complicated area, and I am not sure that I fully understand what my own question implies, but I gathered from the answer of the Leader of the Government—and he may wish to reflect upon this—that he is stating that any trade bill that was in existence when this trade agreement comes into effect would not be subject to the dispute-settlement mechanism. In other words, that the dispute-settlement mechanism would be obligated to respect American law even though that law in that form might be quite damaging to Canada.

I am asking for clarification. Perhaps the Leader of the Government will want to clarify that point later today or tomorrow.

There is one other question that I wanted to ask, and that is how subsidies are to be treated in the "Elements of the Agreement." I have not found any direct reference in the "Elements of the Agreement" to a definition of what would be acceptable subsidies, although I must say that I have not examined the document all that closely. Have the negotiators reached conclusions as to what subsidies will be acceptable or unacceptable, or is that subject left untouched?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what we have agreed to do over the next five years is for Canada and the United States to work together to arrive at subsidy definitions and at agreement on the use of countervail and anti-dumping law. We have agreed to try to come to a mutual agreement on these matters over the next five years, and then there is a two-year extension after that, as I understand it.

Therefore, in the meantime the status quo is maintained. Subsidies that are brought in in any respect by either country could be subject to countervail action by the other country. In that respect nothing has changed, except that the dispute-settlement mechanism ensures that there will be fairness and impartiality in the exercise of those laws by each country.

With regard to the first part of your question, I regret if my earlier reply was unclear. The point I was trying to make is that once the Free Trade Agreement is in place, trade remedy legislation brought in by either country will not be applicable to the other partner unless it is explicitly stated in that trade remedy legislation. If it is so stated in that legislation, and the legislation is to apply to the partner, then the partner may put in process the dispute-settlement mechanism which requires, among other things, a 90-day consultative period and possibly a declaratory judgment by the bi-national tribunal as to whether the legislation conforms to the GATT rules and whether it conforms to the spirit and objectives of the Free Trade Agreement. If it does not, then recommendations can be made or action can be taken by either party to remedy the situation.

Senator MacEachen: Just on the question of subsidies, from what the minister has said it is clear that no conclusion has been reached; that it is inappropriate to say that regional development programs are forever beyond the reach of future negotiations, because, as the minister has stated, there will be future negotiations between the two parties to determine what subsidies will be acceptable. I think that is what the minister has said.

However, I would like to know who negotiates the definition of the subsidies, that is to say, as to what is acceptable and what is forbidden. Would it be done within the trade commission to be established, or between the governments, or will it be within the dispute-settlement mechanism?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my information is that that will be done between the governments. If I am incorrect in that, I shall clarify it tomorrow.

Ideally, we would achieve agreement between the parties as to what subsidies, and so forth, are allowable and therefore immune from countervail action. In the meantime, with the establishment of the bi-national binding dispute-settlement mechanism, the assurance that we have is that the present laws of either country will be applied fairly and impartially. We have that guarantee at the end of the process.

REPERCUSSION ON CANADA OF POSSIBLE U.S. TRADE LEGISLATION

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the omnibus trade bill or, for that matter, any other legislation that might be passed by the U.S. Congress relative to trade between now and the time of ratification by the Congress of the Free Trade Agreement. Much of the argument in favour of a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States—from Canada's point of view—is to avoid the situation where, if the United States wishes to find a remedy for a problem that they have with trading partners other than Canada, such as Europe or Japan, they pass legislation to correct that problem aimed at Europe or Japan, and Canada is often sideswiped.

• (1440)

Then when we go to the United States and say, "Please give Canada an exemption from the application of this particular piece of legislation," they say, "We would give you an exemption. We acknowledge you are not part of this particular problem, but we are forestalled from doing that because of the GATT. We cannot exempt you specifically unless, of course, we have a free trade agreement when, under article 24 of the GATT, such an exemption could be given legally to Canada."

My question is this, and you may well have to take it as notice: Did the negotiators for the Canadian government obtain any undertaking from the administration of the United States to submit legislation to Congress bringing into line with the Free Trade Agreement any amendments to American trade laws between the date of the signing of the agreement last week and the date of its ratification? We accept American trade law as it exists today, but because of their peculiar system in the United States this does not become binding on them until Congress deals with it. That is not the situation in Canada. Therefore, it is not desirable that their Congress should be able to rush through legislation which might impinge on Canada in a manner not acceptable under the Free Trade Agreement and then get under the wire, as it were, before the ratification process. I wonder whether or not the negotiators for the government have secured from the administration an undertaking that if the Congress were to do such a thing it would submit to Congress legislation to correct that, following ratification.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think the answer to that question is in the negative. We would regard that kind of activity as indicating bad faith rather than the good faith to which the parties have committed themselves.

There is a "standstill" agreement which, while I accept the point made by the Leader of the Opposition, cannot bind Congress. However, we regard it as a pretty strong commitment on the part of the Executive branch.

DEFINITION OF NON-TARIFF BARRIERS

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government to clarify what I think I heard him say, which is this: It will take five years under the agreement to define what the non-tariff barriers of the countervail are. As I recall, in the MacDonald report it is strongly emphasized that the problem with GATT is that our main problem with the United States is essentially one of non-tariff barriers. As I understand it, it is the non-tariff barriers which inhibit Canadian access to markets in the United States. Am I to understand that although we have the agreement, the definition of these non-tariff barriers is going to take the next five years? Is that what you have said?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the subject under discussion is the use of the countervail and the anti-dumping laws of either country. I have said—and I think it would be generally agreed—that ideally we would have an agreement between our two countries as to what types of subsidies would be subject to countervail action and what subsidies would be exempt. We have given ourselves five years to try to come to an agreement on these matters, with provision for an additional two years, if necessary.

In order to shield ourselves from the capricious or unfair use of present countervail law, we have set up a binding dispute-settlement mechanism which will, at the end of the day, ensure that the law has been respected and that it has not been used in an unfair or capricious way.

Senator Stollery: I understand the Leader of the Government in the Senate to say that whatever the binding procedure may be, it will not apply to existing law, which would include present countervail law. Not only that, it may not even apply to the omnibus trade bill that is before Congress.

Senator Murray: My friend is wrong about that. Let me clarify it again. It applies to present law on both sides of the border. In the case of a dispute, of course, it is the law of the importing country that is involved.

We have no objection to the present law. Where we have run into difficulties in the past is in what we regard as the unfair or capricious use of that law. Not to put too fine a point on it, the softwood lumber dispute that has been referred to is a case where some arrangements had to be made because of our well-founded suspicion that the case was not going to be decided on its merits or on the facts or on the law but because the process had become somewhat politicized. The binding dispute-settlement mechanism that we have set in place at the end of this process is to shield our country from that problem.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has correctly expressed his dissatisfaction with the American conduct with respect to softwood lumber and his suspicions that everything was not above board. If that is the case, why did the Government of Canada agree, in the "Elements of the Agreement", to consecrate that situation by putting it in this agreement?

Senator Murray: We did not. What we provided for is a binding bi-national dispute-settlement mechanism at the end of the process to ensure that the rule of law will be respected.

Senator MacEachen: I am asking a factual question now. I admit that I have not examined this in detail, but is there not a provision in this document tabled today which accepts the results of the softwood lumber agreement? In other words, it has the sanction of Canadian approval through the agreement reached with the United States. Why did the government do that? I agree with the minister that the circumstances surrounding that arrangement were quite suspicious and properly drew his ironic ire today.

Senator Murray: I do not quite understand the question. We cannot undo the process that we thought was going to lead to a decision that was based on considerations other than the facts and the law and the merits of the case. We cannot undo that process at this stage, and we can continue to believe and to assert that the agreement that we made under the circumstances was in the best interest of this country.

BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—RIGHT OF RETALIATORY ACTION BY INJURED PARTY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a question about the statement in the summary of the accord by Ambassador Yeutter.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): By Ambassador who?

Senator Gigantès: By Ambassador Yeutter—Y-e-u-t-t-e-r—I do not care how you pronounce his name—the trade representative of the United States. That statement says that the bi-national tribunal will examine whether the law of the importing country, as you so correctly say, has been fairly applied, and will produce a judgment. If the importing country has applied the law unfairly, the other country has the right to retaliate. Is this correct, sir? After you answer that question, I have a couple of other questions.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, that is partly correct. Let me state for the record what the scope of the panels will be. The bi-national dispute-settlement panel would rule on U.S. standards of review, which are similar to our own; the panel could determine whether the decision was wrong and not in accordance with the law; the panel could determine the decision was not supported by the facts on the basis of the record; and the panel could conclude a decision was arbitrary or capricious. That is the way that we viewed the softwood lumber process. That is the kind of thing that we are trying to get at in the dispute-settlement mechanism. I simply add to that that the decisions of the panel are binding.

Senator Gigantès: But according to the document released by the U.S. trade representative, the nature of this binding simply boils down to the fact that the country that has been found to have been injured by this tribunal can then retaliate. Is that correct?

Senator Murray: Well, yes, there can be suspension of benefits by the complaining party. That is the remedy that comes into force.

Senator Gigantès: So, if the elephant offends the mouse, the mouse can squeak; if the mouse offends the elephant, the elephant trumpets its anger. This is what we are talking about. It is an unequal relationship. The weapon left to us, which constitutes this binding, is our puny strength against their gigantic economic power. Is that correct?

I asked you a question, sir.

Senator Murray: I heard the question; it is idiotic.

Senator Gigantès: Well, I asked you the other day whether we were to have a binding dispute-settlement mechanism and you said, "Yes." We are exploring the nature of this. We find that the nature of this is that if the Americans engage in the underhanded conduct—not above board, as you described it, in the lumber issue—what we can do is retaliate, which is what we did with books and Christmas trees. Where is the difference that this agreement has brought?

Senator Murray: Well, let me try to explain the situation for the benefit of the honourable senator. The decisions of the panel are binding on the parties, which means that if one party is found to be in breach of the agreement, corrective measures must be taken.

Senator Gigantès: By whom?

Senator Murray: By the offending party.

Senator Gigantès: By the offending party?

Senator Murray: Who else?

Senator Gigantès: The mouse will squeak, then, in order to repair the damage done by the elephant!

Senator Murray: By the offending party.

Senator Gigantès: And if the offending party does not take those measures, the other party can retaliate. Is that not so?

Senator Murray: The other party can abrogate the agreement.

Senator Gigantès: Wonderful! This is a binding dispute-settlement mechanism? We abrogate the agreement when 80 per cent of our foreign trade is with the U.S., whereas about 6 per cent of their foreign trade is with us. We are not a threat. We do not have a threat according to this agreement; they do. It has left us in the same unprotected, unequal situation as we were in before.

Senator Murray: That is nonsense!

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I would like to pursue for a moment this business of the five-year period to define what appears to me to be U.S. legislation on anti-dumping and countervailing. It seems to me that the whole purpose of an agreement is to stop, from the Canadian perspective, the U.S. unfairly applying anti-dumping, countervailing and various other things against Canadian imports.

It will take us five years to do the defining, which is what the honourable leader has said, but the agreement, from our perspective, and any concessions that we have made—and it appears to me that we have made quite a few in terms of investment in particular—become binding on Canada when it is approved by Parliament, which, given the circumstances in Canada, would not take long. But in the U.S. it does not become binding until it is passed by the Congress.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Senator Murray: Pardon?

Senator Stollery: It cannot take effect until the definitions have been decided on the various laws which we say are not fairly applied. Our whole argument is that, as the leader has said, "We do not mind them applying the law; we object when the law is applied unfairly." That seems to be the position that the Leader of the Government has just told us. It seems to me that it will be binding on Canada shortly, but it will not be binding on our competitor, the United States. I wonder if that is a good deal for Canadians.

Senator Murray: I wonder whether the honourable senator has read through the elements of the agreement or knows anything about it.

Senator Stollery: You just said that it will take five years.

Senator Murray: I am sorry, but my friend does not understand what I am trying to tell him. The binding dispute-settlement mechanism applies equally to both parties from day one.

Senator Stollery: But binding on what?

Senator Murray: It is there. Well, I have tried to explain that to the honourable senator. The laws of both countries are in place. The problem has been that the laws are sometimes administered in an unfair or capricious manner as far as we are concerned. Therefore, we want to obtain and have obtained a binding dispute-settlement mechanism at the end of the process to ensure that there has been fairness in the application of the law. I read through that a few minutes ago.

The five-year period to which I referred earlier, and which is the occasion for the honourable senator's question, refers to the period in which we will try to find new arrangements, and we will try to come to a new agreement on what subsidies, for example, are trade distorting and, therefore, would be subject to retaliatory action by the other country, and what subsidies would not be trade distorting and, therefore, subject to countervail action.

● (1500)

Meanwhile we will have the binding, bi-national dispute-settlement mechanism applicable to both countries in place and applicable to current law in both countries.

CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—FILM DISTRIBUTION—STATUS OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have several questions for the Leader of the Government dealing with the elements of the agreement.

My first question deals with cultural industries. I refer to a pamphlet I received in my office entitled "Preliminary Transcript—Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Elements of the Agreement". This pamphlet was contained in a blue wrapper. I assume this pamphlet is the same as the document tabled by the Leader of the Government in the Senate today.

On page 25 the agreement appears to exempt cultural industries. It goes on to suggest a definition as to what those industries are, and it includes film or video recordings, production, distribution, sale or exhibition of film or video recordings.

The government, through the Minister of Communications, has promised legislation respecting film distribution in this country in order to counteract the unfair practices of the United States. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with that legislation, or is that legislation in some way restricted by this agreement, either in spirit or intention?

Senator Grafstein: I thank the minister for that answer.

DATA BASES AND INFORMATION—MAINTENANCE, PROTECTION AND ENHANCEMENT

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: On page 19 of the document I referred to previously there appears to be a commitment by governments on both sides of the border to develop a continental market for, it says, "enhanced telecommunications and computer services." I am referring to the paragraph which deals with services. It goes on to suggest that there will be a non-discriminatory, open market, if you will, for information services.

Does that mean that the government will not be able, without offending the proposed agreement, to maintain, protect or enhance data bases in Canada; or does it mean that we will really have an open border with respect to data bases and with respect to information?

SCREENING OF TAKEOVERS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government about another section in the summary released by the U.S. Trade Representative.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): That document does not fall within my area of responsibility. If my friend wants to ask me questions about the document which I tabled today, signed by the representatives of both governments, or about any documents put out by the Government of Canada on this matter, I will answer them or I will try to answer them under my responsibility as a minister of the Crown. However, he cannot expect me to take responsibility for documents put out by the government of another country.

Senator Gigantès: I will let pass the suggestion that there may be a different interpretation of what the accord contains in the United States as opposed to here.

According to the documents released by the Government of Canada, it is agreed that if there is a sudden surge of imports there can be protection, and GATT accepts that. It is a well known fact. If the Americans realize that because our steel products are more efficiently produced they are a better bargain, and they suddenly start buying in large quantities, then the U.S. can ask us to moderate this or take measures itself to moderate it. Have we put in similar provisions, for instance, to prevent a surge of takeovers? Investment is another aspect. Supposing suddenly the Americans started buying up Canada. Can we tell them that they are buying it up too fast, just as they would tell us that we are exporting steel too fast?

Senator Murray: As an academic matter, I would be very interested if my friend would explain to me how such a provision might work.

The agreement incorporates the well-known policy of this government with regard to foreign investment. We have retained the right to screen significant takeovers in this country. We are phasing in an increase in the threshold in terms of direct takeovers, and over time we will eliminate the provisions of the Investment Canada Act respecting indirect takeovers.

Senator Gigantès: In the opinion of the Leader of the Government in the Senate is there no danger of having more and more of our economy owned by the United States? I would point out that in some sectors they are already majority owners. No other country is so owned by a foreign country as is Canada.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the policies of this government stand in rather sharp contrast to the discriminatory and confiscatory policies adopted by the previous government. That is why we had to move with the Investment Canada Act and with the action we took on the National Energy Program. The results should be obvious even to the honourable senator. Almost one million new jobs have been created in this country since the present government took office.

Senator Gigantès: I shall accept the accusation that they are discriminatory in favour of Canadians. What this government seems to have done is remove this discrimination in favour of Canadians, replacing it with discrimination in favour of that much more powerful economy of the United States.

As far as the creation of jobs is concerned, more jobs have not been created per capita.

Senator Flynn: Question!

Senator Gigantès: I am learning from the honourable senator's techniques!

As I was saying, there have not been more jobs created per capita than there were during previous recoveries. Why is it wrong to discriminate in favour of Canadians?

Senator Flynn: Argument!

DUTY-FREE IMPORTATION OF U.S. MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I would seek clarification of one matter. According to press reports today, as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, on January 1, 1988, a variety of manufactured products will be able to be imported into Canada without duty. If that statement is incorrect, I would accept it, but that is what I read. The assumption, I presume, is that it will have already been approved by the Parliament of Canada. What will happen if the free trade agreement has not been approved by the Congress in the United States by that date? Does that mean that the Canadian part of the agreement will be in place and that certain products will be allowed to be imported into Canada without duty? What will happen in terms of the other side of the agreement?

It seems to many of us that the situation with respect to the agreement in the U.S. is far from clear. It will have to be dealt with by Congress, and that may take a longer time than it will take in Canada. I would like to have an explanation of that process.

● (1510)

By the way, as the only minister here today, I have been subject to a number of questions about various aspects of this agreement. While I am prepared to do my best, it occurs to me that honourable senators might like to consider whether this agreement should be taken under advisement by one of our standing committees, which would have the right to call and examine witnesses, including ministers of the Crown responsible for this area of public policy and, indeed, Canadian negotiators who were responsible for negotiating the agreement. Alternatively, detailed questions can be submitted either in writing or during the course of oral Question Period, and I will obtain written replies from the Minister of Trade.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: On another related subject, in light of the government's interest and desire to harmonize Canadian laws with American laws, I bring to the attention of the minister that the United States has now passed legislation in the House of Representatives granting Americans of Japanese descent who were incarcerated in the United States during the Second World War a number of things, including $20,000 as partial compensation for their internment and for property that might have been taken unfairly during that period. Would the government now reconsider its position with respect to individual compensation in a partial form for those Canadians of Japanese descent who suffered much greater indignities and deprivation both personally and in relation to their property during and after the Second World War?

[Senator Flynn.]

ENERGY

NEW BRUNSWICK—ADDITION TO LEPREAU NUCLEAR POWER PLANT

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure that compared to everything he has been talking about today—foreign trade, free trade and Canada's becoming more or less the fifty-first state of the U.S.A.—New Brunswick's problems do not share the same degree of concern in the minds of the government. Nevertheless, my question is based on the pride that we in Atlantic Canada still have in those provinces and that I have in my province of New Brunswick.

A year ago or so a Minister of Transport appeared in Moncton when they were in the process of closing the CNR shops—which had been a vital part of the economy of that area—and told us that we should not complain too hard, that if we compared ourselves to Bangladesh we would feel pretty fortunate. We had to take that, and he went on to close the shops. Two weeks ago the Premier of New Brunswick—who appears to be in a tough fight for re-election—announced an energy policy that included the building of what is known as "Lepreau II", which is a unit additional to the nuclear power plant located in that province. He went on to say that this would come about in the next few years as a result of the serious negotiations undertaken with the federal government. He said this, only to be told by the federal Minister of Energy that his department was in charge not of welfare but energy, and that in fact there were no serious negotiations between the Government of New Brunswick and the federal government on the building of the second unit of the Lepreau nuclear plant. I am sure the minister has read about this matter and heard about it from his colleagues in the Senate, some of whom are down in New Brunswick right now, and rightfully so, to help the premier get re-elected.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations, tell the people of New Brunswick where this matter stands and what will be its effect on the province?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I can assure Senator Thériault that in all discussions of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States the interests of the Atlantic provinces—indeed, the interests of all regions—have been uppermost in our minds. As far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, let me remind him that the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council has done a study, which was published within the last while, indicating that in those provinces the fishery, food processing and resource-based industries stand to gain very considerably from a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. I hope that Senator Thériault is as encouraged and positive about a free trade agreement as I am for that reason.

With regard to Lepreau II, I can tell the honourable senator that some weeks ago, in my capacity as minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, I had discussions with the president of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission and one of his officers about this matter. I am aware that they have had serious discussions with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and other agencies of the federal government. The point that my colleague, Mr. Masse, was trying to make—perhaps more dramatically than he wanted to—was that the federal government was not prepared to pay 100 per cent of the cost of an electricity generating unit in New Brunswick or anywhere else. That, however, still leaves plenty of room for negotiations.

The honourable senator will be aware that because the smaller unit is regarded somewhat as a prototype, it is the understandable view of the Government of New Brunswick and of the power commission in that province that they should not be required to bear too much of the financial burden of such an installation. That is the subject matter of negotiations which are in process between federal and provincial agencies.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I take it from the answer of the minister that it is not the policy of the present government to regard as a matter of welfare any assistance that may be given in the future to building nuclear plants or any other form of industry?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think our record in that respect speaks for itself. Over the past month, again in my capacity as minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, I have approved offers by that agency amounting to some $43 million in federal assistance to various firms which are ready to go into business, which will create upwards of 1,000 jobs in the Atlantic region and which will maintain some 400 existing jobs.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, even one job is good news for New Brunswick. Promises of jobs have been coming fast over the last few weeks and, although I doubt that the people of New Brunswick take them very seriously, we will know next week whether they do or not. However, I want to ask the minister another question. Can we take it as a fact that all the promises of all the projects that were being announced by Mr. Valcourt over the last two weeks will be brought forward and financed as announced, regardless of the outcome of the election on October 13?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this government always deals in good faith.

Senator Thériault: We shall see.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

PRODUCTION DELAY AT PRINTING BUREAU

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like to advise the house that there has been a production breakdown at the Printing Bureau. As a result, both the House of Commons and the Senate publications, including yesterday's Debates of the Senate, have been delayed. However, they should be available shortly.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the Tenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs concerning Bill C-68, an act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 1910.)

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I would ask permission to say a few words at this time relative to the committee's report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators will have heard the explanation of this bill from Senator Doody when it was introduced. Also, at that time Senator Hicks made a thoughtful speech on the matter. Therefore, I will not endeavour to repeat the things that they said at that time.

The purpose of the bill is to provide the legislative authority for Canada to participate in the new facility, the Multilateral Insurance Guarantee Agency (MIGA) of the World Bank. The bill also provides for an amendment to the Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development that raises the percentage of voting power required to amend the institution's Articles of Agreement. That has a direct bearing on the question of the U.S. veto in these institutions, and I will have something to say about that in a few moments.

The committee heard testimony from Mr. Yves Fortin, the Assistant Director of the International Finance and Development Division of the Department of Finance. I might just say that only last week Mr. Fortin was elected Executive Secretary of the Development Committee of the World Bank and the IMF and will be posted to Washington. This is an honour for Canada and certainly a compliment to him.

From its earlier hearings on Third World debt in the developing countries the committee had concluded that one of the main elements needed to help growth in indebted developing countries was new investment capital for development purposes. One of the impediments to this is the natural reluctance of some foreign investors to invest in nations where they feel there is too high a risk of instability, revolution or government confiscation, or whatever it might be.

This new agency will be able to provide additional insurance over and above that provided by EDC for such investment in new enterprises in the Third World. Senator Hicks developed this at some length, and I will not go further other than to say that that is very much in keeping with the report of my committee issued in May of this year. In that report we said:

The Committee is of the opinion that the establishment of the World Bank's Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency could be a positive factor in encouraging needed private investment capital into Third World enterprises.

The committee reaffirms its support for the establishment of MIGA and endorses Canada's participation in this new agency under the terms of this bill.

Some members of the committee wished me to bring to the attention of the Canadian government—and we do so through this report—the recommendations in the report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations, entitled "Independence and Internationalism", as well as the government's response, "Canada's International Relations", of December 1986 respecting the adherence to international human rights and democratic development in Canada's foreign policy. These members wish the government to look at what, if any, non-binding parallel steps might be taken to reflect these concerns in this multilateral agency.

Coming back to the veto question, clause 6 of the bill amends the percentage shares of the total voting power needed to amend the bank's basic charter from 80 to 85 per cent. This has the effect of preserving the U.S. veto on decision making within the bank.

In its previous report the committee was critical of the U.S. attitude at recent IDA negotiations, which had the effect of constraining extra funding from industrialized countries, because such funds would have increased their percentage of shares in the institution and thereby reduce the U.S. percentage below 20 per cent, which would have the effect of removing their veto.

Clause 6 corrects that for this particular bill, and we support that as a temporary solution. Nevertheless, the committee wishes to note that it remains critical of U.S. policy in this regard. The United States should recognize that it is no longer in the paramount position it was in after World War II when the IBRD was established. At that time the U.S. economy by far exceeded the economies of all other industrialized countries and was in a position to make very large contributions that the other countries were not. The situation has now changed. The attempt of the United States to perpetuate its special status discourages other states from assuming increased responsibilities in these world financial organizations. Basically, in the replenishment of IDA, for instance, all of the nations of the western world were agreeing that a $15 billion replenishment would be suitable. They compromised at $12 billion. The United States would not go beyond $9 billion and, wanting to retain its veto, would not allow the others, in effect, to put in the additional money. Therefore, very large sums of money are denied Third World development because of this veto power of the United States, which I think was perfectly justified and understandable 40 years ago but is not really suitable in the 1980s. Again we make this comment without suggesting that we should amend the bill in any way.

The committee notes with approval, however, the recent announcement by U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker that the U.S. Administration now supports a general capital increase in World Bank funding in order to increase lending to Third World countries. The committee welcomes the dropping of opposition by the U.S. Administration to a general capital increase, and is hopeful that it is indicative of a now more forthcoming attitude by that government with respect to the World Bank. However, that does not speak for the Congress, which is very reticent in this whole respect.

Subject to those comments, our committee has reviewed Bill C-68 in accordance with the order of reference and recommends that the bill be passed without amendment.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, as one who has been concerned for a long time about such institutions of an international economic character as this bill deals with, and one who has cared about this aspect of Canada's international outreach, if I may use that term, in the economic sector, I would like to say that I subscribe completely to the remarks of the chairman of our committee, who is even more knowledgeable than I am on all of these matters. I think he has spoken out both well and wisely. I, too, strongly support the recommendation of the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

YOUTH

BEAT-THE-STREET PROGRAM—LENGTH OF TERM

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he can tell us more about the announcement made by the Honourable Jean Charest, Minister of State for Youth, on September 29 concerning the funding of $1.2 million in support of the Beat-the-Street Program—that is the Youth Literacy Program—for the four western provinces.

The spirit of this announcement is a welcome one, as I am sure my colleague, Senator Fairbairn, would agree if she were here today. However, the amount is spread over the four western provinces, so, at the maximum, it can only be $300,000 per province. I understand that this amount is also spread over a five-year period, which, if that is accurate, amounts to no more than $60,000 a year per province for a program to help street kids—of whom there are a great many in the western provinces—get off the streets and help them with literacy.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us the length of time to which this program applies? Is it, as I have heard, a five-year program?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I cannot be helpful on that matter. I will have to obtain that information and all other relevant information on the minister's announcement from Mr. Charest.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BILL C-22—ANTICIPATED DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Chairman of the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Canadians seem to be quite concerned over the fate of Bill C-22. They ask many questions about the progress of debates on this bill in the Senate. For instance, at what stage of committee proceedings is the bill now? When will the bill be called for third reading in the Senate?

Senators who do not sit on the committee are unable to respond to these questions. Since the bill was referred to committee some time ago, could the committee chairman tell us how far has the debate on this bill progressed in committee?

[English]

Can he tell us when he expects the report will be made to the Senate regarding Bill C-22?

● (1410)

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, on Friday last, at about 4 o'clock, we completed hearing the witnesses that the committee felt it necessary to hear. We heard the minister on Friday. Yesterday the unrevised transcript of that evidence was available a little after noon. Later in the day we received some additional information from the PMAC, and earlier in the day I, as did other members of the committee, received a letter from the minister.

Also yesterday, in the late afternoon, the committee met in camera to consider points that might be dealt with in our report, and what I would call the heads of the report were discussed. The view of the staff was that, working to that kind of program, they would have some texts for us late next Tuesday. From there on I am in the hands of the committee.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think the Senate will understand the government's concern about this bill. I have tried to convey to honourable senators something of that concern on several previous occasions.

If I understood the chairman correctly, he has told us that the staff attended yesterday's meeting and have undertaken to provide some texts to the committee by next Tuesday. Has the committee arrived at a consensus on the basis of which the staff is drafting its report?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not think that question is in order.

Senator Flynn: Ho, ho!

Senator Frith: Senator Flynn is very easily amused.

Questions that I believe are in order to the chairman of the committee should be about the committee proceedings and activities, not about the decisions of the committee. My honourable friend is asking about a decision of the committee, and that is not a proper question.

Senator Flynn: Sure it is.

Senator Murray: I would like to know whether in the course of its work the committee achieved a consensus on the basis of which the staff is drafting a report. That does not seem to me to be out of order, because it bears very directly upon the expectations that we may have in the Senate as to this committee and when and whether it is ever going to discharge the mandate that the Senate entrusted to it more than one month ago.

I ask the chairman of the committee whether the committee achieved a consensus on the basis of which the staff is drafting a report, or whether instructions were given to the staff in that respect. What is the expectation of the chairman and the committee as to what the staff is supposed to produce within the next week?

[Senator Asselin.]

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I think it is quite clear what they are producing. It will deal with the evidence: first, the suggestions made by the fine chemical industry; second, the suggestions made by the generic companies; third, the reaction of the patent drug industry; and, finally, matters of a fundamental nature as dealt with by the minister. Having done that, I would think that the committee would have to decide whether, in the light of that, it would be able to say that a compromise was attempted but, on fundamentals, not secured.

Senator Murray: I am sorry, I missed the last sentence. A compromise was—

Senator Sinclair: —attempted and not secured on fundamental matters. On non-fundamental matters that would alleviate some of the concerns expressed by various groups having to do with different parts of the bill, including R&D, pricing and some drafting matters, the committee will delineate the evidence and some conclusion might very well be reached with regard to it. But that decision has not been made.

Senator Murray: Just for clarification so that I might understand this, I take it that the staff is preparing a simple narrative of the evidence that has been heard by the committee.

Senator Sinclair: I wouldn't say "narrative," I would say "analysis."

Senator Murray: Well, whether it is an analysis or a narrative, the staff are doing this in the absence of any consensus on the part of the committee or any instruction from the committee as to any conclusions on the part of committee members on what they wish to have in their final report. Is that the case?

Senator Sinclair: No, I wouldn't say that. I indicated to you where we were heading on fundamental matters and where we were heading on non-fundamental matters. I do not think I can help you any more than that until the committee reaches a decision and the report is brought to the Senate.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has stated that the staff is expected, as he put it, to deal with the evidence—

Senator Sinclair: I said "analyze" it.

Senator Murray: The senator's first statement was that the report the staff is preparing would deal with the evidence from the fine chemicals industry and from the generics, the reaction of the anti-drug-bill people, the matters dealt with by the minister, and so forth. Whether the staff deal with it, analyze it or provide a narrative, it is very difficult to see where the committee is headed, as a matter of fact. I take it from what the honourable senator has said—

Senator Frith: What is the question?

Senator Murray: —that the conclusions of the committee are yet to be reached.

Senator Frith: I thought Senator Flynn would enjoy that. I am quoting him: "Where is the question?" He often says that.

The Hon. the Speaker: Order, please!

Senator Frith: Yes, could we have the question?

Senator Murray: I simply want to reiterate the concern of the government about this matter. It has been six months since the Senate first took this bill under study.

Senator Frith: Order! We are still in Question Period. What is the question?

Senator Murray: I am coming to that. Preambles are normally tolerated in this place.

Senator Frith: Not by Senator Flynn they aren't.

Senator Murray: God knows I've heard enough of them myself from the other side. It has been a good six months since the Senate first took this matter under advisement, under pre-study. The special committee under Senator Bonnell's chairmanship toured the country, held 52 meetings for more than 150 hours, and heard from more than 200 witnesses representing 130 organizations.

Senator Frith: Are we having a debate?

Senator Doody: We are having a question.

Senator Frith: Is the honourable senator asking leave for a debate?

Senator Murray: No, I am not asking leave. I hope the honourable senator will grant me the indulgence of reiterating the concern of the government about this matter.

Senator Guay: He is repeating himself.

Senator Murray: It is six months since this bill came to the Senate for pre-study. It is more than one month since, on motion of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, the matter was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Senator Frith: Order!

Senator Murray: In the course of that discussion, I believe it was on September 2, there were undertakings given by the chairman of that committee—

● (1420)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on a point of order, indulgence is one thing, but, after all, this is still Question Period. There was a good, long preamble; there was a question; there was a long answer; there was a subsequent question which contained a good deal of explanation as to why the government is concerned; and now the Leader of the Government is making another long statement as to why the government is concerned. Perhaps we could have a little debate on this. The problem, of course, is that if we grant the so-called "indulgence"—and we have already granted a good deal of indulgence—then, of course, the Leader of the Government can sit down and, following his reply, which he has given in debate fashion under Question Period, there is no room for anyone else to get into the debate. It is a one-sided debate. The "indulgence" for which the Leader of the Government is asking is an indulgence to make a government statement during Question Period under the guise of a question put to the chairman of the committee; and I think it is out of order.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will conclude very quickly. It has been more than a month since this matter was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, with undertakings from honourable senators opposite that the matter would be dealt with expeditiously. I referred to these matters in the course of the debate on September 15. I will not repeat myself now. We still know no more about the intentions of that committee as to when, whether and how it is going to report on this matter. I cannot understand this. Honourable senators opposite have a majority and are free to deal with the bill as they see fit. I think the matter should be brought to a head soon. I am aware of the fact that the Honourable Senator Sinclair is due to retire in December 1988, and I would like to have some—

Senator Argue: That's below the belt.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I should like to—

An Hon. Senator: Have you a good replacement?

Senator Sinclair: If the witnesses whom the committee decided it had to hear had been made available earlier, we would have been further advanced; but we only completed our hearings with the appearance of the minister at approximately 4 p.m. on Friday last.

Senator Murray: I offered the minister to you on September 15.

Senator Sinclair: But you are not going to tell the committee how to run its business, surely. I know that you are a very powerful and able person, but the committee is going to run its business in the way it sees fit.

Some Hon. Senators: Order, order!

Senator Frith: On the point of order, the leader ended his question, so-called, by saying that he felt that he still did not know what were the intentions of the committee. It seems to me that is precisely why our rules provide that a question may be addressed to the chairman of a committee about the activities of that committee. But it is not in order to ask a committee to tell the Senate, while a matter is still under consideration and while the committee is working on something referred to it by the Senate, what its intentions are. I think it is out of order to expect the chairman of the committee to say in the middle of its deliberations what the committee's intentions are.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT CONCERN ABOUT PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the government's haste and concern about the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee's forthcoming report on Bill C-22 is based in any way on the commitments that Mr. Wilson and Ms. Carney have made in Washington to expand the period of exclusivity on patents held by American pharmaceutical companies, as revealed in the trade pact documents.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the government's concern is with the millions of dollars worth of investment and thousands of jobs that are going to be created in research and development—

Senator Frith: Ours is for countless thousands of Canadian consumers.

Senator Murray: —that will not be created in the absence of this legislation.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, as a supplementary question, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government this: Why is the government not concerned about the high prices of drugs charged disadvantaged Canadians who do not have any drug plans and who cannot afford high prices for drugs?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs put the honourable senator in his place the other day at the committee meeting when he tried to ask the same kind of demagogic questions there.

Senator Frith: Put him in his place?

Senator Flynn: Indeed.

Senator Murray: My concern—

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Murray: If you will let me state it, my concern in this matter is also for the reputation of the Senate. What kind of reputation is the Senate giving itself in a situation—

Senator Frith: Crocodile tears!

Senator Murray: —where it drags out legislation for six months at a time—

Senator Doody: Right on!

Senator Murray: —when there is no rational explanation for doing so? The bill arrived here six months ago for pre-study. It has been through a lengthy process, which I have described, of hearings, witnesses, debate, and so forth. Surely honourable senators have enough information now to make up their minds and to vote one way or the other on the bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Why is the government not worried about its reputation and why is the minister not worried about his reputation in imposing on the consumers of Canada legislation which will keep drug prices high and not do very much to regulate them?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Senator: Order!

[Senator Haidasz.]

Senator Flynn: Then summon up your courage and vote against the bill!

Senator Frith: Why aren't you courageous enough to go against your minister?

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Flynn: I am in favour of the bill—

Senator Frith: You know the bill is wrong! You know that very well.

Senator Flynn: —and I am not hiding. Senator Haidasz came into the picture at a late hour. He did not know anything, and he wanted to start from scratch.

Senator Frith: Was he to ask you?

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Flynn: And he is wasting the time of the Senate. For God's sake! You should be ashamed.

Senator Frith: Leave Him out of this.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENT TO U.S. GOVERNMENT—
POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Hon. John B. Stewart: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the commitment with regard to the Patent Act made by Canada to the Government of the United States, as set forth in the Washington accord, will have been discharged if Bill C-22 becomes law, or are we to anticipate further legislative initiatives by this government to give additional protection to the multinational pharmaceutical industry?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I would have to ask for a prepared reply to that question, because I do not have the reference in front of me at the moment.

Senator Guay: What did you tell the premiers?

Senator Murray: I can tell the honourable senator that the government has no plans for further legislation in this field.

Senator Stewart: The Honourable the Leader of the Government in the Senate is familiar with the text of the Washington accord with regard to pharmaceuticals.

Senator Guay: He should be!

Senator Stewart: My question is a simple one. Does Bill C-22 discharge the obligation assumed by the Government of Canada with regard to the pharmaceutical industry, or is there additional legislation to come—although, perhaps, not yet planned—in order to discharge the obligation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think I have answered the question fully. The government does not plan any further legislative initiatives in this field.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MULTINATIONALS' COMMITMENT TO R&D—
PROVISION OF PUNITIVE MEASURES FOR NON-COMPLIANCE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators—

Senator Muir: Oh, no!

Senator Flynn: Go ahead. I would rather follow you.

Senator Gigantès: Thank you, sir. I hope you will heckle me, because it gives me great pleasure as I talk.

I would like to ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether, in view of the report of the Auditor General about the research tax credit through which companies collected some $3 billion allegedly to do research but which they did not do—in view of that allegation, why does Bill C-22—

Senator Haidasz: Twenty-two.

Senator Gigantès: Bill C-22.

Senator Haidasz: Twenty-two.

Senator Gigantès: Bill C-22 is what I am saying. So long as we agree. Forgive my foreign accent, sir.

In view of our experience in the past, why does Bill C-22 not contain some provisions which will provide some punishment for pharmaceutical companies if they do not keep their promise to invest, in the way that companies did not keep their promises to invest while pocketing money from the federal government in the research tax credit scam?

● (1430)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that was quite an over-simplification of what happened with what the honourable senator has so accurately described as the research tax credit scam. I thought that one of the most devastating parts of that story was the fact that it became obvious to ministers at a very early stage that the tax credit was not achieving the purposes for which it was designed; indeed, that it was being blatantly abused, but for political reasons, including the advent of an election, ministers did not wish to take corrective action. So the abuse mounted until it cost the Canadian taxpayers $3 billion.

Senator Gigantès: Why, then, do we not learn from these errors and have at least a sunset clause in the bill so that it will die automatically unless renewed on the basis of good evidence that there indeed has been the promised investment? Why do you trust the pharmaceutical companies when it is a fact that private companies, if they can get away with it, will try to renege on their promises? Will you please answer that question?

Senator Murray: I think honourable senators have been around that question—dozens of times in the course of all the hearings.

Senator Flynn: He did answer.

Senator Murray: In fact, I think the transcript will indicate that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and various other people have answered that question more than adequately. Is the honourable senator casting any doubt at all on the research plans that have been announced by companies over the past year or more? These people are ready to proceed, and in some cases have proceeded already, and are now becoming concerned about the intentions not of the government but of Parliament and, in particular, of the Senate.

In this case it is not the good faith of the pharmaceutical companies that is in question. It is the good faith of the public authorities in Canada, namely, the Parliament and in particular the Senate of Canada that is being questioned.

Senator Gigantès: McDonnell Douglas promised to contract for the CF-18. In fact, it delivered about 25 per cent of its promises. Bell Helicopter promised to create 3,000 jobs; I believe 600 were created.

Senator Flynn: Which government?

Senator Gigantès: It does not matter. It was the Government of Canada.

Senator Flynn: Oh!

Senator Gigantès: Whichever party forms the government. You say that you have come into power to do things better and more cunningly than we did. However, you do not seem to have learned from the fact that we were taken for a ride. Why do you not make some provisions to ensure that the Canadian taxpayer is not again taken for a ride? Is that such a terrible thing to do?

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BILL C-22—INTENTIONS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a question for the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the committee has asked the research officers to draft a report for consideration, but without indicating to those officers what kind of conclusion they would like to study, is it the intention of the committee to meet and attempt to find out what are the concerns of, at least, the Liberal majority of that committee, because earlier in the meeting yesterday they voted against—

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Order, order! The proceedings of that committee were in camera and were not to be published.

Senator Flynn: Not at all. The decisions are not secret. I have here the minutes, and they are public. These minutes show just what you said. You confirmed that instructions had been given. That is a decision. What cannot be discussed is the nature of the discussion. However, the decisions that were made by the committee are not in camera; they are public, and you should know that. Of course, you have not long been chairman of that committee—

Senator Frith: Come on!

Senator Flynn: —and your tenure has not been too successful up until now.

However, coming back to this question, in view of the fact that no instructions have been given to the research officers with respect to the conclusion of the majority, since, as I said, yesterday the majority decided to vote down the recommendation that the Senate do not insist on its amendment and that it vote in favour of the motion, in those circumstances, is it the intention of the committee to meet before the draft report is presented in an attempt to, at least, reach a consensus, under the able chairmanship of Senator Sinclair, as he would put it himself, because he did put it in that fashion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a point of order—

Senator Flynn: I am still speaking—

Senator Frith: No, I am rising on a point of order, honourable senators. The question has been phrased twice by Senator Flynn: "Is it the intention of the committee . . ."

I say again that a question to a committee about its intentions is not in order. A question about the activities is in order—in other words, what the committee is doing; at what stage are their proceedings—and that has been answered by Senator Sinclair. He has said exactly what the committee is doing. However, a question as to the intention of the committee is out of order, because it introduces a very disorderly procedure for the Senate to say to a committee: "We refer the following matter to you," and then to keep badgering it about what its intentions are. It is, however, in order for the Senate to ask a committee about its activity, or to ask it whether or not it had a meeting.

Therefore, I ask for a ruling as to whether or not it is in order to ask a committee chairman about the intentions of his or her committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: On the point of order—

Senator MacEachen: You wave His Honour the Speaker down. Mr. Diefenbaker waved Speakers down; it is the same photograph!

Senator Flynn: Yes, indeed. I am not going to let Senator Frith get away with that. If he had waited for my question, he would not have needed to rise on this point of order.

Senator Frith: You said it twice; you said, "Is it the intention . . ." The record will show it.

Senator Flynn: I intended to ask if it is the intention of the committee to sit before next Tuesday.

Senator Frith: Well, that is easy—

Senator Flynn: That was my question. Then you agree?

Senator Frith: The committee made a decision to meet next Tuesday. That decision has been made.

Senator Flynn: Don't give him the answer; let him answer.

Senator Frith: Why not?

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Sinclair: Perhaps I could help. Honourable senators, yesterday, when the committee met, it was agreed that the committee would meet again at 5 p.m. on Tuesday next, and I cannot recall anyone objecting.

Senator Flynn: You speak of recalling what some people say; that is completely out of order, according to Senator Frith. You should not go that distance at all.

Senator Frith: He has answered your question.

Senator Flynn: However, it invites a question: Do you remember that it was suggested that the majority should meet and make up its mind?

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

IMPACT OF U.S. OMNIBUS TRADE BILL

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, in view of the statement made by the Leader of the Government yesterday, I would like to ask him a question. Yesterday he said, as reported in Hansard at page 1891, the left-hand column:

But the agreement itself does not exempt us in advance from the provisions of the omnibus trade bill, if it should pass.

One of the provisions in this omnibus trade bill characterizes as an unfair advantage, and therefore subject to countervail, any advantage that would not exist except through government action. Potentially, that seems to strike at all kinds of Canadian programs. For instance, the fishing industry in the United States might say that our UI program is such an advantage.

● (1440)

An Hon. Senator: It does.

Senator Gigantès: It does and will again. We have seen what they did with stumpage. They might use the same thing with medical insurance and countervail. You say: "We have given ourselves five years to try to come to an agreement on these matters." Does this mean that we can be harrassed and deprived of our livelihood, in effect, by the Yankee traders to the south? Do we have to wait five years to find out that we have no weapons left, because we have given them our energy, we have given them our service sector, we have allowed them to take over our finance companies? By then it is too late to do anything or to withdraw, because they will own us.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my friend obtained a copy of the "Elements of the Agreement" just a few moments before Question Period began. I am sorry about that; he should have had a copy yesterday. He has not had much time to study it, but I would have hoped that he would have put the time he did have to better use.

What I said yesterday is correct. We are not exempt in advance from the provisions of the omnibus trade bill. There is, however, an understanding between our two countries that the executive branch of the United States government, in exercising their rights with regard to legislation passed by the Congress, will take into account the spirit and the objectives of this Free Trade Agreement. Quite apart from that, the President of the United States has already, if I am not mistaken, indicated his intention to veto the bill as it stands.

The questions concerning the omnibus trade bill and its provisions are quite hypothetical at the moment.

During the five-year period our two governments will try to come to a complete agreement on countervail and anti-dumping legislation and on what constitutes an acceptable subsidy. This will be done, Senator MacEachen, through working parties appointed by governments. I make that point in answer to a question that you posed yesterday. In the meantime, under this agreement we will be putting in place a bi-national, binding dispute-settlement mechanism to ensure that present laws, whether in Canada or the United States, are applied fairly and impartially. It is, in effect, a court of appeal respecting the administration of existing trade remedy law—countervail and anti-dumping legislation—in our respective countries.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, yesterday the Leader of the Government did not admit this, but what this binding dispute-settlement mechanism can do is slap the elephant on the wrist. The punishment then is left to the mouse. The elephant applies its laws unfairly, unreasonably, or, to use the words of the Leader of the Government, "capricious or unfair" use of countervail law. Then this tribunal, to which we go, says, "Yes, indeed, it was capricious and unfair." If the United States Congress refuses to bend to this statement by the tribunal, the only remedy is that we then have the right to retaliate. The mouse will slap the elephant on the wrist.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend has it quite wrong. Let me try to explain it again.

If, for example, the United States, in accordance with its law, institutes some countervail action against us, and we believe that it is not being done in accordance with the law or it is unfair or capricious—I indicated yesterday some of the grounds, and they are considerable, under which we can appeal—and the matter arrives before the bi-national binding dispute-settlement tribunal, a number of outcomes are possible. The bi-national tribunal could decide that, indeed, the subsidy is countervailable and that we have no case. The bi-national tribunal could decide that the subsidy is not countervailable, that the Americans had acted wrongly, and they will be instructed to withdraw the countervail and pay back, with interest, the money collected. Is that clear?

Senator Gigantès: And if they do not?

Senator Murray: Let me go on. The bi-national tribunal could instruct the Americans that the countervail was wrongly applied and that they must cease the countervail action and pay back, with interest, what they had collected. Is that clear?

Senator Gigantès: I heard you.

Senator Murray: Fine. You have heard me.

Senator Gigantès: And supposing they do not?

Senator Murray: The third possibility, of course, is to say that the countervail action was well-founded but, let us say, that the rate was too high, and they could instruct the Americans, for example, to decrease the duty.

Finally, they could look at it and say, "We find that the process has been completely wrong; it has been unfair or capricious. Go back and do it again, and do it right."

Those are four possible outcomes. As I have stated, the findings of that tribunal on appeals with regard to existing law are binding on both parties.

Senator Gigantès: We do not seem to be communicating, sir.

Let us take a case in which the Americans apply countervail unfairly. The bi-national tribunal finds that, indeed, it was an unfair action and not at all justified, and says, "Cease and desist."

Senator Murray: Cease and desist, and pay back what you have collected.

Senator Gigantès: And pay back, with interest. Supposing, because of an impending congressional election and the usual log-rolling that goes on in the U.S. Congress, the Congress does not want the U.S. to back down on this action and the President, whoever he is, does not feel he wants to fight the Congress on the issue, where are we then?

Senator Murray: The scenario that the honourable senator is putting forward is one in which the United States would submit itself to the rule of law and then defy the decisions that the tribunal had brought in. If he is suggesting that we cannot put the entire executive branch or the entire legislative branch of the United States in jail, if he is suggesting that it will be unrealistic to declare war under those circumstances, then I agree with him.

Senator Gigantès: I am suggesting, sir, that you should have obtained in that deal a declaration that the executive and legislative branches of the United States bind themselves in advance to accept the finding of a tribunal and to apply what it is saying—no ifs, buts or anything.

Senator Murray: That is the agreement.

Senator Gigantès: It is not, sir.

Senator Murray: I beg your pardon, it is the agreement. The executive and legislative branches of the United States will be so bound when this treaty is ratified.

● (1450)

EFFECT OF PASSAGE OF BILL C-22 ON REACHING AGREEMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask a question of the Leader of the Government with respect to Bill C-22, which was part of an earlier interesting exchange?

I want to know whether Canada, in arriving at the overall agreement reached in Washington last weekend, made any undertakings to have the amendments contained in Bill C-22 passed as part of the agreement.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think the agreement in that respect speaks for itself. I cannot refer my friend to the specific page right now, but there is a reference to our policy in this field contained in the agreement.

Senator MacEachen: I have seen a reference, but it does not specifically refer to the amendments contained in Bill C-22.

Senator Flynn: What amendments?

Senator MacEachen: The amendments to the patent law contained in Bill C-22.

Senator Frith: The amendments to the Patent Act.

Senator MacEachen: What I am asking is: Did Canada, as part of the negotiation last Saturday, undertake to have these amendments passed as part of the overall agreement reached with the United States? I have not found it in the blue document, and I am asking whether Canada did undertake that, even though it is not in the printed document.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we would not be so presumptuous as to attempt to bind the Senate or anticipate its actions.

Senator MacEachen: I know the nature of the answer—

Senator Frith: You misunderstood the question. He is not talking about the Senate's amendments to Bill C-22 but about the amendments to the Patent Act contained in Bill C-22.

Senator MacEachen: —but it is not quite the answer to my question. The question is: Did Canada undertake to have the amendments to the Patent Act passed as part of the agreement?

Senator Murray: How could we?

Senator MacEachen: Well, I am asking, "Did you?" I think that you should find out before you are categorical.

Senator Guay: If anyone knows, the leader should know.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, our undertakings are in this document. That is my answer.

Senator MacEachen: Are there any other undertakings that were reached—

Senator Murray: No.

Senator MacEachen: —that are not in the document?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the elements of the agreement are here.

Senator Frith: That is not what he has asked you.

Senator MacEachen: The Honourable Leader of the Government is not answering my question.

An Hon. Senator: Answer it!

Senator MacEachen: I want to know if there was an undertaking made in Washington, as part of the overall agreement, that Canada would pass the amendments to the Patent Act, as found in Bill C-22. That is a factual question.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Guay: Why do you not answer the question—or do you not know?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, while the Leader of the Opposition was talking I was searching for, and still have not found, the section on intellectual property where I think the reference is contained. In any case, the undertakings that we have given are here.

The United States negotiators and the United States government are well aware, I am sure—certainly those who are interested in this subject are—of the status of this bill at present, and are well aware of the fact that the government does not command a majority in this house and is in the hands of Liberal senators on the matter.

Senator Guay: I can see what the premiers' problems are.

Senator Murray: Therefore, in answer to the question of the honourable senator, "Did we undertake to pass the bill," the answer must be, "No, because we could not give such an undertaking."

Senator MacEachen: You say that it must be no. Was it no? Is it a fact or not that the United States government pressed the Canadian negotiators as recently as last Saturday to undertake to have the amendments to the Patent Act as part of the overall agreement, and if they were not passed they would take a dim view of the whole agreement? That is what I am asking.

I do not know if the minister knows the answer, and I do not complain about that—I do not want to press him to the point where he may commit himself incorrectly—but there is some circumstantial evidence here. The circumstantial evidence is contained in the document released by the U.S. government, which refers specifically to these particular amendments. I want to know this: Is that just a misunderstanding by the United States—something that they added on after they left the negotiating room—or was it part of the discussion? Did Canada undertake to do its best or commit itself to pass these amendments? We all know the political circumstances, and the President of the United States—

Senator Guay: He would not know.

Senator MacEachen: —knows his limitations, but the executive made certain undertakings subject to what will happen in Congress. That happens in Canada as well—we all understand that.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will ask whether there is some further information that can be brought in on this matter, but I have no hesitation in saying that if our negotiators and two ministers of the Crown who were present in the room at the time had been asked whether the Government of Canada is still committed to Bill C-22 and to its passage, the answer would have been an unequivocal "yes."

Senator Guay: Someone should know.

Senator MacEachen: But was there a commitment made within the context of the agreement to the effect that the passage of this bill, from the point of view of the United States, is an integral part of the agreement, and if the bill were not passed they would take quite a different view of the agreement? That is what I want to know. That is within the knowledge of the Canadian negotiators—it is not within my knowledge—but I want to know, because we were told, up until last Saturday, that there was absolutely no connection in the mind of the government between the trade negotiations and Bill C-22.

Senator Frith: That is correct.

Senator MacEachen: Lo and behold, on Monday we have the disclosure from the United States government that, indeed, it is part of the agreement. Contained in the documents which they released is the statement that Canada undertook amendments to compulsory licensing as part of the agreement. I just want to get the facts.

The government may be committed to passing Bill C-22—and that is fine—but is it committed to the extent that it regards its passage as an integral element of this agreement? That is the point.

Senator Frith: We were told that it was not.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the matter would have come up in connection with intellectual property, which is the subject matter discussed, negotiated and included in this agreement. It has happened more than once in the course of the discussions and in the course of the agreement that reference is made to outstanding issues that are of interest to both countries. That is the case in energy; I believe it is the case in agriculture and some others.

I am not, therefore, as scandalized as the Leader of the Opposition seems to be that there would be a reference in all of this to one of the outstanding matters of mutual interest, which is the pharmaceutical legislation, as part of the overall subject of intellectual property. That is what it is. I will see if further information can be brought forward.

An Hon. Senator: It is part of the giveaway!

Senator MacEachen: The important thing is to know whether it is a matter now of Canada's being at total liberty to pass the bill or not; whether it is solely within the Canadian domain, and, if the bill were defeated, would the U.S. come back to the Government of Canada and say, "That is a foul! It was part of the agreement, and we have to take another look at it." That is the question, really.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must interrupt at this point.

On September 29 there was a motion by Senator Frith, that was adopted, which stated:

That commencing on Wednesday, 7th October, 1987 and on each subsequent Wednesday, the Speaker shall, unless otherwise ordered, interrupt the proceedings at 3.00 o'clock p.m., at which time the Senate shall adjourn during pleasure to form a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

It is now 3 o'clock p.m., and I must abide by the wishes of honourable senators as to whether or not we should waive this provision today.

● (1500)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I apologize for not having said earlier that Senator Molgat is not here and it is not the intention to ask to have those hearings continue today. Therefore, we would have been asking for the Chair to order, in the terms of the motion which says, "unless otherwise ordered," that we do not so proceed today.

I discussed this with Senator Doody and we both should have told our colleagues about it before three o'clock, but there were matters which seemed to carry us away.

However, we ask now that the order for this week be that we do not proceed with the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Accord.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

BRIEFING OF PREMIERS—ABSENCE OF REPRESENTATIVES FROM YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, my question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate deals with the free trade agreement. It seems that, again, the Prime Minister has signed a significant document which will, or could, have a great effect on northern Canada. I am not talking about a negative effect or a positive one; I am talking about a significant effect on northern Canada in the area of energy and resources. As everyone knows, we are quite a storehouse of energy and resources.

Senator Frith: Human resources, too!

Senator Lucier: Yes, human resources as well.

My question to the leader is: Did we, last night, once again witness the Prime Minister meeting with the First Ministers, the elected representatives of everyone in Canada except the northern Canadians, to discuss the Free Trade Agreement? If that is the case, why are we doing this again? Why do we continue to have this Prime Minister deal with such significant issues without the presence of the elected representatives of the two territories?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that was the ninth meeting that First Ministers have had concerning the free trade negotiations with the United States. These meetings were held pursuant to an agreement which First Ministers reached in 1985 at their meeting in Halifax. It will be obvious to the honourable senator that one of the strong reasons for convening those meetings was the possibility that the jurisdictions of the provinces might, in some way, be engaged by any trade treaty signed between Canada and the United States.

Senator Lucier: That sounds like a pretty thin answer to my question. The honourable gentleman has told me that it was done not only yesterday but that it has been done nine times. Is the justification for the elected members of the two territories not being consulted yesterday the fact that it has never been done before? The point I am trying to make is that it has never been done. I do not have to be told that.

My question is: When is this government going to start paying attention to the elected representatives of the two northern territories?

Senator Murray is the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Does his mandate not extend to the two territories? Does it end at the 60th parallel?

Senator Murray: I do remind my friend that the territories are not provinces.

Senator Lucier: You do not have to remind me.

Senator Murray: There is not at the moment a disposition to change their status.

What I was trying to explain was the jurisdictional aspect of this. The provincial governments, through their First Ministers, have been involved in discussions concerning the free trade negotiations over the past 15 or 16 months, largely because of the possibility that their jurisdictions would, in some way, be engaged by a treaty that was signed between Canada and the United States in the field of trade. That is not the case with regard to the territorial governments.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, it just seems that the minister is confirming what has been put in the Meech Lake Accord, and that is that we are now entrenched as second-class citizens.

When are we going to start paying attention to the fact that the North has elected representatives? We have an elected person in the Yukon and we have one in the Northwest Territories who represent the people of the Yukon. When are they going to start being invited to these meetings?

Senator Flynn: That is not necessary.

Senator Lucier: I can understand Senator Flynn sitting there and saying that it is not necessary. The premier of his province has been invited to participate in all of those decisions, and when something happens concerning Quebec he is in attendance at the meetings.

[Senator Lucier.]

When is this government finally going to recognize that Canada does not end at the 60th parallel? When is the government going to start paying attention to the elected representatives of the territories?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is surely not unaware of the fact that this government has been transferring to the territorial governments many programs and responsibilities that had heretofore been administered directly by the federal government. That is being done. We are transferring programs and we are transferring financial resources to carry out those programs. We have been doing so for some considerable time, and we will continue to do so.

This government has nothing to apologize for in its relations with the governments and the peoples of those territories; nothing.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, this very government that my friend is speaking of is, right now, defending a court case on its own behalf in the Yukon Territory and is taking the legal position that there is no government in the Yukon Territory. That is the basis on which this government is fighting a court action against the Meech Lake Accord.

Senator Murray: That, of course, is not so.

Senator Lucier: I have absolutely no problem believing that the minister has nothing to apologize for. I do not think he understands what he is doing.

Could I perhaps even suggest to the minister that he take some opportunity to visit north of 60 to speak to the people and perhaps he will find out that Canada, as I said before, does not end at the 60th parallel. There are some people up there and they actually think they are Canadians.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have been in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon as long as 20 years ago. It is not a question of my making a visit there, much though I would like and hope to do so.

My point is that the federal government does recognize the governments of those territories. We are not, by the way, arguing that they do not exist; we are arguing that they are not provincial governments. We are transferring programs and financial resources to those governments, recognizing the important relationship that those governments have with the people of those territories. This is a federal government that is moving, I think quite effectively, in terms of giving more autonomy and responsibility to the people and governments of the territories.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I want to end by saying that as a resident of one of the "colonies," we are forever grateful for the crumbs that have been tossed to us. I could perhaps one more time suggest to the minister that it might be a good idea, when we have these types of agreements that have such a significant effect on all of Canada, but on the North especially, to invite the two elected leaders to the meetings. They are not going to disrupt the meetings; they are quite responsible, and they always have been. Invite them and let them take part in the discussions.

BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—RIGHT OF RETALIATORY ACTION BY INJURED PARTY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to revert to a question which I posed earlier to the Honourable Leader of the Government, who has so courteously given me a copy of the document entitled, "Preliminary Transcript—Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Elements of the Agreement", to which I would now like to refer.

At page 32 of the English version, paragraph 7 of the section dealing with dispute settlement states:

If the Commission—
that is, the bi-national tribunal—

has not reached agreement on a mutually satisfactory resolution . . . and a Party considers that its fundamental rights under the Agreement are or would be impaired by the implementation or maintenance of the measure or measures of the other Party, the first Party shall be free to suspend the application to the other Party of benefits of equivalent effect . . .

In other words, if the commission does not arrive at a mutually acceptable solution, and the Americans and we are still not in agreement over the nature of the offence, that is, as to whether it is fair or unfair, all we can do is retaliate. Is that not what this text says?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am afraid my friend has not read the whole document. He is reading from a section entitled, "Institutional Provisions". What he and I were discussing yesterday and again today appears on page 5 in a section entitled, "Binational Panel Dispute Settlement in Antidumping and Countervailing Duty Cases". May I suggest that we come back to this another time?

● (1510)

Senator Gigantès: I would be glad to do that—every day, sir.

Senator Frith: Aren't you glad you asked that question?

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—
ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology (Bill S-8, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses)) presented in the Senate on 6th October, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, Senator Tremblay, chairman of the committee, reported Bill S-8 with amendments. According to rule 80 of the rules of the Senate of Canada, the chairman should give an explanation of the amendments that have been put forward. If senators wish, I can give that explanation myself.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): It would appear, honourable senators, that, despite rule 80, that is not going to happen. Senator Tremblay does not appear to be in the chamber. Perhaps we could stand the matter until the next sitting of the Senate, when I am sure he will be delighted to enlighten us on this momentous bill.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

WEDNESDAY, October 7, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

TENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, September 30, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports as follows:

The purpose of this Bill is to provide legislative authority for Canada to participate in the new facility, the Multilateral Insurance Guarantee Agency (MIGA), being created as part of the World Bank Group and to provide funds for the purchase by Canada of Shares in this agency. The Bill also provides for an amendment to the Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (generally referred to as the World Bank) that raises the percentage of voting power required to amend that institution's Articles of Agreement.

The Committee heard testimony concerning this proposed legislation from an official from the Department of Finance, Mr. Yves Fortin, Assistant Director, International Finance and Development Division.

From its earlier hearings on the debt problem in developing countries, the Committee had concluded that one of the main elements needed to help growth in indebted developing countries was new investment capital for development purposes. The flow of private foreign investment into developing countries has declined in recent years. An increased flow of such investment, constituting as it would a non-debt-creating flow of resources to these countries, could facilitate the transfer of needed technology and stimulate economic growth which in turn would help these countries surmount their debt problem. Yet, in many cases, potential investors have been wary of putting funds in countries they considered to be risky investment locations for reasons that were non-commercial, whether it was the fear of civil disturbances, confiscation, breach of contract, or expropriation. Some impetus was needed to overcome the reluctance of the private foreign investor.

To assuage their fears and to encourage increased foreign investment in these countries, MIGA will provide foreign investors with insurance against such risks, complementing or coordinating with national insurance programs such as those offered by Canada's Export Development Corporation. In addition to its guarantee operations, the new agency will work to promote such foreign direct investment by doing research into potentially good investment opportunities, by dissemination of information and through advice to governments.

In its report on Canada, the International Financial Institutions and the Debt Problem of Developing Countries, the Committee had already endorsed the creation of the Multilateral Insurance Guarantee Agency (MIGA), which is the main subject of this proposed legislation. The report, issued in May of this year, stated:

"The Committee is of the opinion that the establishment of the World Bank's Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency could be a positive factor in encouraging needed private investment capital into Third World enterprises".

The Committee reaffirms its support for the establishment of MIGA and endorses Canada's participation in this new agency under the terms set out in Bill C-68.

Some members of the Committee wish to bring to the attention of the Canadian Government the recommendations of the Report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations entitled "Independence and Internationalism" as well as the Government's response "Canada's International Relations" of December 1986, respecting the adherence to international human rights and democratic development in Canada's foreign policy. These members wish the Government to look at what, if any, non-binding parallel steps might be taken to reflect these concerns in this new multilateral agency.

Clause 6 of Bill C-68 amends the Articles of Agreement of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The amendment raises the percentage share of the total voting power needed to amend the Bank's basic charter from 80 to 85 percent. This has the effect of preserving the U.S. veto on decision-making within the Bank.

In its recent report on debt, referred to above, the Committee drew attention to the problem that Clause 6 is intended to resolve. The amendment implements the arrangement agreed to by Canada and other industrialized countries at the 1987 negotiations for the funding of the International Development Association (IDA), the concessional arm of the World Bank.

In its report, the Committee was critical of the U.S. attitude at recent IDA negotiations which had the effect of constraining extra funding from industrialized countries because such funds would have increased their percentage of shares in the institution and thereby reduce the U.S. percentage below 20 percent. With a share below 20 percent, the United States would have lost its power of veto over decisions. For this reason, the United States tried to block additional contributions by other countries.

Clause 6 confirms the informal arrangement worked out at the last IDA negotiations that raised the percentage required for amendment from 80 to 85 percent thereby retaining the U.S. power of veto on the basis of a lower share percentage while at the same time facilitating the infusion of needed additional funding by other countries.

The Committee concurs with Clause 6 of Bill C-68 that raises, by five percentage points, the number of votes required for amendment of IDA's Articles of Agreement. This modification resolves the problem that had threatened to block needed additional funding to IDA for concessional lending purposes.

Nonetheless, the Committee wishes to note that it remains critical of U.S. policy in this regard. The United States should recognize that it is no longer in the same paramount position it was after World War II when the IBRD was established. At that time, the U.S. economy exceeded by far the economies of all other industrialized countries which were not in a position to make large contributions. The situation has now changed. The attempt of the United States to perpetuate its special status discourages other states from assuming increased responsibilities in World Bank funding. If the United States is not prepared to increase its funding of IDA in order to help bridge the evident gap in its concessional lending funds, it should be prepared to permit other strong industrialized countries to increase their contributions, even if this would mean surrendering the U.S. veto. It is highly regrettable that the United States finds it expedient, in order that it retain control over the institution's decision-making, to block additional funding to the World Bank by the technicality of refusal to relinquish shares.

The Committee notes with approval, however, the recent announcement by U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker, that the U.S. Administration now supports a general capital increase (GCI) in World Bank funding in order to increase lending to Third World countries. The Committee welcomes the dropping of opposition by the U.S. Administration to a GCI and is hopeful that it is indicative of a new more forthcoming attitude by that government in respect to World Bank funding in general.

Your Committee has reviewed Bill C-68 in accordance with the Order of Reference and recommends the said Bill be passed without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE C. VAN ROGGEN
Chairman

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 8, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, later, perhaps in an hour from now, I will be in a position to give notice of the adjournment motion. In the meantime, perhaps I may just explain.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I see we have a new Acting Deputy Leader of the Government. Mazel tov!

Senator Nurgitz: Believe me, this is not my idea of having fun!

Discussions are ongoing in the other place with respect to many legislative matters. It is hoped that sometime before 3:30 p.m. a decision will be reached between the parties that will determine the question of when we ought to return.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I take it the question will be whether they will agree to abridge time, that is, whether they will give leave to go through all stages. That will, of course, affect whether or not we will sit tomorrow.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

Senator Frith: That is obviously reasonable.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have three delayed answers to questions. I will indicate who asked the question and its subject matter and unless anyone in particular would like it read I shall ask that the answers be inserted in Hansard of today.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DATA BASES AND INFORMATION—MAINTENANCE, PROTECTION AND ENHANCEMENT

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, the first delayed answer I have is in response to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Grafstein on October 6 regarding the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement—Data Bases and Information—Maintenance, Protection and Enhancement.

(The answer follows:)

At the present time, the Government of Canada does not limit or restrict the provision of computer services by any Canadian to any other Canadian. Moreover, with some exclusions for specific reasons, such as the protection of privacy, consumer protection, prudential controls under the Bank Act, public health and safety, or national security, the government does not impose limitations on access to computer data bases, nor would it wish to do so.

This government intends to retain the current open borders for the flow of information between Canada and the U.S. and, in addition, provide for non-discriminatory access to open markets in the enhanced telecommunications and computer services sectors.

The agreement provides Canadians with secure access to the largest computer services market in the world. It will allow Canadians to participate to the fullest in this advanced technology sector which represents one of the most important areas of future economic growth.

DUTY-FREE IMPORTATION OF U.S. MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, the second delayed answer is in response to a question asked by Senator Stollery on October 6 regarding the Duty-Free Importation of U.S. Manufactured Products.

(The answer follows:)

The agreement is scheduled to come into force January 1, 1989. Tariffs and other trade barriers will be removed according to the schedule laid down in the elements of the agreement.

YOUTH

BEAT-THE-STREET PROGRAM—LENGTH OF TERM

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, the third delayed answer I have is in response to a question asked by Senator Marsden on October 7, 1987. Since that response is brief, I will read it into the record.

The program referred to by Senator Marsden is funded over a period of three years.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I wonder when we can expect replies to other questions which have been asked, such as my question concerning the witnesses on the Meech Lake Accord.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: I will make an inquiry and bring that information back as quickly as I can.

FIJI

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION—GOVERNMENT STANCE AT COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE—CONSULTATIONS WITH FIJIAN COMMUNITY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, is there any possibility that we will be receiving an answer to the question raised by Senator Marsden and myself concerning Canada's attitude toward the situation in Fiji? I think there is some urgency in that matter because of the forthcoming Commonwealth Conference.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know what further information the honourable senator is seeking. I may tell him that the Government of Canada recognizes the Governor General of Fiji as the legitimate authority.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Who does?

Senator Murray: The Government of Canada recognizes the Governor General of Fiji as the legitimate authority in that country. We do not accept the right of the leader of the coup to declare Fiji a republic. As far as we are concerned, the Governor General or his designated representative would be welcome at the Commonwealth heads of government meeting in Vancouver next week.

Senator Frith: And he is unlikely to delegate that responsibility to the colonel.

Senator Stewart: Are we to conclude that Fiji has been de facto expelled from the Commonwealth?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators, the government recognizes the Governor General of Fiji as the legitimate authority of that country, and has stated that he or his designated representative would be welcome at the Commonwealth meeting.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, we have received a package of material on the forthcoming Commonwealth conference, along with a whole series of loose press releases. While there were government attitudes expressed on a great many issues, there was silence on the subject of Fiji. Does that mean we can expect a further news release on the de facto situation Senator Stewart has just described, or is that all we will receive?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have described the situation. I have stated the position of the Government of Canada as it is. I do not know that any further press releases or announcements are necessary on that matter. I have answered the questions that I understood to have been asked on the matter so far as the Government of Canada is concerned.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the third reading of Bill C-68, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

8 October 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Claire L'Heureux-Dubé, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in her capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 8th day of October, 1987, at 4:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,

LÉOPOLD H. AMYOT
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Eighth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology (Bill S-8, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses)) presented on October 6, 1987.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I see that this order is adjourned in the name of Senator Bosa. If Senator Bosa does not wish to speak right now, I will move, in the name of Senator Tremblay, that the report be adopted.

Hon. Peter Bosa: I agree, honourable senators. I suppose that I can then move third reading of the bill.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, in the name of Senator Tremblay I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

● (1410)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words about this legislation.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, this bill which amends the Citizenship Act—I apologize for not having the texts of the bill and the report which amends the bill we had on first reading—is in a way a legislative measure which favours a category of people seeking Canadian citizenship.

This legislation does not offer the same benefits to other people who are in an identical situation. Specifically, the bill is aimed at shortening the qualification time for Canadian citizenship in the case of spouses of people serving Canada abroad, in External Affairs, in the Armed Forces, or for a provincial government. This bill applies only to the people I have just mentioned. Well, as I said in committee—I must say I do not sit on that committee, but I was personally interested in attending proceedings—it seems to me it does not go far enough. It should be extended to cover other spouses, men or women, whose situation is identical or similar to that of spouses of members of the Canadian Armed Forces, and federal or provincial public employees serving abroad.

What springs to mind of course is the situation of spouses of CBC employees or journalists who, while serving abroad, decide to marry a person who is not a Canadian citizen. Now then, pursuant to this legislative amendment, such an individual would not be covered under Bill S-8.

Other people can find themselves in identical situations: employees of Canadian multinational companies who might be sent for an extended tour of duty of a few years in Europe, in South America, in Africa or elsewhere. There have been such cases. Canadians have been known to sign contracts with Canadian government agencies, but that does not automatically make them employees of the Canadian government or of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, people who sign contracts, as I said, and who spend at least a few months if not a few years in Africa, for example. That is the case in trade relations, in exchanges between governments or between companies and government which we have with French-speaking Africa. I should think the same situation could occur in the case of the Commonwealth countries.

But the bill totally ignores these people. I can imagine as well that, in addition to the two categories I have just mentioned, airline employees might be involved. For instance, is it not a fact that Air Canada has offices in London, Paris or elsewhere? A CBC employee may very well fall in love with somebody in the country where he or she works, this person eventually becomes the spouse of the Canadian but will not benefit from the provisions of Bill S-8.

The following objection could be raised: Well, in that case, these people should have filed a complaint and told us about their particular problem. How can you expect the average citizen to be as aware of possible amendments to the legislation as spouses of federal or provincial Government employees, who are often the first to know about any developments or impending improvements to the legislation and the relevant regulations?

Far be it from me to want to delay the passage of this bill in this chamber. Honourable senators, I simply want to point out that the bill has a narrow application. In my view, we should or could have, although it is, of course, far too late to do so now, changed the terms and scope of this bill to include foreign spouses of any Canadian citizens who must serve a certain number of years or months abroad, and thus avoid granting to a selected few privileges that are not granted to all Canadian citizens or their spouses.

Honourable senators, that is more or less what I had to say. In future, when bills of this nature are introduced, I hope they will be worded in such a way that their application is not narrow but is broadly based. A bill with a narrow application, unless it arises from entirely exceptional circumstances, should not be ratified by the Houses of Parliament because of the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The legislation should apply fairly and squarely to all Canadian citizens and their spouses, as appropriate.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I do not entirely agree with my colleague, Senator Corbin. Spouses of Canadian diplomats are sometimes sent abroad against their will. Often these persons, who are foreign citizens, live in Canada, want to stay here for three years to get their Canadian citizenship, and then they are sent abroad.

It is a fact that these spouses appear more often in an official capacity than for example the spouses of journalists. And this is true especially in the case of the head of a post. In some cases, the spouse of an ambassador works very hard, without any remuneration, at managing the residence and organizing the various social activities that are part of diplomatic life.

These people are, in fact, unpaid employees of the Government of Canada. That is why I feel they are entitled to a higher degree of consideration than we would grant the spouse of a Canadian citizen who goes abroad to work for a private company, as opposed to the Canadian Government.

[English]

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I sympathize with the theory that has been put forward by Senator Corbin. I think it would be an ideal situation if we included in the bill some sense of equality for all Canadians who are serving outside of Canada. However, what he has raised is a hypothetical question, and that is that there may be some spouses of newspaper people or Canadians serving outside of Canada in the employ of multinationals.

The purpose of the bill is very direct and very specific, and is directed towards solving some of the problems being experienced by some 200 persons who are the foreign spouses of Canadian citizens presently serving outside of Canada. This bill is directed toward remedying that situation.

I would like to offer a suggestion to Senator Corbin. The minister responsible for the Citizenship Act will be bringing forward a comprehensive set of amendments in the near future. That, perhaps, is the time to deal with the whole philosophy of citizenship and what criteria to apply both for landed immigrants in Canada and for foreign spouses of Canadian citizens serving outside of Canada. Perhaps Senator Corbin might wish to make some representations to the minister in connection with the matter that he has raised. In fact, I will volunteer to send Senator Corbin's remarks to the minister so that the minister may be aware of Senator Corbin's views.

However, for the present time, I urge honourable senators to adopt this bill, because it is of immediate necessity to alleviate the problems that are being experienced now by some 200 persons of foreign citizenship who have married Canadian citizens serving outside of Canada.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I wonder if I may be allowed to make a brief comment following the remarks of Senator Gigantès and of Senator Bosa, the sponsor of the bill.

As I said, I am not opposed to the legislation that is before us. It partially corrects a real problem for a chosen few. I recognize that there is a real problem, and I am not insensitive to human problems. I do not think it necessarily involves misery in this case, but the present situation does create real difficulties for these people, and I recognize that. I also recognize that not being Canadian citizens, some of these spouses nevertheless perform useful services for this country.

I am simply saying that I do not think it is good to legislate for a few. I believe in legislation that is applicable right across the board to everyone. Senator Bosa has suggested that I be patient as there will be a comprehensive omnibus bill to amend the act. It seems to me that Senator Bosa could have waited for the presentation of that legislation in order to have a full and equitable solution for all persons in the same circumstances.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, in answer to that question, it is not within my domain to present an omnibus bill before this chamber. I know that the minister is considering presenting a wholesale set of amendments to the Citizenship Act, which, by coincidence, has now been in force, with some modifications, for the past 40 years. When Senator Corbin advises me to do that, I think he knows that this is ultra vires. However, I am pleased to see that there is a general disposition in this chamber to adopt Bill S-8 as it has been amended.

• (1420)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I am sure that the members in the other place will take note of Senator Corbin's objection, and, in turn, they may bring amendments to a bill passed by the Senate.

Senator Frith: And send us a message.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with with provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment. (Honourable Senator Frith)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order has stood in my name for quite some time. I am not preparing a speech on the subject. I only wanted to have an opportunity to consult with Senator Argue and he, in turn, wanted to consult with his colleagues on it. However, I do know that Senator David is interested in speaking on it at some point. Would it be more useful to put it in Senator David's name at this stage? He might wish to speak on it sometime within the next week or so. With his consent we will have it adjourned, but it will be in Senator David's name.

Hon. Paul David: Yes, I do accept your suggestion with pleasure.

Order stands in name of Senator David.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—MOTION TO TELEVISE PROCEEDINGS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion, as modified, of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rousseau:

That pool television cameras be permitted in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of recording the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole with respect to its hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the proceedings be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am going to speak for a few minutes on this, and then I am going to ask leave to adjourn the debate in my name, because I would like to give senators an opportunity to consider what I have to say and to ask questions about it.

I would like honourable senators to consider this as an interim report on this motion. I say "report" because my recollection is that we were to investigate the matter further in order to understand how some of the problems that were raised in our earlier discussion could be solved.

Today Senator MacEachen, Senator Finlay MacDonald and I met with some of the representatives of the Press Gallery and CTV. We met with Mr. Don Newman, the president of the Press Gallery, and two of his technicians. We had previously met with Senator Molgat on the same subject.

There are two changes to be taken into account that might make this motion more acceptable. The first change is that we agreed, by motion, that we would fix the time for the hearing. That was originally for the sake of witnesses. We passed a motion to say that we will have the Meech Lake Committee of the Whole hearings on Wednesday afternoon at approximately 3 o'clock, unless otherwise ordered. That meant that Senator Molgat and the steering committee could arrange for witnesses to attend, with some certainty as to when they would be called on to appear here.

The other was about where the table should be. We have had the table where it stands now in front of the English Debates reporters for both the meetings on the Canada-France Fisheries and Boundaries Agreement and also for Senator Forsey, who, so far, is our only witness on the Meech Lake Accord. I think everyone feels that that has not worked out well, because no matter where the witnesses sit they have their backs to a significant number of senators. So we considered moving the table for the witnesses somewhere in front of Black Rod.

With those two things in mind—one a decision, namely, for a fixed time of hearing; one a suggestion—Senator MacDonald of Halifax, Senator MacEachen and I met this morning. Senator Molgat had wanted to attend, but he is away in Europe this week on Senate business.

[Senator David.]

What it comes down to is this, honourable senators. First, we should understand that what we are offering here is not an electronic Hansard. It involves recordings on VCRs right here in the chamber. Technically, what will happen is this: Two chairs will have to be moved. Which chairs are moved will depend on where we decide to put the cameras and where the desk is. The chair will be removed in order to establish a tripod and a camera, and to obtain sound feed from that desk. There will be a VCR with a camera—we are talking about two cameras, one on each side of the chamber. I will come to the question of where it will be.

There will be a VCR, which operates for about 20 minutes—as each cassette lasts about 20 minutes. The proceedings will be recorded on the VCR, and then the VCRs will be taken out and they will be available to the press. It will not be a matter of recording it in the way that they record the proceedings in the House of Commons. The tape recordings from here and excerpts from them will compete with all other news, but it will mean that, obviously, occasionally the Senate will be seen in action on the Meech Lake Accord. However, it will consist of clips which will be picked by the news people. What we are doing is giving access to the news media; we are not establishing an electronic Hansard.

In terms of operation, that will mean that when we go into Committee of the Whole it will be necessary for us to break for a moment—which we usually do anyway while we are waiting for the witnesses to come in. The operators will come in and set up the cameras—one on each side—with the ability to focus on the chairman, the witness and any senator who is asking a question. They will then proceed with the recording. There will also be the sound of a click every 20 minutes when they put a new cassette in. There could have been another interruption when batteries ran out, causing a beeping sound, but we believe that problem can be avoided by a direct AC "feed".

To picture the situation, the witnesses would be sitting there, the chairman and two cameras would be there, and two senators would have to sacrifice their seats for that period. When we were finished the committee hearings, they would leave if the sitting of the Senate continued on afterwards. If not, that would be it. They would take the cameras out and there would be no sign of them again until the following Wednesday.

I think I can say that Senator MacDonald and I agree that even if we pass this motion—which we will have to do in order to give the authority—we are still only trying it on an experimental basis. We cannot dot all of the "i's" and cross all of the "t's" on something of this kind in advance. It seems to us that the only way to deal with it is to give it a try to see how it works and how it can be improved.

● (1430)

According to the steering committee and Senator Molgat, the next witness is to be, I believe, Senator Murray. He had agreed to give evidence next Wednesday, October 14, but that may be changed. It will depend on him, of course, and on the exigencies of political life and leadership in the Senate.

Honourable senators, that is a report about where the matter stands. You may want to consider these points and ask questions. I believe that we should give it a try.

The understanding between Senator MacDonald, Senator MacEachen and myself is that that is what we want to do. We realize that we require passage of the motion in order to have the authority to do so, but I hope it is understood that we will work our way through the details on the basis of our experience.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I have no difficulty with the mechanisms as described by Senator Frith. However, my potential difficulty is with who has access to the tapes. Will it be the networks who are so equipped, and will they be able to remove whatever clips they want? That is one limited use of the tapes.

I should also like to know, for example, if cable companies will have access. Have arrangements been made so that junkies of political debate can have coverage in live colour not only of the other place but also of this place?

I think there will be a limit to whatever impact we think these sessions may have. We will have to compete with the film coverage of every fire truck and ambulance that comes into a newsroom. I suspect that what will be shown will be the most outrageous ten seconds, and that will be it.

If we are interested in portraying this assembly as doing significant work I am afraid that competing with the rest of the news at 10 o'clock is not the best way of doing so. We should certainly look for outlets such as the cable system which would use the material in extenso.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think that is an excellent suggestion, and I will pursue it.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, it was Senator Doody who suggested that I might attend the informal meeting which we had this morning. I do not think I was there in any particular representative capacity. What transpired is that which Senator Frith has just described.

Honourable senators will know that on a couple of occasions I have expressed my total lack of enthusiasm for media coverage of this chamber similar to the coverage in the other place. However, I do have enthusiasm for the coverage of committees on the understanding that we follow certain rules and guidelines. I have also made reference to that on a couple of occasions.

Honourable senators, this will be an experiment, and it can be stopped at any time. There is no chink in our armour. There is no elephant putting its trunk into the tent.

Senator Frith: I think it was a camel!

Senator MacDonald: If I had had more time I could have picked a better metaphor.

There is always the risk to which Senator LeBlanc referred. I consider the experiment a worthwhile one. By our indicating that we are going to give the media access under the circumstances Senator Frith described, it does not necessarily follow that they are going to take advantage of it. There will be times when they will be totally uninterested.

There will be on their part an obligation to act in accordance with the good faith they demonstrated in securing this access. We can stop the experiment at any time. We will be the judges of how it works. As Senator Frith described, there will be some slight discombobulation, which will require some patience on the part of some senators. While it is not an electronic Hansard, it is a beginning.

If I were to make any recommendations to my colleagues I would be inclined to say that we should give it a try. If we do not like it, we can always stop it. I feel that if we do not make some effort in this regard, such as a Committee of the Whole of this place not being prepared to give some exposure to its deliberations, then we are being quite negative. In this particular instance I would be inclined to recommend that we give it a go.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Frith a question. He did not respond to one of the comments—perhaps I should not call it an objection—I made when this matter was last debated in this chamber.

I still find it somewhat, shall I say, not aesthetical to have cameras in the middle of this room. I suggested at that time that perhaps we ought to explore the use of, if not the gallery, certainly the darker corners of the chamber. Corners must have a reason to exist. They are not just support for columns. Normally they do not create any obstruction to anyone.

Has the possibility been explored of situating the cameras in unobstructed, unobtrusive places in the chamber, rather than having to pull out an honourable senator's seat and relocate him or her elsewhere in the house?

Will the presence of that camera hamper the normal flow and circulation of senators in and around the chamber? Senator Frith knows that we like to move left and right, and we usually do that from the back row. How will that be affected?

Honourable senators, I agree that these are minor details, but no one consults me in private, so this is where I must raise these issues.

With the possibility of using powerful zoom lenses, I must say that it seems to me that a better location for the cameras ought to be explored, if that has not already been done. Perhaps some objections have already been raised in respect to that suggestion.

Senator Frith: At the outset I would not characterize the questions my honourable friend has asked as involving minor details. The whole point of this intervention, as Senator Corbin has implied, is to report on our explorations about just those kinds of questions.

I do not think it would work if the cameras were located in the corners. With the placement of the pillars, I do not think there could be adequate coverage if the witness were located at one end of the chamber with the chairman at the other and senators in the middle. The cameras would not have the range for adequate coverage. There would be too many obstacles.

Similarly, if a camera were placed in the gallery, there would not be adequate coverage of the chamber. I suppose that four cameras could be used, but that might require a switcher, and the coverage would be closer to an electronic Hansard if that number of cameras were used.

The proposed placement of the cameras was decided upon as the most efficient location. I do not think placement in the corners or galleries would meet our needs.

On the question of obstruction, there would probably be an area the width of two desks that senators would have to go around. If the cameras were placed in the middle, then the corridors would be completely open both ways, but for the time that the Committee of the Whole would be sitting you would not be able to walk those passages the full length of the chamber.

● (1440)

Zoom lenses would, of course, be used. There was some discussion that we might have the cameras closer to the south end, which would require zooms, but we will still require them if the cameras are to be placed in the middle.

Honourable senators, that is all the information I have on those questions. If there are no further questions, I ask to take the adjournment. I suggest that in the meantime senators might read today's Hansard and other questions might occur to them.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL POLICY—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Spivak calling the attention of the Senate to the question of a national policy on child care.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, with leave, I am prepared to yield my place in this debate to any senator who might care to speak in response to what the Honourable Senator Spivak has said. The reason I cannot speak now is that I will be speaking on this same issue after the tabling in the Senate of the report of the Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee's Subcommittee on Training and Employment. Some aspects of that report touch upon child care. If I speak on this matter now, I understand that I would somehow be in breach of Senate protocol by saying things which I should not say until senators have received the report. With leave, then, I am prepared to yield to anyone who wishes to take this over.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this matter is considered debated.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps, honourable senators, just in case someone else who is not present might wish to speak to the matter, we could ask that this order stand until the next sitting of the Senate. Some other senator who is not present today might take note of what Senator Gigantès has said and accept his invitation. And Senator Spivak might be aware of someone who might want to do so within the next few days. I suggest we wait a few more days before we treat this matter as debated.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I do not know of any honourable senator who wishes to debate this matter, although certain people indicated their intentions at the time this was first debated. I would consider it a brief treatment of the subject, however, if only one senator in the Senate spoke to it. Of course, that is up to honourable senators.

Order stands in name of Senator Frith.

ROYAL ASSENT

ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE—MOTION STANDS

On Motion No. 1:

By the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the present formal procedure of Royal Assent be retained and that it be used (a) at the request of the Governor General or of either House of Parliament and (b) at least once a session, for example at the prorogation of a session;

That, in addition to the present practice, a simpler procedure be established based on the following principles: (a) that the procedure involve representation from both the Senate and the House of Commons, (b) that it be public, and (c) that the declaration of Royal Assent be subsequently reported to both Houses of Parliament; and

That representatives of the Senate meet with representatives of the House of Commons to draft a resolution for a joint Address of both Houses to be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General praying that she approve such changes to the Royal Assent ceremony as described in this motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am going to ask that this motion also stand in my name. Since we are having Royal Assent today, however, and since that is what this motion is about, there are one or two things I would like to say.

This motion is similar to an inquiry that I proposed in May of 1983, that I would call the attention of the Senate to the advisability of establishing alternative procedures for the pronouncement of Royal Assent to bills. I expect that we are about to adjourn to the call of the bell for Royal Assent, so I will not speak to the subject as fully as I did then.

I would like to point out two things. First, this is no longer in the form of an inquiry. It is now a motion. An intervening event has had something important to do with the motion. The entire subject was referred to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, which made detailed recommendations as to alternative methods by which to grant Royal Assent. Therefore, I invite those honourable senators who are interested in the subject one way or the other to have a look at the Debates of May 10, 1983, at page 5608. That is the date on which I presented the result of some research on the subject of Royal Assent, including comparisons with systems used at Westminster and in Australia. I presented at that time alternatives which were then considered by the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, and which, in turn, form the subject matter of its report.

Honourable senators, I will speak to this motion in due course, but perhaps not quite as boringly as I did then in terms of all of the detail. Honourable senators might prefer to read at their leisure in their offices the detail of the somewhat arcane history of this practice. Then, in due course, I will again refer to this subject in a somewhat more abbreviated form than I did in 1983, after which I will await interventions by other senators.

The Hon. the Speaker: Therefore, the honourable senator wants this motion to stand?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Motion stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, as yet we do not have word of the progress that has been made in the other place. I would therefore advise honourable senators that when the Senate resumes—and I now propose to move the adjournment to the call of the bell—notice will be given as to the future proceedings of the house.

● (1450)

I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to re-assemble at the call of the bell at approximately 4.40 p.m.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1700)

At 5 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Claire L'Heureux-Dubé, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in her capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Acting Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof (Bill C-2, Chapter 38, 1987)

An Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act (Bill C-68, Chapter 39, 1987)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

● (1710)

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, as you will recall, earlier this afternoon Senator Nurgitz indicated some uncertainty with respect to matters which might affect our sittings. We have been informed, as the Deputy Leader of the Opposition knows, that Bill C-86, to provide for the resumption and continuance of postal services, has been introduced in the other place. It is our understanding that negotiations are under way that might cause this bill to go through all stages tomorrow.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we adjourn, the motion for adjournment, of course, will automatically be for 2 o'clock tomorrow. When Bill C-86 comes to us, will the government be in a position to provide the minister for the Committee of the Whole?

Senator MacDonald: I shall undertake to determine that.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before we depart, I think the record should also show that we have been treated to rather dazzling evidence of the bench strength available on the other side when, in the space of one day's sitting, the government has been led by two acting leaders. We are impressed with that bench strength.

Senator MacDonald: Thank you so much.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, October 9, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

THIRTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have the honour to present and table the Thirty First report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Honourable senators, this report approves certain salary scales for senators' secretaries. It is based on a report relating to these salaries and classifications from a subcommittee to the main committee. Because I voted against the report, I think I should make the same comment that I made at that time.

I believe that the secretaries in the Senate require and deserve an increase. However, I felt that the report from the subcommittee was insufficient to enable me to support the figures that were presented, just though they may be. I say that for the following reasons: First, there was nothing in the report that related the recommendation to the overall categories set up some time ago, after a long study, and based on the Hay report. Second, there was no information in the report as to what effect these changes would have on our negotiations with represented employees. The secretaries are unrepresented employees.

For those reasons I did not support the report, although I do support an increase. It may very well be that these figures would be fully justified if the information I had hoped to have had been provided, but it was not.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I understand it, we will have occasion at a later date to discuss the matter and approve the report. For the moment, however, the report is tabled with the Senate.

Senator Frith: That is correct.

CANADA-EUROPE PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN BANFF, ALBERTA— NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Friday next, October 16, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the Fifteenth Annual Meeting of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association held in Banff, Alberta, from September 21 to 25, 1987.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Finlay MacDonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, October 13, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

"ELEMENTS OF THE AGREEMENT"—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INITIALLED COPY OF DOCUMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to ask the Leader of the Government a question with respect to the document, which was tabled earlier this week, entitled "Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Elements of the Agreement".

I notice that in the House of Commons today the Deputy Prime Minister referred to documents tabled in that House containing initials of the parties to the agreement, if I understood him correctly.

I notice that there are no initials on this document—at least as far as I can determine—and that when one looks at it, it really is a drawing together of the elements of the agreement. Certainly, on its face, it is not a reproduction of the initialled agreement.

Could the Leader of the Government find out, or attempt to see, whether the initialled agreements, which formed the basis of this document, could be tabled in the Senate? As I say, I have not been able to find any initialled documents here, but maybe there is a document which I missed. But if I have not missed it, could I ask whether the Leader of the Government might find it possible to table the documents which were initialled by the two parties?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the document that my friend has in his hands—a copy of which I have in my hand—is entitled "Preliminary Transcript—Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Elements of the Agreement". That document has been distributed.

The document which I tabled the other day does carry the signatures of the people whose names I mentioned—Secretary Baker, Ambassador Murphy and one or two others from the United States side; Ms. Carney, Mr. Burney, Mr. Wilson and Ambassador Reisman for the Canadian side. But I do believe—and I have sent for the document that I have tabled—that the document that I tabled with those signatures and the document that my friend and I have in our hands are identical.

REQUEST FOR TABELING OF INITIALLED COPY OF DOCUMENT CONTAINING REFERENCE TO CANADA'S UNDERTAKING RE
PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Well, I will not press that point, but I want now to ask whether the minister could undertake to table the document, which was initialled by both parties, containing the sentence which was quoted in the Globe and Mail today to the effect that Canada undertakes to ensure the passage of the amendments contained in Bill C-22. Could we have the document—which was initialled, as I understand it, by the two parties—containing that commitment and which was not included in the documents which were finally released to the public?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The reference that the Leader of the Opposition made in his first question was to documents tabled in the House of Commons bearing, as he said, the initials of the negotiators. I will undertake to table in this house anything that has been tabled in the other House in this regard.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for that assurance. I simply want to ask the Leader of the Government if he will table the document, which was not subsequently released but which was initialled by Canada and the United States, which contains this sentence:

Canada has agreed to pass the pending amendments contained in Bill C-22 in respect of compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals.

Senator Murray: The Leader of the Opposition is referring to a document referred to in an article in the Globe and Mail. I do not know what the status of that document is.

What I have done in this house is table the agreement, the document that has been signed by the representatives of Canada and the United States, which represents the commitments and undertakings that Canada and the United States have made—the only commitments and undertakings that we have made.

If the document referred to in the Globe and Mail is a previous draft of an agreement or some document that emerged from a working party and was rejected, then that is not our document. That does not contain commitments of Canada and the United States and we do not take responsibility for that; that would be an earlier draft.

However, I shall have to inquire and make certain that all the relevant documents that have been tabled in the other place are tabled here and that the Senate has the documents that contain all the commitments and undertakings that Canada and the United States have made.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for his assurance that he will make further inquiries, but I want to make clear that what I have in mind is whether, in fact, there was a document initialled by both Canada and the United States which contained this commitment and which was approved and in play all day of October 3. That is a factual question. Did we initial a document which contained that sentence I have quoted? If so, can we see it? If so, why was that portion of the document subsequently deleted and at whose request? Further, is it a fact, as alleged in the Globe and Mail, that that deletion was made because it would prove embarrassing politically to the Government of Canada? Is it a fact that subsequently Canada undertook to provide to the government of the United States, in the words of the Globe and Mail, "a further communication, written or verbal," that would constitute the commitment that is contained in that deleted portion of the agreement?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I thought I had indicated very clearly the other day that the Government of Canada was quite willing to confirm orally, or in any other way, our intention to proceed with Bill C-22. We have made that clear, Lord knows, on enough occasions publicly, and we have told not only the Americans but the British, the Japanese, the French and anybody else who is interested. There is no mystery, no surprise, about that.

If the question was, "Are we committed to this legislation?", the answer is an unequivocal yes. If the question was, "Do you commit to its passage?", we could not give such an undertaking for the reasons I outlined the other day.

● (1410)

I will make inquiries about documents, but I am not clear as to the relevance of the question of the Leader of the Opposition. I am sure there are, as he must know, scores of draft documents that make their way from working parties to the ministers and chief negotiators in the course of one of these negotiations. But the only documents that are relevant for our purposes are the documents that contain the commitments made by the two governments. I do believe that the Senate now has those documents in hand, but I shall inquire to see whether there is anything else that needs to be tabled.

Senator MacEachen: I think there is a factual question here which goes beyond any of the comments which the Leader of the Government has made, and that is whether, at a certain point in the course of the negotiations, Canada had initialled a document, which was part of the free trade agreement, containing this sentence: "Canada has agreed to pass the pending amendments contained in Bill C-22 in respect of compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals." One can make all sorts of interpretations, but it is a question of fact whether, at a certain point, Canada did initial a document—namely, the free trade agreement—in which this sentence appeared. That is a question of fact and we can interpret it as we wish.

The second question of fact is whether that section was then deleted. If so, it would be interesting to inquire at whose request and why. Those are questions of fact. If we knew the facts, then we would make our own interpretations. I have no difficulty with the Leader of the Government's saying, "Yes, we wanted that bill through." But it is a different thing to want it through, because it is an essential part of the Free Trade Agreement in the minds of the Americans, and they regard it as a commitment that is integral to the overall deal. That is the point. I think the Leader of the Government is right in saying that the government is committed to the passage of the bill. But it becomes somewhat different if that commitment is an integral part of the Free Trade Agreement, as the American documentation says. The document says that both parties have agreed. At any rate, those are the questions. One can then make one's interpretations if one knows the answers to them.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, on several occasions the Leader of the Opposition has used the phrase "Did Canada sign?" or "Did Canada initial?". The documents that contained the commitment of Canada would have been signed or initialed by our Chief Negotiator, Ambassador Reisman or Ambassador Ritchie, the two ministers of the Crown who were present and Mr. Burney. I know, and I am sure the honourable Leader of the Opposition knows, that literally scores of documents come up to ministers from working parties. Perhaps they are initialed—sure, initialed—by the Americans and Canadians who participated in and led those working parties, documents which were later rejected or amended in one way or another by the chief negotiators for our side or the chief negotiators for the other side in the course of the negotiations. That is what happens.

The important thing is that a document emerged at the end of the process which contains the official commitments of both countries. My friend asks whether our intentions about Bill C-22—which are, as everybody knows, to do everything we can to see it pass through the Senate—form an integral part of the free trade agreement. They do not. But, as I think I indicated the day before yesterday, nobody should be surprised or scandalized that the matter would have come up when we began to discuss the overall question of intellectual property. I am sure that it does not scandalize or surprise the Leader of the Opposition that the Americans would have asked, "What are you doing about Bill C-22?" It is a matter on which our allies and economic partners in the world have been making representations since 1969. So that is not surprising.

We could not avoid discussing various current issues as we went along. There is a reference somewhere in here, under "financial services", to the Glass-Steagall Act and to amendments that are now before the Congress in respect of that act covering financial services, and, in the course of this agreement, we obtained an undertaking from the Americans that if a certain amendment now before the Congress were to go through Canadian banks would be included. That is in the agreement.

[Senator MacEachen.]

So, it is not surprising that current issues would come up in the course of the negotiations. I do not know what more I can say except to reiterate the point I made earlier that I will see that any documents that were tabled in the other place, and certainly any documents that contain any undertakings or commitments by Canada in respect of the free trade agreement, are tabled in this place.

Senator MacEachen: Would the Leader of the Government undertake to tell me whether, at a certain stage, a document was initialed by Canada and the United States which contained the sentence that I read twice?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will ascertain whether there was a draft that emerged from a working party on that subject; but even if there was, it is irrelevant if the commitment is not contained in the document that has been approved by both countries and contains the undertakings and commitments that emerged from the process.

Senator MacEachen: If the Leader of the Government has confirmed that there was no initialing, but has implied that such a document might have been initialed by a working party and was rejected by the leaders of the negotiations, I want to find out whether that actually happened or whether, indeed, the sentence in question did appear and was approved by the leader of the negotiations—in this case, Minister Carney or Mr. Reisman—and was subsequently removed at the request of Canada, on second thought. In other words, at a late stage Canada said, "This will prove embarrassing and we want it out." I want to know if that is true. I do not know whether it is true, but I want to find out.

Senator Murray: What would be the relevance of it?

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has asked me what would be the relevance—of the request?

Senator Murray: Of that kind of scenario?

Senator MacEachen: I am terribly simple in my approach to these matters. I just want to know the facts. If Canada did make the request and the United States acquiesced, did that country say, "Well, yes, we will let you take it out, but you have to give us an assurance on the side." Did that happen?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me repeat that surely the Americans know, surely we told them, that it is our intention to proceed with Bill C-22 and do everything we can to see it passed, but that we are in the hands of the Liberal majority in the Senate who have been delaying the bill; and there is no way that the government could undertake to have that bill passed—there is no way we could do that—because we could not carry out such an undertaking; the government does not have the required number of Conservative senators in this chamber.

Senator MacEachen: I understand all of that, and it is not germane to the point. Of course, the only way that we will ever know whether there is a link is for the Senate to refuse to pass this bill and then to see what happens to the Free Trade Agreement. It would be the final proof in the absence of information from the government. I assert that if this bill were not passed by the Senate, the free trade agreement would be seriously jeopardized, damaged and in danger, because the United States regards the passage of this bill as an essential part of the deal, and that Canada has committed itself to that end. That is my assertion, and I have established quite a bit of circumstantial evidence to support it. The best way for the Leader of the Government to prove that I am wrong is to provide precise answers to the questions I have asked. That is all.

● (1420)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have read and re-read the questions that were put to me and the answers that I gave on this subject the day before yesterday, and I shall do the same with the questions and answers we have had today. I think the Honourable Leader of the Opposition will find that my answers are quite precise.

Let me say that I agree with the honourable senator's assertion to this extent: If the Senate were to defeat Bill C-22, I believe that many congressmen and senators in the United States would think twice about their support for the Free Trade Agreement, because, surely, they would take such action as meaning that one of the houses of the Canadian Parliament was thumbing its nose at the spirit of this free trade agreement. Yes, I think that if honourable senators defeated Bill C-22 it would have that effect on the political climate in the United States. In fact, I had thought all along that my honourable friend—internationalist, free-trader and true Liberal that he is—was looking for a rationale for voting in favour of Bill C-22, and that the exchange the day before yesterday and the exchange today were providing him with that rationale.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, what the honourable senator has said is food for thought. He has pretty well proved my case. The Leader of the Government has said that the defeat of Bill C-22 by the Senate would be a damaging blow to the spirit of the Free Trade Agreement and that the U.S. Congress would take it in the same light. What more do we need to prove that there is a deep and integral linkage between the two?

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY—EXCLUSION OF LARGE ENTERPRISES FROM INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I have a press release from the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency entitled: Senator Lowell Murray gives a summary of the ACDA's activities. In one of the paragraphs, Senator Murray is quoted as Leader of the Government. It might be better if I read the said paragraph on page 3 of the release:

While speaking about the Agency's evolution, Senator Murray insisted on the fact that the Agency would grant no assistance for infrastructure projects except when directly related to small and medium businesses.

First, we should agree on a definition of an infrastructure project. Secondly, how will the relationship between infrastructure projects and small and medium businesses be determined? Thirdly, why should such assistance be refused to "big" business?

Such statements puzzle me. I really don't know where all this will lead us. What is meant by infrastructure projects? Is it water supply systems, sewers, water treatment or highway systems? How will they be directly linked? I repeat, why has "big" business been excluded?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there must be a distinction between the various programs which are now under my ministerial responsibility. Most projects mentioned by the honourable senator such as sewers and highways are covered by regional economic development sub-agreements. There would be no change.

When I spoke about infrastructure projects in my speech in Sydney, I was talking about the billion dollars allocated to the Agency over the next five years for new long term economic development programs.

The government does not exclude ERDA agreements. Sewer, highway and other projects which have been known for a long time are not excluded.

Senator Corbin: You did not react to the exclusion of "big" business?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there again some programs, such as IRDP, the regional development program, come under my departmental responsibility. In that case as well, loans and grants to major businesses are being considered.

NEW BRUNSWICK—PROSPECTS FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW PROJECTS BEFORE AND AFTER PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, in a somewhat different context, I would like to ask the following to the Leader of the Government. Since the beginning of the provincial election campaign in New Brunswick, we have been overwhelmed by scores of advertisements from the federal government.

Senator Murray: Overwhelmed!

Senator Corbin: Yes, overwhelmed and shocked by the—

Senator Murray: Shocked!

Senator Corbin: —shocked by the attempts of the federal government to save Premier Hatfield. That is my interpretation of that intervention in a provincial democratic exercise. We have never seen so many federal initiatives introduced during an election that only affects the people of New Brunswick.

Of course, many of those announced projects are not always very well defined. Some projects may have been ready for some months but the government decided to wait for the provincial election before making the announcement. Here is my question: Can the people of New Brunswick expect other federal projects to be introduced within the few remaining days before the election campaign ends in New Brunswick?

Senator Murray: The answer is yes.

Senator Frith: What is the answer?

Senator Murray: Yes.

Senator Corbin: Does the Leader of the Government really believe that those additional projects to be announced will really save Premier Hatfield?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, some plans have matured, to use my honourable friend's word. We will communicate the good news to the people of New Brunswick.

The federal government made a clear, unequivocal and solid commitment about economic development of the whole area including New Brunswick, regardless of the political stripe of its provincial government.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the answer to this question is yes.

Senator Corbin: Does the Leader of the Government believe that there will be any federal program left after October 13?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it all depends on the ability of the provincial government to negotiate good agreements with the federal government. I must confess that the present Premier of New Brunswick is very well known for his skill as a negotiator.

Senator Frith: And for the stripe of his party!

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer.

DIEFENBAKER CENTRE, UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

FINANCIAL CRISIS—FURTHER REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I have the answer to a question raised by Senator Buckwold on September 30, 1987, regarding the financial crisis in the Diefenbaker Centre and the request for further government assistance.

(The answer follows:)

The government is aware of the financial situation facing the University of Saskatchewan and the provincial government with regard to the Diefenbaker Centre.

Talks are currently under way between the interested parties and a solution is being actively pursued on this matter.

[Senator Corbin.]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—MOTION TO TELEVISION PROCEEDINGS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion, as modified, of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rousseau:

That pool television cameras be permitted in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of recording the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole with respect to its hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the proceedings be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am obliged to my colleagues in the Senate for allowing me to adjourn the debate yesterday in my name in order to obtain further information on the subjects raised during that debate.

Yesterday there was a question raised with regard to access to the video tape and whether various networks would be able to remove whatever clips they want from the total VCR package. The answer is that they would be able to do so, because all networks who are members of the Press Gallery would have access to the material.

There was a question asked by Senator Romeo LeBlanc as to whether cable companies would have access to the unedited or the full tapes in order to provide programming, if they wished, on cable stations or on cable networks. I discussed that with Mr. Don Newman, president of the Press Gallery, this morning. He said he did not know the answer, but that he would give us an answer in due course.

We are talking about access, of course, rather than an electronic Hansard. We should realize that it is quite possible that on certain days when the Committee of the Whole is sitting cameras may not show up at all because of the fact that it is access we are giving rather than an automatic feed. What might show up on the newscasts will not represent every aspect of the three-hour committee hearing. However, as Senator Romeo LeBlanc pointed out, it might very well be that some cable stations or cable networks, if given access to the tapes, would develop programming based on those tapes.

There was another question about the threat to privacy caused by zoom lenses. If there were cameras in the gallery, there might be a sufficient angle to have that happen. However, at the angles we are talking about here I do not think it would be possible. In any event, I think we can be assured that there would be no interest on the part of the cameramen to record anything except what is relevant to the proceedings. They would realize that any breach of confidence would certainly put an end to the privilege accorded to them of being here.

Honourable senators, I hope Senator Finlay MacDonald and I made it clear yesterday that we are looking at this purely as a matter of access and as an experiment, with the senators being in complete control. If at any point we decide it is not working or if we want anything changed, we can insist on it being done.

● (1440)

I ask that the motion pass, unless someone wishes to adjourn the debate. One reason for asking that the motion pass today is that if Senator Murray appears before us next week, and if we do proceed to allow this access, we should be able to start Tuesday with two aspects of the technical side. There should be some work done in the chamber on Tuesday to make sure that the feed from the desk is clear. Also, an AC plug-in should be obtained to avoid using batteries, which might have to be changed during the proceedings. Those are the two reasons for having this motion passed today. I would not want that work to be carried out if we did not have the authority of the Senate to have these cameras placed in the chamber.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: I would imagine, Senator Frith, that all the sittings which will be taped will be available on request over the parliamentary network.

Senator Frith: This question of the availability of tapes for cable and network just mentioned by Senator David was raised by Senator LeBlanc of New Brunswick. I have not had an answer to that question yet. There may be problems of copyright. I hope not, but the issue has not been settled up to now.

Senator David: Honourable senators, I am not sure that I made my point very clearly. I can well understand that the whole programs will not be available for private networks or even for public networks like the CBC. But we have a parliamentary network here which has many channels we can watch in our office. It would be unfortunate if it is impossible for us to watch from our office sittings we have not been able to attend because we were away or for some other reason. I would like to know if we will be able to watch the proceedings on television in our own office.

Senator Frith: I think that arrangements can be made to have tapes on request. It would not be automatically available, but only on request. You can be sure that I will raise this question with Mr. Newman. We do not foresee the same kind of problem, that is copyright and similar problems, concerning the question Senator David has raised. I do not think there would be any problem to make the tapes available on request.

Senator David: I also imagine, Senator Frith, that during the recording of these sessions cameras will be essentially focused on the main witness, but that any senator asking a question will have the opportunity to be seen at the same time he or she is heard.

Am I right in thinking that if you intervene—because questions are sometimes very long, as they are often preceded by comments longer than the question itself—your comments will also be available?

Senator Frith: Yes, we asked that the camera be focused on the senator, the witness or the chairman of the Committee of the Whole. That is the reason why we tried to change the position of the witnesses. We wanted the two cameras to be able to focus on any person who might intervene during a sitting.

Senator David: Then the whole chamber will be covered?

Senator Frith: This is correct, Senator David.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Frith to elaborate on the meaning of the words underlined in the third paragraph of his motion. I might as well quote the whole paragraph.

That the proceedings be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable.

I would like Senator Frith to tell us the meaning of this underlined expression and, conversely, to what extent these principles and practices would not be applicable to the Senate? What is meant, precisely, by that?

Senator Frith: I believe that these words were underlined because they were added as an amendment to the motion. My original motion ended with the words "House of Commons".

If I remember correctly, the following question had been raised: How would it be possible to apply fully the rules of the other place, when the idea is only to give access here to television cameras, while in the other place, it is rather a sort of electronic Hansard.

Moreover, I believe that we had added these words to indicate that it was to the extent that it could apply to the Senate. There are rules of the House of Commons which cannot be applied here because they concern some elements of the electronic Hansard.

Senator Corbin: It seems to me that you have indeed addressed one of the aspects of the question. But in terms of broadcasting our proceedings, I think it goes beyond that.

For instance, it is understood that the camera will show, not the whole chamber or one complete side of the chamber, but the person whom the Speaker has recognized. That is the way they do it in the House of Commons.

When nobody has the floor, the camera will be directed at the Chair. There is a sort of wide shot showing the table of the clerks and the Chair in the distance. There is a reason for that.

I do not see that there is here any absolute, guaranteed protection against what is called a "panning" camera shot. The camera operator could for instance pan from the witness sitting behind the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, or in front of him, and back to Senator Frith. In so doing, he would show all those empty seats as we have today.

What an impression that would create in the eyes of the public! What an opinion of the Senate that would give the public!

Are we therefore going to provide camera operators with guidelines to prevent them from doing that kind of panning across the chamber so that they simply aim their cameras at the person who has been seen by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole or, in the case of the Senate, who has risen?

If not, I think this house's good reputation is doomed. That is not done in the House of Commons, that kind of panning, in order to avoid exactly the kind of problem I have just described, that of disappointing the public. The public could see an almost empty House of Commons. Such is generally the case in most debates in the House of Commons. So much so that when the House of Commons' Speaker recognizes a member that is sitting, say in the fourth seat at the end of the second row, and there is nobody behind him, generally the whip of the party involved invites other members to sit behind him to leave the public under the impression that the House is full, that he is being listened to, and so on.

Therefore, I want to know to what extent that procedure will be respected for the television broadcasting of the Senate's debate? Otherwise, I am telling honourable senators that in the absence of that kind of guarantee, I could very well oppose the motion. I might be the only one to do so, or there might be a small group. I never supported the entry of television cameras in the House of Commons. God knows it is impossible to get them out now!

I have seen the quality of debates in the House of Commons gradually deteriorate. Rather than concentrating on the matter before the House, Members of Parliament have become actors, performers for a wide public, instead of discussing among reasonable people, debating among themselves to find genuine solutions to the problems at hand.

If that criticism can be raised regarding the use of television in the other place, in my view, the same holds even more true for the Senate, the so-called "second-thought chamber". Besides, when I agreed to come to the Senate, I thought I would be free once and for all from those spotlights that are required, of course, for the electronic recording of proceedings.

I never thought I would again act for the public, nor did the judges of the Supreme Court, I guess. I think that the present members of that court might be opposed to the idea that one day their proceedings would be televised or recorded. The same holds for any court in this country.

Our role is basically a legislative one but we also act as a court. We are not here—especially since we are not elected—to show off so as to get public opinion on our side. Canadians have other ways to react if they do not agree with what is being said or done. At this time, one only needs to read the papers, where editorials for and against are to be found, to realize that the public is well informed about what is taking place in the Senate. Whether debating Bill C-22, the borrowing power of the government, the Meech Lake Accord or the fisheries issue, we deal with it in a general way.

Does Senator Frith really believe that televising the proceedings of the Senate will improve the quality of our work and the degree of participation of senators?

I am not sure that it will be the case. I humbly say to you that I do not want to speak before television cameras. It really puts me off. I did not come here to be an actor or a player. If some of my colleagues have a propensity for that career, this is not the right place. They should have gone to Toronto, Hollywood, Montreal or elsewhere to pursue that career. I also know some of our colleagues do not want to or dare not speak, but are nonetheless opposed for reasons I have just described.

Therefore, I add this comment to the one on the camera panning to let you know there is considerable reluctance, although I must admit there is within our own political party a willingness to introduce cameras here, in the Senate, as an experiment. Indeed, how far will the experiment go? Whenever something is introduced on a trial basis in Parliament, we soon realize we get stuck with it for a very long time without any way of getting rid of it.

I am sorry if I repeat what I said earlier this year, but I think strong opinions bear repeating. I have yet to be sold on the idea that it would be useful and essential for the public to televise Senate debates and for senators to appear on television screens in the hope they will perform better.

I do not see any relation between the two and believe the Senate should remain as it is and has always been.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, starting with the end, I will say that I am not sure that cameras in this chamber will improve the quality of debates. I have listened to a lot of debates over the last 10 years and their quality makes me confident that their broadcasting will actually improve the image of the Senate. I cannot, off hand, remember a single occasion where I would have been ashamed should the public have witnessed our debates through the media.

To answer the question, I am certain that television cameras will in no way bring disrepute to the Senate. I am sure of that. Even if the quality of debates remains as it has always been, they will contribute to raising the reputation of the Senate among the public.

What I regret most is that, as a rule, Canadians are not aware of the quality of debates in the Senate.

As to the guarantee concerning panning, we talked about it. We made sure that cameramen would be fully aware of and pay attention to this problem. They will make every effort to avoid the difficulty mentioned by Senator Corbin. That is why we should try the system and see for ourselves. We are the ones in charge. If it does not work, we can change our minds. As of now, I do not think that panning would be a problem for access to the network, because we would use cassettes.

As to the possibility mentioned by Senator David and Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour) of New Brunswick, we should avoid that kind of panning for this reason. The problem mentioned by technicians is precisely that: cameras that move very rapidly would produce a kind of blurring. If they can, they will shut off the camera for panning and then put it on again not only for the reasons explained by Senator Corbin but also for their own reasons, that is to avoid the blurring that occurs when the camera moves too rapidly. Could I add that—

[English]

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I am afraid I will now have to leave the chamber. I would like the Speaker to be apprised of the fact that if I do so I believe a quorum will be lacking.

[Translation]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I can only guarantee then that we are aware of the problem.

[English]

Hon. William M. Kelly: Is it still appropriate to ask a question of Senator Frith?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, to be sure I understand this matter I would like Senator Frith to clarify for me the meaning of the following:

... Committee of the Whole with respect to its hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to;

Does that mean that this motion does not relate specifically to the hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord but that it establishes coverage which could only be terminated with a future resolution to that effect?

My personal wish is that this motion refer specifically and exclusively to hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, beginning and end. Then, after senators have had an opportunity to examine the effect and the results, the only way televising could take place would be if a new motion were agreed to.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the reason that reference is made in the motion to "the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to" is because at that time the motion that referred that matter to the Committee of the Whole was so worded. In other words, it was simply an attempt to match the motion for televising the proceedings with the one that is, in fact, before the committee. All that is before the committee at the present time is the following:

... the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to;

The reason we inserted the words "and texts subsequently agreed to;" is because at the time the motion was made for a reference to the Committee of the Whole there was no Langevin accord. There was only the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord. At that time, in order to be certain that we would deal with everything relating to the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, we inserted the words "and texts subsequently agreed to;".

Indeed, what happened was that the Langevin accord was a text subsequently agreed to. When Senator Murray moves his motion, which deals with the Langevin text, then I assume that would go too.

We are not purporting to deal with anything except the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord as such, and as the term is understood.

I believe that when someone speaks these days about Meech Lake they are not, usually, talking about the lake, they are talking about the accord. They would be talking about the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord, the Langevin accord and the text that was the subject of a resolution in the other place under the Constitution, and the text which will be the basis of the resolution put forward here by Senator Murray.

I believe that when Senator Murray actually moves his motion we will have caught up on all the versions and we will have before us the exact matter we want to have before us—and which I think Senator Kelly would want us to have—namely, the text of Senator Murray's motion, which is on the order paper but which he has not yet moved.

● (1500)

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I think I understand the answer as to how the wording got the way it is. However, I would like to ask Senator Frith, as simply as I possibly can, this question: When the television process pertaining to the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and all things relevant to it is complete, will a further motion be required in order to have any more television in the chamber?

Senator Frith: Oh, I'm sorry, yes. All we are authorizing here is television access to the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole on the subject of the Meech Lake accord. Once that committee reports, then, if senators want to have television coverage of any proceeding of the Senate, a new motion would have to be put. I apologize for giving such a long answer to the other question. The answer is yes, permission is being given to televise the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake package.

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, I do not think we can proceed any longer. We do not have a quorum.

Senator Frith: I believe that is up to the Speaker, honourable senators.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, no one has asked that we adjourn. I understood a while ago what Senator Lang said, and I understand what Senator Le Moynes has said, but so far no one has asked that the Senate adjourn. Based on that, I think I have the authority to continue, unless an honourable senator makes a motion.

Rule 8 states:

When it appears, on notice being taken at the commencement of or during a sitting of the Senate, that fifteen senators, including the Speaker, are not present, the senators who may be in the adjoining rooms having been previously summoned, the Speaker shall adjourn the Senate until the next sitting day, without question put.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think it is simply a question of the verb used by Senator Le Moynes. It is not that we "cannot" proceed, but if we go through the process of insisting to the Speaker that we should not proceed, then we will ring the bells to try to bring in a quorum. At that point we could use the verb "cannot" continue. At the moment, however, there is no problem in terms of being able to continue.

Senator Le Moyne: Honourable senators, I would like something clarified.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: We now have 15 senators.

Senator Le Moyne: I am putting a question. The motion that we are dealing with is quite important. It is the mores of the Senate that are involved. I wonder if we can continue the discussion without a quorum and then vote without a quorum. Certainly not.

I am ashamed to see this house in this state!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, there are now 15 senators in the chamber and we have a quorum.

Senator Le Moyne: Very well.

Senator Frith: On the point that was implied in Senator Le Moyne's question, if there is a feeling that there are not enough senators in the chamber to deal with the motion—and there are now 15, making a quorum—then, of course, I will not insist. I am not trying to railroad this through. The other day questions were put and I thought I had adequately answered most of them. I asked that it be dealt with so we can do some technical work on Tuesday.

I repeat that if any senator feels that it would be unseemly to proceed with this number of senators present—and I accept it is barely a quorum—I will certainly not insist on a vote.

Senator Le Moyne: Honourable senators, if it is only a question of feeling, my feeling is that we should not proceed. If it is another question, well, I will follow the opinions of my colleagues, who are much more learned than I am in these matters. But the state of the house as it is right now is, for me, unacceptable. I am ashamed of it!

Senator Frith: I think the correct procedure, then, would be for some senator to move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Kelly, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: In the absence of a quorum!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, might I be permitted a question? A motion has been put and I believe it is debatable. Where do we go from here? Until what time is the Senate adjourned?

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The Senate is adjourned until Tuesday next at 2 p.m.

Senator Corbin: The Senate is adjourned until Tuesday at 2 p.m. Why were we called here today?

Senator Murray: We were called against the possibility that Bill C-86 would have been approved by the House of Commons and sent to this chamber.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to put on the record—and this has to do with the adjournment motion—that I feel rather frustrated by the fact that there is barely a quorum in the house. Nobody will fault me for not attending; I am here most days, and on days I am not here I am on bona fide committee work elsewhere in Ottawa or outside Ottawa, because I consider it my duty to be here. I postponed a trip to New Brunswick that was supposed to have taken place today, which is the best day for me to travel to that province. I travel by car, because I do not have air service to Grand-Falls, New Brunswick. I have to drive back from New Brunswick as well, and I hate doing it on weekends when the daredevils, the Sunday drivers and what-have-you are out on the road.

If I, as a “new boy”—as some senators around here have sometimes called me—am able to perform my duties as a senator, the first of which is to be here when the Senate is called, then I cannot for the life of me understand why we can only muster 15 senators in total. Like Senator Le Moyne, I find it unacceptable. It imposes a burden on me—not a burden to do my duty but a great sacrifice, inasmuch as the time I could use to travel back to New Brunswick is taken away from me simply because I consider it my duty to be here today.

Other senators—perhaps some of the new boys—are able to fly back home first class, business class, “Connaissance”, or what-have-you; they can come in on Tuesday morning and depart Thursday evening; but when the Senate is asked to sit on Friday, it is a “no show” for them.

Yesterday at the time that we had Royal Assent I do not believe we had a quorum. Today we were called here in the expectation that the other place would deal with legislation to force the postal employees back to work, but that so far has not materialized. I suppose that some senators were wise and thought that the House of Commons would not dispose of the bill today and therefore they would be wasting their time sitting in Ottawa waiting for the Senate to have a sober second look at the legislation.

So here I find myself, at 3.30 p.m., with perhaps four hours of daylight left, and I am not going to go out there and drive in my car to New Brunswick because I would have to drive for two-thirds of that route in darkness, and I am unable to drive when it is dark.

Therefore, I come back to my original comment: Why in the world is there not better planning of the work of this house, and why don't the members of this house work together and perform their duties? We are told by polls that the public is crying for reform of the Senate. Some say, “Let us abolish it,” and others say, "Let us elect it;" and there are as many formulas as there are groups or individuals with respect to the election of the Senate. It is on occasions such as this that those people are given darn good reasons to do something about the Senate.

This matter has been on my mind for some time. I have been here for only three years. I am a new boy; but I am really depressed at the way this place operates, and barely operates a lot of the time, with just about the essentials of a quorum, and sometimes not even that.

Honourable senators may forgive me for saying that at this time, but we had darned well better do something about it, because some day we will find someone out there with a padlock on the door.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, permit me to say a few words. I appreciate the points made by Senator Corbin, particularly the way in which the events of the past day or so have affected his personal plans.

However, I believe the record should show that the government and the country have been faced for some days with the possibility of a mail strike. Every effort was made to encourage the parties to arrive at a settlement without intervention by Parliament, and it was not until very late yesterday morning that the decision was taken by the cabinet that the public interest demanded that we bring in a bill to send the strikers back to work and to provide for mediation and arbitration of the dispute.

It is well known that the Senate usually adjourns on Thursday afternoon. By the time I was in a position to speak with the Leader of the Opposition on this matter, most honourable senators had made their plans to leave Ottawa for the weekend. Those plans are difficult to change, because weekend reservations are very difficult to obtain. So, given the amount of notice which it was possible to give at the time, I do not really reproach those colleagues who were not able to change their plans to be here today.

I knew at noon yesterday that the legislation was coming forward; but whether it would clear the House of Commons yesterday or today was a matter that was in the hands not of the government but of the opposition parties in that chamber. Discussions went forward yesterday, but circumstances changed suddenly when what formerly had been rotating strikes turned into virtually a nationwide strike. We had thought that that might have persuaded the opposition parties in the House of Commons to expedite passage of the bill, but we were not sure until today that that could not happen.

I regret that the legislation was not before us today. I do not reproach those senators who did not find it possible to change their plans yesterday in order to be with us today. On behalf of the government I thank those honourable senators who did so, and I would simply say that all of us are victims of the circumstances in which the country finds itself.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have rarely risen under such auspices in a little debate; but, because I have a very important appointment, you may be sure that it will be very much a "speechette".

I share the anguish of Senator Corbin. I am one of those who could not see one iota of a likelihood that there would be a settlement, considering what people had said yesterday; but, nevertheless, had something happened in the lower house, had they processed the legislation in three readings, the Canadian public, who do not really love us all that much, would have been told, "The other fellows have gone home until Tuesday at 2 o'clock." That, it seems to me, would have merited an even greater degree of opprobrium directed against our honourable house than what Senator Corbin has mentioned.

I also had the feeling, as an old Presbyterian, that I so often used to have when I got a little upset when the minister would give hell to those people who did not go to church—and the ones he was talking to were the ones who were there.

Senator Le Moyne: Honourable senators, all this is very nice, but I think that when we do not have a quorum we should not proceed. It is a question of honour. Even if the rule is not very clear, the honour of the Senate and of honourable senators says that we should not proceed to deal with anything when we do not have a quorum. In a way, we do not exist without a quorum!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish, that the Senate do now adjourn. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 13, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 13, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Ian Sinclair, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I ask permission of the Senate to revert, if necessary, to Notices of Motions.

I was consulted by the clerk of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee with respect to permission to meet while the Senate is sitting, but I must confess that it was on the basis that I thought that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee would be meeting at 5 o'clock. If both committees meet at the same time, there might be a conflict for some members. If I may have time to consult, I shall revert later.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

BENEFITS TO CANADA—SUGGESTED SENATE COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he could tell us whether or not the government will be initiating public hearings respecting the recent trade pact with the United States, because the explanations that we have had from the ministers directly involved and, indeed, the chief negotiator, Simon Reisman, have been general. They constantly say that it is good for Canada. In fact, the Prime Minister has said on many occasions that it will be a good deal for Canada or there will be no deal at all. We now have something signed and, I guess, if you take that statement literally, it must be a good deal for Canada. But the problem is that the generality of the response that you get from the people who are involved in the negotiations offers no evidence for anyone to see specifically what it is that is so good for Canada.

The other part of the problem is that we are told repeatedly that there might be some short-term pain for long-term gain. That is a story that we have heard once before by another group of ministers. Of course, when the Canadian people got a chance to deal with that, they promptly dismissed that government. I would not want that to happen to this government so rapidly, so we would need an opportunity for them to explain just what it is in this agreement that is so good for Canada.

I would suggest that some hearings be sponsored by the Senate, because we do those things rather well. We have held such hearings on a number of occasions, particularly with regard to Bill C-22 and other matters where explanations were needed. Then people will understand what it is in this trade agreement that is so good for Canada.

He need look no further than his own province and his own region. He need do no more than ask Canadian livestock producers, who will benefit from the opening of the United States market to Canadian exports of red meat. He need do no more than talk to farmers generally, who will find that, as a result of this agreement, their products will have more competitive access to the United States. Certainly, he need do no more than talk to anyone in the energy business, where this agreement will encourage the development of Canadian energy resources and, that being the case, it will add to our energy security and contribute to regional development. I have in mind such obvious matters as the development of frontier and offshore energy resources. He need look no further than his own province and his own region to see the obvious benefits that will come to Canada from this agreement.

If he wants to broaden his horizon just a bit, as I am sure he does, he can look to other provinces, other regions and to the nation as a whole to see that there is an obvious benefit to Canada. He need only ask consumers, wherever they are located, what they think of an agreement that is going to bring lower prices for consumer products, to put it very simply.

So far as the process is concerned, what they do in the House of Commons with regard to committee hearings is a matter for discussion among the House leaders in that chamber. I have already suggested to honourable senators that we should consider referring this agreement to, for example, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs so that honourable senators will have an opportunity to examine the responsible ministers and consider the agreement in detail. That is a matter that can be taken up between our own house leaders here.

I want to assure honourable senators that we would cooperate in any such study by one of our standing committees.

Senator Olson: I thank the honourable minister for what, I think, was something of a commitment that there will be some further explanation of what is involved.

However, I have to tell him that his explanation of all those things that are so good for us, prior to the undertaking that he gave, are worth about as much as the stuff we have heard up until now. They are some opinions—based on what?

I have seen a copy of the document that has been circulated to members of Parliament in both chambers. By the way, I spent most of last week in Washington, which some people are now calling “the new capital of Canada”! While there, I talked to many people who are fairly knowledgeable about what the negotiations led up to. That is why I am curious about what it says in the deal that is new and important and that was not previously part of Canada-U.S. trade relations.

The Leader of the Government has chosen to pick out energy, which he says will show such an important improvement over what was there before. Honourable senators, we were committed to share with the United States before. We have been committed to sharing our energy resources, particularly oil, with the United States since 1974, if there was a shortage. There is nothing new in that. I also know very well, as does the Leader of the Government, that if we got into a very serious situation where there was a shortage that required us to share our natural gas flow with consumers in the United States we would do that in any event. There is no question about that, so what is so great about that?

I have read the agreement and there is nothing in it that advances us from where we were—

Senator Doody: Question!

Senator Olson: —with respect to sharing our energy resources with the United States. If anyone is making any great pipe dream about that, he had better go back and look at the agreement again. That is why I think there must be some explanation of the meaning of those terms. Where is the advancement? Where is the guarantee that the Americans are going to buy it? That is the problem we have had in the past, and the Leader of the Government knows that very well. That is what he is trying to base these expectations on now.

The agreement says that we will share energy resources in the event there is a shortage of supply. As to his other opinions about the farm trade, I would like the Leader of the Government to lay before us the restrictions that are to be removed with respect to the movement of cattle and beef back and forth over the border. There were no serious impediments before, so what is so great about that?

Honourable senators, these are the kinds of questions that good, honest, sincere Canadians are asking. We know that our sovereignty has been diluted in some ways, but it really is unreasonable to put forward these kinds of opinions when there is no substantive evidence contained in the trade pact to support them. The Leader of the Government should give an undertaking that these things will be explained and that a proper forum will be provided for those explanations. That is what he should do instead of giving us these two-bit opinions that don't mean anything.

Senator Doody: Good question!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do hope that my friend's comments will be drawn to the attention of the Right Honourable John Turner, who has taken quite a different perspective on the energy component of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. I think the honourable senator's comments point out the necessity for a committee study at which senators could ask detailed questions of responsible ministers—

Senator MacEachen: Are there any?

Senator Murray: —and, perhaps, of our negotiators.

Let me say that with regard to energy the honourable senator has focused on one aspect of it; that is, the sharing in times of shortage. As he correctly points out, we have been committed to sharing shortages in the international energy agreement since some time in the 1970s—1974, I understand—with regard to oil. Natural gas is now included in the arrangement with the United States. But with regard to energy generally, I put it to him that Canadian exports of uranium, natural gas and electricity have been threatened by initiatives taken politically in the United States. These threats will be removed under the free trade agreement.

I tell him that, as I mentioned before, Alberta, potentially the Atlantic provinces and northern Canada stand to gain from the provisions with regard to oil and gas exports, and that Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, Manitoba and New Brunswick stand to gain from increased electricity exports. I point out to him the obvious benefits from provisions in the free trade agreement to the Saskatchewan uranium industry.

Honourable senators, the benefits are there for those who want to see them. I suggest that my friend should consult with the leadership on his side and we will move to refer this agreement to one of our standing committees, where he will have the opportunity to examine ministers and negotiators and to obtain all of the detailed assurances that I know he is looking forward to as to the benefits of this arrangement for Canada and for the United States. It is an arrangement that will be of enormous economic benefit to both our countries.

• (1410)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has again expressed an opinion. I have read the agreement reasonably carefully. It is true that all of these other energy sources, such as hydro electricity, natural gas and uranium, are included in the arrangement we will have for freer trade. It also says that we are going to supply them in cases of shortage. But there are some terms and conditions respecting that shortage which are not very much different from what existed before. I know too that there have been many occasions—I said, “many”; I should say not more than a dozen, but certainly more than one occasion—when they were short of natural gas and because of severely cold weather they required some temporary supplies in excess of the permits that were issued, and Canada supplied it. So what is new about that? In the case of an emergency, Canada, as a good neighbour, would always do that.

However, the other side of the coin, honourable senators, is that there should be embodied in the agreement something that stipulates that they buy it when the investment in the deliverability capability has been put into place. We know what happened to many producers and others who invested in pipelines, and so on, to effect the delivery of gas from Canadian fields. When a bubble or sausage, or whatever you want to call it, of gas occurred down there, the pipelines were used to a degree way below capacity and were used way below the level that was needed to meet the amortization commitments. Where is that in the agreement? It is not there.

Senator Murray: It is a question of supply and demand.

Senator Olson: We can have an agreement that the government holds up as being a great thing for Canadians, but where is the assurance that the people who invest in the gas fields, and the gathering and delivery systems of that gas, will have a reasonable level of sales so that they can make the payments? We have had some pretty sad experiences while this government has been in office with respect to that matter. Let the minister explain that and explain what is good for those Canadians in the energy industry, or else let us refer the matter to a committee so that we can find out what some of those terms mean. I have seen terminology like that before. If they do not want to buy our gas, we will bloody well keep it and service the debt on those facilities under much lower sales. That is what we are looking for.

Senator Murray: Is this a lament for the National Energy Policy? The fact of the matter is that what we have entrenched in the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement is the energy policy of the present government, and not the discredited energy policy of our predecessors.

Senator Olson: Wrong, wrong, wrong!

Senator Murray: So far as the Canadian oil and gas producers are concerned, what they have always wanted is not government intervention in prices but markets; and this agreement gives them the assurance of those markets.

[Senator Murray.]

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: Let us hear a commitment so that we can refer it to some place and draw this out, because for me that is not the way it reads.

BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—FINDINGS OF BI-NATIONAL PANEL AND TRADE COMMISSION—RIGHT OF RETTALIATORY ACTION BY INJURED PARTY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government the questions on the free trade deal which last week I promised I would keep asking him.

I note that on April 2 Prime Minister Mulroney told the New York Times that in a free trade agreement “the trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada.” In this document, which the Leader of the Government himself gave me—this was his own copy; I am sure he has another, and I am very grateful to him for being so very generous—we have had quoted the last paragraph of “C” on page 7, which says:

The decision of a panel shall be binding on the Parties and their investigating authorities. The panel may uphold or remand the decision to the relevant investigating authority for action not inconsistent with such decision.

Is the decision of such a panel unanimous? Is it a consensus?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I presume that the majority decision will suffice, since the provision, as I recall, is to have a panel nominated equally by Canada and the United States. Both Canada and the United States would nominate an equal number to the panel, and both countries would have to agree on a fifth member to be nominated to the panel. I assume that the purpose of that provision is to give the panel the authority to carry such decisions, and they would be effective on the majority vote. I take it that answers the honourable senator's question.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, that is the question. However, if that provision is binding, why do we have, on page 30 of the agreement, provision for a commission to which one of the parties can appeal? Provision No. 6 reads, in part:

... the Commission may refer any dispute under any ... chapter to binding arbitration ... with such procedures as the Commission may adopt.

On page 29, provision No. 1, under the heading “Consultation,” reads:

Either Party may request consultations regarding any actual or proposed measure or any other matter which it considers affects the operation of this Agreement, whether or not the measure or matter has been notified in accordance with the notification Article.

I go back to provision No. 6, on page 30, which reads, in part:

If a Party or its subdivisions fails to implement in a timely fashion the findings of a binding arbitration panel regarding its measure or measures and the Parties are unable to agree on appropriate compensation, then the other Party shall have the right to suspend the application of equivalent benefits of the Agreement to the non-complying Party.

So, there is provision for appeal to this commission beyond the bi-national panel.

Provision No. 1, on page 28 of the agreement, reads, in part:

The Parties hereby establish the Canada-United States Trade Commission . . . to supervise the proper implementation of the Agreement, to resolve disputes that may arise over the interpretation and application of the Agreement—

So, it has been foreseen that even after something has gone to the bi-national panel and a decision has been taken there may still be disagreement, which would then go before a commission. Is that correct, sir?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, this points up the necessity for having the matter discussed in a committee. The honourable senator is reading back and forth between various provisions of the agreement. Let me say simply that there are three matters involved here: first, disputes that arise between the parties concerning the general provisions of the agreement; second, disputes that arise between the parties concerning the application of domestic, countervail and anti-dumping law; and, third, disputes that arise between the parties concerning proposed changes in domestic, countervail and anti-dumping law. The provisions, of necessity, vary from one category to another. I really do not think that the oral Question Period is the time to go into detail on these matters. I would suggest to the honourable senator that he take the matters up in committee when we form one, or put a written question on the order paper that can be answered with the kind of precision I presume he is looking for.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I shall try to help the Honourable Leader of the Government. Let him look at page 27 of his document, where it says in bold letters, "Institutional Provisions," and underneath that the subtitle "Application." Provision No. 1 reads, in part:

. . . the provisions of this part shall apply to avoidance or settlement of all disputes respecting the interpretation or application of this Agreement, . . .

It says here, in English, that this covers everything. If the language does not mean what it says, could someone please tell me that—in which case we have a terrible agreement?

● (1420)

We turn the page, then, to page 28, paragraph 1, and, as on page 27, as a means of settling all disputes respecting the interpretation or application of this agreement:

The Parties hereby establish the Canada-United States Trade Commission (the Commission) to supervise the proper implementation of the Agreement, to resolve disputes that may arise over the interpretation . . .

Then, if I may, I would like to turn to page 30, paragraph 6. In my scenario we have gone to the commission; the Americans have imposed upon us the countervail action. Let us say that they are saying that medicare is an unfair subsidy with respect to a particular export. We have said, "No, it is not." Perhaps the bilateral commission has found that we are right, but the American government does not apply the findings of the commission as provided—and this is a conjecture that is justified by the language in this agreement.

We then go to the commission and we are told, as appears at page 30, paragraph 6:

If a Party or its subdivisions fails to implement in a timely fashion the findings of a binding arbitration panel regarding its measure or measures and the Parties are unable to agree on appropriate compensation, then the other Party shall have the right to suspend the application of equivalent benefits of the Agreement to the non-complying Party.

In other words, at the end of the day, when all is said and done—according to what this paper says—retaliation is what we are left with. Is that right or is it not?

Senator Steuart: Yes or no?

Senator Doody: Both!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the dispute-settlement mechanisms in this agreement are as binding as are any dispute-settlement mechanisms in international law. That is my information, and that is the assurance that I am authorized to give to the honourable senator. However, I have no doubt that at the end of the day, when all is said and done, the honourable senator will still be asking questions.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Lucier!

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have one more question. Let us then turn to page 32, paragraph 7. This reinforces my case:

If the Commission has not reached agreement on a mutually satisfactory resolution within one month of receiving the final report of the panel (or such other date as the Commission may decide), and a Party considers that its fundamental rights under the Agreement are or would be impaired by the implementation or maintenance of the measure or measures of the other Party, the first Party shall be free to suspend the application to the other Party of benefits of equivalent effect until such time as the Parties have reached agreement on a resolution of the dispute.

In other words, if the American elephant persists in injuring us, we, the Canadian mouse, can kick it, and vice versa. Is that not what this language says?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, once more, this matter came up the other day. When this agreement is ratified by the United States Congress, the United States will have bound itself by this international treaty, which becomes part of their law.

The scenario that my honourable friend is developing here is that the United States, once having submitted itself to the rule of law by signing an international treaty and having bound itself by that international treaty, will then not abide by that treaty. That is the scenario that the honourable senator is conjuring up, and we simply do not accept that scenario as being valid or likely.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Lucier?

Senator Gigantès: I would like to ask a supplementary question. Why is there language in this document which takes care of the eventuality that one of the two parties will not comply? This is what it says, on page 32:

If the Commission has not reached agreement on a mutually satisfactory resolution within one month of receiving the final report of the panel (or such other as the Commission may decide), and a Party considers that its fundamental rights under the Agreement are or would be impaired by the implementation or maintenance of . . .

In other words, if one of the two parties does not do what arbitration says it should do. If you did not believe that such an eventuality could ever occur, why did you put such language in the agreement?

Senator Murray: The sanction is there to cover the case that is outlined in the agreement. I cannot understand what the honourable senator is trying to get at. This treaty and the dispute-settlement mechanisms are as binding as international law can make them. If the alternative is, as I said the other day, that we try to put the entire United States Congress in prison, or that we declare war, then, I agree with him—we have a problem.

Hon. David Walker: Excuse me, honourable senator.

Senator Gigantès: We are still left with the exact situation—

Senator Walker: Will you sit down?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order! Honourable senator, do you want to raise a point of order?

Senator Walker: My friend has been talking on and on. He has been interrupted by the Speaker and warned that he has said enough. What he has been saying this afternoon is pure nonsense. It is almost completely irrelevant. If the Angel Gabriel were here answering questions it would not satisfy my friend.

The honourable senator was put in his place the first few years he was here. Now he is getting confident and thinks that he can interrupt the proceedings of the house at any time. My advice—which I submit to him with all the grace I can muster—is to keep his mouth shut.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have always found Senator Walker's grace absolutely endearing. I have learned a great deal from him. Whatever debating skills I have developed have been developed by listening to people like him and some of his colleagues.

[Senator Murray.]

However, this issue is too vital for the future well-being of Canada for us to resolve by telling one another to shut up.

On page 5 of the same document it says:

The free trade agreement shall provide that each Party reserves fully its right to change its domestic antidumping and countervailing duty laws . . .

provided, of course, that the other party is notified. The bi-national panel and the commission decide that the U.S. has unjustly applied one law. Congress can then pass another law which would be just in its provisions.

Senator Roblin: You should not be debating this issue now.

Senator Gigantès: I fail to understand why—

Senator Walker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the honourable senator.

Senator Gigantès: I would like to finish my sentence. Why are we being told that there is binding arbitration when it is in no way binding?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Order! The honourable senator has been debating for half an hour.

Senator Walker: I think honourable senators on both sides are conscious of the trouble the honourable senator is causing. He is often out of order and has always been a negligible factor in this place. Honourable senator, you have been less than modest for a long while, but you have been getting away with being out of order for years. We are going to call an end to your nonsense.

Mr. Speaker, the honourable senator, in going over and over these arguments, has been completely out of order.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I believe that is for the Senate to decide.

Senator Flynn: It is also for the Speaker to decide.

Senator Gigantès: Senator Walker said that he would like to ask a question. It was not really a question; it was a commentary on my lack of modesty and my relative youth. I grant that, compared to him, I am relatively young.

I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. Why are we being told that arbitration is binding, when every page of this document dealing with the procedures of arbitration says that it is not?

● (1430)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not think my friend will take my word for it. Again, I suggest that he would be well advised to take the matter to committee and there to examine the lawyers and others who are expert in international law, who I think will be in a position to reassure him on some of the points that he has raised.

Meanwhile, I would like to draw his attention to a statement made by a United States senator, Senator Byrd. It is a statement in which the United States senator expressed considerable concern for the sovereignty of the United States, and of the United States Congress, as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, and in particular of the dispute-settlement mechanism that we have agreed upon. I will find this in a few minutes and I will read it into the record for the benefit of my friend.

Senator Gigantès: I thank the Honourable Leader of the Government. I remember clearly the other day that, when I was reading from the document of Ambassador Yeutter—however you pronounce his name—you said that you did not want to deal with American documents, you wanted to deal with Canadian documents. Now you are shifting away from the document that your government produced and you are quoting Senator Byrd of West Virginia—

Senator Murray: Well, if you do not want to hear it—

Senator Gigantès: —who has particular views on these issues. Among other things, he wants to continue to produce the acid rain in his state which destroys our lakes and forests.

Senator Flynn: Order!

IMPLEMENTATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON AGREEMENT OF PROVINCES—EFFECT ON TERRITORIES' ASPIRATIONS FOR PROVINCIAL STATUS

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Last week both the Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister said on several occasions, in response to the Provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick and Manitoba not agreeing with the new deal, that it was 95 per cent a federal deal and that they really did not need the approval of the provinces.

My question to the government leader is: Is there any possibility that this free trade agreement could be passed without the unanimous consent of the provinces? Is there any chance that even if one province disagrees with the agreement it could still be proceeded with or might be proceeded with by this government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I answered similar questions some months ago. The provinces, under our Constitution, have no right to veto an international treaty entered into by the federal government.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I just wonder if the government leader could then tell me how that statement compares to a statement that he made to me on May 5, 1987. It is found on page 947 of Debates of the Senate. We are now talking about provincial status for the Yukon, which is not exactly, according to this government, an earth-shattering occasion. The people of the Yukon were not even suggesting it for many years to come. However, in reply to a question from me he said:

I frankly believe that it would have been extremely difficult, if not impossible, to have proceeded to create new provinces with the agreement of only seven provinces having 50 per cent of the population—

How could the government make a statement, on the one hand, that it would be impossible to allow the Yukon to become a province if only seven of the provinces agreed, while, on the other hand, you are telling me that you are prepared to go with a free trade agreement of this magnitude whether the Province of Ontario agrees with it or not?

Senator Argue: Or any other province!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first of all, I think I should point out that the Free Trade Agreement reached between Canada and the United States would require for its implementation action in a limited field by the provincial authorities.

Senator Frith: Really; do you think that?

Senator Murray: If my friend, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, wishes to challenge that statement, he can.

Senator Frith: No; I am just surprised. I think that you are quite right about the constitutional—

Senator Murray: I think that there are provisions regarding wine, and so forth, but the provincial action that would be needed for full implementation of this treaty is relatively limited.

The second point I would make is that there is no doubt in the minds of the government—nor, do I think, in the minds of most people—as to the constitutional prerogative of the government with regard to entering into an international treaty.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I do not think that I am really questioning whether the government could legally do what is being suggested by the government leader. I have no doubt that if you chose to implement this agreement you could probably do it. My question is: How can you, in one breath, say to Ontario, about this free trade agreement that will have a tremendous impact on Ontario—whether negative or positive is another story—that, “We will do it whether you like it or not”; and, in another breath, state that it will come to the Yukon, and that it will have absolutely no impact one way or the other on you whether the Yukon is a province or not? It makes absolutely no difference to Ontario or to Prince Edward Island whether the Yukon is a province—

Senator Murray: Oh, I beg your pardon; that is where you are wrong.

Senator Lucier: I beg to differ with you.

Senator Murray: Let me tell you where you are wrong.

Senator Lucier: At least, it would not be detrimental to either of them—I think you would agree with that. How can you say that the Yukon cannot be a province without everyone's agreement, while, in the same breath, you tell me that the Free Trade Agreement could be put into effect?

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Murray: The creation of a new province would affect the operation of the amending formula, to begin with. Therefore, we justify and defend the unanimity requirement for the creation of new provinces if only on that basis.

Second, the creation of new provinces in the country will have some effect on financial matters within the federation, including equalization, and so forth. There, again—

Senator Argue: All 25,000 in the Yukon.

Senator Murray:—we defend and support the unanimity requirement in the Meech Lake accord for the creation of new provinces.

Finally, for some years now we have—most of us—agreed on the principle of the equality of the provinces. That means that on fundamental matters such as major reforms to the Supreme Court or to the Senate—which are institutions of our federation—or the creation of new provinces, yes, the vote of Prince Edward Island is as important as the vote of any other province.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, it would be nice if this government believed in the equality of Canadians, not just the equality of the provinces. Obviously, they do not believe in the equality of Canadians.

Again, I end my questioning by saying that the government leader has confirmed the suspicions of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories is that they are doomed to this status of being territories forever. My honourable friend has just finished saying that the Yukon's becoming a province could certainly have a detrimental effect on Ontario or Prince Edward Island. For him to suggest that they will accept it under those terms is certainly not realistic. The truth is that the Yukon will not become a province.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we achieved unanimity at Meech Lake, and I have no doubt that we will achieve unanimity when the time comes to create a province out of the Yukon—

Senator Walker: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray:—and the Northwest Territories.

Senator Lucier: You say that you have achieved unanimity. I do not appreciate the price that you paid for it.

PROPOSED STUDY BY FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—SUGGESTED CROSS-CANADA HEARINGS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question following on his suggestion that the question of the trade agreement or the trade agreement itself should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate say whether he would be in favour of that committee's travelling across Canada to hear the widest possible submissions from interested organizations and citizens on this very important question?

● (1440)

I suggest to him that the people on the prairies and those interested in agriculture would very much appreciate an opportunity to express themselves in that kind of setting, particularly with respect to the provisions for the beef industry, which are getting general support from the Cattlemen's Association. It would also create an opportunity to hear from those concerned about the removal of certain licensing provisions for the importation of grain.

[Senator Murray.]

What I am asking is: Is the minister in favour of this committee's going across this nation so that it can hear from Canadians generally the great concerns many of them have about agriculture, about our financial institutions being gobbled up by the United States, and about other concerns? Is he in favour of the committee's travelling?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Without accepting some of the premises that the honourable senator has attached to his question, let me say that that will be a matter for the Senate to decide. My honourable friend is getting a bit ahead of himself and also ahead of me in the matter.

I suggest that initially there be some discussions between the two parties represented here as to whether this matter might be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. After that, we can discuss: budgets; travel arrangements, if any; what witnesses should be summoned; what the work plan should be, and so forth. I would not want to anticipate any of those decisions today.

Senator Argue: I find the minister's comment interesting. At this point he has not closed the door, in his own mind, to the committee's travelling. He seems to have a different perspective in this regard from that which he had respecting the travelling of the Special Committee on Bill C-22.

I would think that this committee, if it has referred to it this very important proposed treaty, has an obligation and a duty to travel across this country so that Canadians can be heard, because, to date, they have not been heard.

THE COMMONWEALTH

CONFERENCE AT VANCOUVER, B.C.—PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Will Premier David Peterson, or any other premier, be chairing a session of the Commonwealth Conference?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not aware that any of the premiers except, possibly, the Premier of British Columbia will be attending.

Senator Davey: Will the Premier of British Columbia be chairing a session?

Senator Murray: I doubt that very much, and I have seen nothing to indicate that that would be the case.

Senator Davey: I also have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Am I correct in my recollection that at the recent Francophonie conference Premier Bourassa chaired a session? Is that not a precedent?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, Quebec has the status of a participating government, as does New Brunswick, in la Francophonie. I would have hoped and expected that that agreement is something the honourable senator would applaud.

Senator Davey: By way of a further supplementary question, did Premier Hatfield chair a session of that particular summit?

Senator Murray: I do believe that he chaired or co-chaired a session at that conference, but I am not entirely certain.

In any case, those governments have the same status. I would like to know to what my honourable friend objects.

Senator Argue: If Hatfield did, it will be his last!

Senator Davey: If this kind of precedent is established, should we not, perhaps, allow the provinces to participate more fully? Perhaps we should allow Ontario to become a member of the Commonwealth Conference.

Senator Flynn: It is not up to us to do that.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, for more than 300 years Quebec has been the heart and soul of the French language and culture in North America, and it is not the position of this government that she should take a back seat at a conference of la Francophonie.

Senator Davey: But it is the government's position that the other provinces should take a back seat at the Commonwealth Conference, is that correct?

Senator Flynn: You do not understand.

Senator Murray: There is no parallel between the two organizations.

Senator Flynn: You should know that.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA, AND PORT OF THUNDER BAY, ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL GRAIN CARS

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not only a question but a request for help.

Western farmers are in dire need of additional money; there is no doubt about that.

Senator Argue: Right on!

Senator Guay: As honourable senators are aware, for many years I have been asking questions about grain cars for the Port of Churchill. The general manager of the Port of Churchill claims, for example, that, this year, if more grain had been received through the Port of Churchill it would have been a paying proposition.

Recently I read a news release indicating that those in charge of the Port of Thunder Bay have had a real problem, and that there are some ships waiting for grain because at the moment there are not enough grain cars to deliver grain to Thunder Bay.

With all due respect, I would point out to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that he is the only person in this chamber who can make strong representations at cabinet level to ensure that additional cars are immediately made available to Thunder Bay and, if there is an excess, that they be delivered to the Port of Churchill.

Senator Argue: You mean the other way around, with Churchill being given the additional cars first.

Senator Guay: They both need them very badly. In a report in the Winnipeg Free Press last week I read that there is a shortage of grain at the elevators and that the ships are waiting.

I am pleading with the Leader of the Government in the Senate to make appropriate representations. I would ask him not only to bring back a report but to make the achievement a real one so that everyone in western Canada will benefit.

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—PREMIUM EARNED BY CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ON SALES OF GRAIN

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I wish to ask a supplementary question following the important question asked by Senator Guay.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate ask Mr. Mayer to inform him and, through him, to inform us about the premium that the Canadian Wheat Board is now earning on the sales of grain through the Port of Churchill over that earned by the St. Lawrence Seaway? From the information I have received over many years my judgment is that that premium must be substantial at this time, because the asking prices out of the St. Lawrence are relatively low as compared to those at Vancouver and the west coast.

PARLIAMENT HILL

CONDITION OF ROADWAYS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a non-contentious, non-partisan question to pose.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate inquire from the Minister of Public Works if there are any plans to repave the roads on Parliament Hill? I ask that question because the appearance of those roads is certainly not in keeping with the dignity of the seat of government.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—MOTION TO TELEVISION PROCEEDINGS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion, as modified, of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rousseau:

That pool television cameras be permitted in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of recording the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole with respect to its hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the proceedings be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable.—(Honourable Senator Kelly).

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I want to explain why I moved the adjournment of this debate on Friday. At that time we had a bare quorum and some senators felt very strongly that sufficient time had not been allowed for views to be expressed by senators who were not present on Friday. I might say that my own concerns were partially satisfied through one question I raised, which had to do with whether or not the use of television cameras in the chamber meant that we were starting on a track that would continue beyond the examination of various witnesses on the Meech Lake accord. I was satisfied with the explanation I received, which I understand to be simply this: First, what is contemplated here is not live coverage, it is the recording of the proceedings having to do with the Meech Lake accord. Second, it is my understanding that this will not lead to a decision to try out the use of television in the chamber on a continuing basis to see how it works beyond the Meech Lake accord.

● (1450)

Senator Frith: Or for any other Committee of the Whole.

Senator Kelly: Yes. Third, I have recently been given to understand that if this motion is approved it does not commit the Senate to having the coverage continued through to the end of the deliberations on the Meech Lake accord. It can be cancelled part way along if it does not seem to be working the way it is planned.

That, honourable senators, is really the full extent of my intervention. I wanted to reiterate that the original purpose was to allow time to other honourable senators who may wish to comment on the subject.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak on this subject now, I would like to adjourn the debate so that it can be continued tomorrow. I have no intention of holding this matter up, but some of my colleagues have questions and would like to deal with them tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL POLICY—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Spivak calling the attention of the Senate to the question of a national policy on child care.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I would just remind honourable senators that I do not intend to speak on this matter, but have adjourned the debate so as to provide that opportunity to anyone else who wishes to speak. Perhaps we should have Senator Spivak close the debate later this week, and if anyone else wishes to speak in the meantime he or she can do so.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 14, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we proceed with Presentation of Petitions, since honourable senators might be wondering about the table with the two chairs and the microphone set up in front of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, perhaps a word of explanation is in order.

There was a misunderstanding or a breakdown in communications which resulted in one group planning to proceed with the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord today, with the Leader of the Government and two of his officials appearing before us as witnesses.

Some time ago Senator Murray was asked when he could appear. He picked the date of October 14 and plans then went forward. In the meantime, Senator Molgat, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on that subject, was overseas with the Special Senate Committee on National Defence and assumed that everything was proceeding as planned when he left for Europe, with Senator Murray making the same assumption.

I had had some discussions with Senator Doody and others on the question of whether we should proceed with the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord this week, and we agreed that perhaps it would not be appropriate to do that this week, partly, though certainly not entirely, because of the outstanding motion about television access.

What happened is that the whole thing fell between the cracks. I assumed that we were not going on, Senator Doody assumed we were not going on, and Senators Molgat and Murray assumed that we were.

Another complication that developed was that on the assumption that we would not be proceeding the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which is dealing with Bill C-22, decided to ask for permission to sit at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon.

A further complication is that those of us on this side have an extraordinary, that is, not usual, date for a caucus and dinner meeting this evening, which would limit the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in terms of meeting after the Committee of the Whole.

For all of those reasons the decision we made was to proceed with the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce meeting at 3:00 o'clock and to try to set another date to hear from Senator Murray and his officials on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord. That does not mean that we may not sit next week, but probably Senator Murray would not be able to appear that quickly. Of course, if he wishes to do so, we will make appropriate arrangements.

Honourable senators, I cannot say that I apologize, because I do not think it is anyone's fault. It was a breakdown in terms of two segments talking to each other. I can certainly say to Senator Murray and his officials that I regret that it worked out this way and that plans had to be changed at the last moment.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I discussed the matter a few moments ago with the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Senator Molgat, and in the next little while my officials and I will try to find a mutually convenient date for our appearance before the committee.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): We now know who is running this place—Doody and Frith!

Senator Flynn: We know that.

Senator MacEachen: We always knew that.

Senator Frith: There is a difference between knowing it and admitting it!

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Ian Sinclair, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

CHANGE OF VENUE OF MEETING

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I should like to inform honourable senators that because room 256-S is to be used for other purposes this afternoon the committee will meet in room 356-S.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

CONDITION OF TRANSITWAYS—COORDINATION OF REPAIRS

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I would like to put to the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question of a parochial nature, if you wish, which I do not do very often. Surface access and communication across the river here in Ottawa have been the messiest, over the last couple of months, since there was a fire on the Interprovincial Bridge in 1947. Some senators may not remember that, but I lived through it. The reconstruction work on bridges and roadways in the region is absolutely impossible. We have departments of government on both sides of the river, thousands of civil servants travelling back and forth daily and thousands of other workers travelling back and forth daily. There has been an utter lack of coordination of this reconstruction resulting in a complete mess on the transitways of this region.

I suggest that the government should institute for the capital city a committee with clout that could coordinate these things. In this regard, the National Capital Commission has proven utterly incompetent; the Department of Public Works has proven utterly incompetent; the regional municipalities of Ottawa-Carleton and of the Outaouais have proven utterly incompetent, as have the provincial governments in both instances. I do not know the solutions, but there must be some means by which to organize the capital city so that people can move about with reasonable ease.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NEW BRUNSWICK—FATE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PROJECTS ANNOUNCED DURING PROVINCIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government. I have in front of me a copy of a Canadian Press story datelined Ottawa, October 14, in which the federal Minister of State for Forestry and Mines, the Honourable Gerald Merrithew, said today:

The people of New Brunswick spoke with a vengeance. He went on to say:

I did some work in the campaign to the extent I could . . .

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he would be prepared to table in this house the list of programs,

[Senator Sinclair.]

agreements and projects from every department of the federal government—

Senator Flynn: Order paper!

Senator Corbin: Just a minute, Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: Order paper!

Senator Corbin: Would the Leader of the Government be prepared—

Senator Flynn: Order paper!

Senator Frith: It is easy to see who runs things over there!

Senator Corbin: Will you please have the courtesy to hear me out?

Senator Flynn: I was raising a point of order—

Senator Corbin: You have not heard my full question.

Senator Flynn: What you are asking for is something that should be in a question to be placed on the order paper.

Senator Corbin: I am well aware, Senator Flynn, that that whole process is a waste of time. Don't fool me. I tried that in my first year. So, to the Leader of the Government my question is: Will he be prepared to table in this house a list of projects, programs, announcements, and agreements that were made during the election campaign in New Brunswick—as he so well acknowledged to me last Friday. He went further and said that there would be announcements made even to the very eve of the election.

I think it is in the interests of Parliament, and certainly of the Senate, which represents provincial interests, to find out what it is that the federal government shelled out to the defunct government of the province of New Brunswick.

What I am talking about is taxpayers' money, because we want to be able to assess the extent to which those programs are actually going to go into effect. Some of them were rather loosely worded, and I want to make sure that the people of New Brunswick—

Senator Flynn: Order!

Senator Corbin: —were not fooled by electoral trickery.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will be very happy to obtain all the information I can on that subject as soon as possible and bring it into this chamber, provided that the honourable senator will undertake to tell the chamber and the people of New Brunswick to which of those projects he objects. Does he object to a tourism agreement, with expenditures under an ERDA sub-agreement on tourism with the Province of New Brunswick? Does he object to assistance to two universities that was announced in recent weeks? Does he object to the grants under IRDP to such businesses as Atlantic Sugar in Saint John to enable the company to refurbish an old factory and maintain employment in that business, which has been in existence in Saint John for many years?

The honourable senator speaks quite loosely about commitments made, as he says, to save "the defunct government" of New Brunswick. I told him the other day that the commitments that we announced involved projects which had reached the stage of announcement, and happily we were able to announce them during the course of the election campaign.

Be that as it may, the government remains committed to regional development in the Atlantic provinces and in New Brunswick, whatever the political colour of the provincial government.

Senator Olson: Will there be more announcements?

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I believe that the Leader of the Government has a wrong assessment of my reaction to those announcements. All I am asking is for information.

Senator Flynn: Then why are you argumentative?

Senator Corbin: Are you not argumentative, Senator Flynn?

• (1410)

Senator Flynn: Not when I put a question. I try to follow the rules.

Senator Corbin: I am also following the rules, and I know this much about the rules, that to place written questions on the order paper is a waste of time. I am quite happy that the Leader of the Government sees the situation otherwise and that he is prepared to make the information I have requested public.

I want to know the full extent to which the federal government has gone in terms of commitments to projects and programs to the Government of New Brunswick, to municipalities in New Brunswick, and to sectors of industry in New Brunswick during the last provincial election. I believe that I have a right to request that information, and I would like to see it all together. That is what I am asking for.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what the honourable senator is asking is for me to do some of his work for him, to collect a series of public announcements which he says were made and, of course, which were made during a certain period of time. These matters are all in the public domain, and I shall assemble them and table them or send them to the honourable senator, as he wishes. However, again, I would like to hear from him as soon as possible as to whether he objects to any of the projects announced by the government in his province in the past month.

Senator Corbin: The Honourable Leader of the Government is completely wrong in his view of my motives—

Senator Murray: Timing!

Senator Corbin:—and I made my position clear last Friday. What I object to is the blatant electioneering of the honourable senator and his cabinet colleagues and their involvement in the democratic process during an election in New Brunswick. Never in history have we seen such massive intervention, all in the hopes of saving one of their kind. That is what I am objecting to.

Senator Flynn: Obviously, you were born yesterday!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me say in respect of some of the matters for which I have ministerial responsibility, particularly under the Industrial Regional Development Program, the Atlantic Enterprise Program, and so forth, that the applications made for assistance of various kinds would have been made many weeks, perhaps months, before the election was ever called. The announcements made were announcements of projects which, as I believe I told the honourable senator in French the other day, had ripened during the past month.

Senator Argue: Throw out the lifeline!

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EXEMPTION OF CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—CONFLICTING VIEWS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week, following the initialling of the elements of a preliminary agreement respecting trade between Canada and the United States, I was delighted to read of the Minister of Communications' assurances to the House of Commons, which were echoed by the Leader of the Government's responses in this place, that cultural matters were exempted from the Canada-United States negotiations. In today's Globe and Mail is a report suggesting that the Americans have changed some of their explanatory notes respecting cultural industries. It appears that the Americans have requested that irritants relating to broadcasting matters, cultural matters respecting, I assume, Bill C-58, if that is the correct inference, be negotiated so that these so-called irritants from the American side can be settled in some fashion. This appears to be in conflict with the minister of Communications' assurances in the House of Commons, echoed by the Leader of the Government in this place, about exempting cultural industries and leaving the minister free to deal with these matters without any problems or concerns from the American government. Could the Leader of the Government give us some clarification on this matter? Are we to take the assurances of the Minister in the House of Commons and echoed by the honourable senator, or are we in a somewhat different position now, as enunciated by the Americans?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I hope that my friend would accept not just assurances of the Minister of Communications and other ministers of the Crown, including myself, on this matter but also the words of the agreement which was signed by the two countries. There is an explicit exemption for cultural industries in the agreement, and the definition of cultural industries includes, and I quote: "The production, distribution, sale or exhibition of film or video recordings . . .," among many other matters.

It is true that the United States sought to have the agreement deal with the full range of their cultural concerns, but this was successfully resisted.

Senator Grafstein: Does this mean that, in effect, the Americans have continued to request of the Canadian government that these so-called irritants be negotiated, since that appears to be the wording of the American explanatory notes? If so, it leaves open the question of whether or not the Americans have agreed in principle to the conclusions, as has been suggested by the minister in the other place and the Leader of the Government in this place.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, to get right to the point, there are no undertakings given by the Government of Canada other than those that are in the agreement signed between our two countries. However, I have no doubt that the next time my friend attends a meeting of the Canada-United States Parliamentary Group, or the next time there is a ministerial meeting between Canada and the United States, or the next time there is a private sector meeting involving interested parties between our two countries, such matters as Bill C-58 will come up, as they have every year since the bill was passed, and I have very little doubt that the same answer will be given from our side.

EFFECT ON TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the free trade arrangement with the United States. I do not have to tell this chamber about the problems facing Canadian grain farmers, especially in my province of Saskatchewan. My question involves the effect of the Free Trade Agreement on the two-price system for wheat. The information is being circulated back home in Saskatchewan that the agreement will, in fact, end the practice that we have in Canada of imposing a higher price for domestic use grain than for exported grain. It involves a figure that runs up to nearly $200 million per year which goes into the pockets of our grain farmers and fulfils a real need.

Would the Leader of the Government clarify this issue? I am not in any way attempting to be combative about it. I am trying to find out whether or not this is, in fact, the case, and what the situation may be in the future.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States does not provide for any change in the two-price system for wheat in this country.

As far as any new decision on that matter is concerned, that would be a matter for the government to consider, and no decision has been taken.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, that response to a rather non-combative question really bothers me. First of all, the Leader of the Government raised his right hand as if he were saying something that was absolutely gospel truth. If that is so, I respect that. But then he qualified whatever he had to say by indicating that this matter is under review. What I was hoping he might say is that the program is not in jeopardy; that the two-price system for grain will continue for a good period of time and that it is not being reviewed at the moment. However, if it is, then I feel that it must be as a result of the discussions which took place on free trade, otherwise it would not have been affected.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sorry if my body language confuses the honourable senator.

● (1420)

I was trying to convey the fact that the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States obviously has no provision regarding the two-price system for wheat in this country. Any decision to change the present situation would be one for the Canadian government alone to take, and no such decision has been taken by the government.

Senator Buckwold: Is it being actively considered?

Senator Murray: Honourable senator, the answer to that question, as far as I am concerned, is no. There is no proposition before the government in that respect at the present time.

UNDERSTANDINGS BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is also with respect to the Free Trade Agreement. I have noted on more than one occasion that the minister has said in response to questions that there are no undertakings between the Government of Canada and the United States other than those set out in the Free Trade Agreement signed by the representatives of each country.

My question is this: Has there been any distinction drawn between "undertakings" and "understandings"? Are there any understandings between the Government of Canada and the United States?

TRANSITIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR ADVERSELY AFFECTED INDUSTRIES

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Could the Leader of the Government tell us where we could obtain an explanation of the transitional assistance that the Prime Minister has indicated would be provided to some of those industries whose markets are going to disappear? There is no question that, for example, the wine industry or the horticultural industry will be suffering some of the pain that will come out of this agreement. What are the terms and conditions for applying for transitional assistance?

senators, what is going to come out of this agreement is the creation of tens of thousands of new jobs in this country. We are talking about the need to adapt our industries and train our work force to enable Canadian workers to take advantage of these new and better job opportunities in our economy.

I simply want to assure the Senate, as the Prime Minister has assured the country, that the federal government will take whatever steps necessary to ensure that our workers are able to take advantage of these opportunities.

As has been evident from questions and answers in the other place this past week, our current judgment is that the existing range of programs would be quite adequate for this purpose. However, if they need to be modified in any way, we will take those steps.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is very interesting. I thank the Leader of the Government for that answer, but it had nothing to do with the question.

My question was this: How do we find out where and how to apply for the transitional assistance to people who are going to be damaged by the agreement? Perhaps you will create hundreds of thousands of new jobs and there may be great economic activity, but there will be some people who will be caught because of the removing of traditional market umbrellas that they had. How do these people go about getting that transitional assistance, or is the Leader of the Government now telling us that there was no undertaking that there would be transitional assistance?

Senator Murray: I have already told the honourable senator that in our judgment the present range of programs in this field will be quite adequate for this purpose. My honourable friend is getting quite a distance ahead of himself.

The Free Trade Agreement has not yet been ratified by Congress. Some of the tariffs to which he refers come off in 1989, assuming the agreement is ratified; others in equal cuts over five years; others in equal cuts over ten years. So we are looking at quite a lengthy period in particularly sensitive industries. There will be plenty of opportunity to ensure that the existing programs are tailored to meet the needs to which the honourable senator refers.

Senator Olson: We will not get much comfort out of that.

BI-NATIONAL TRIBUNAL—NATIONALITY OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government one question with respect to the tribunal which is to be set up under the Free Trade Agreement. I understand that that tribunal is to be composed of two Canadians, two Americans and a neutral chairman. Will the neutral chairman be a non-national of either the United States or Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, he or she could be.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has said that that might be the case. Has a decision been taken on that point, or is it still something that is to be settled between the two countries?

Senator Murray: The only information I have is that it could be a national of neither of our countries. But as far as I am aware, no specific decision has been taken on the matter.

Senator MacEachen: Would the Americans be amenable to having a non-national of either country head the tribunal? In other words, are they as open as the Canadian government to having a non-national of either country head the tribunal?

Senator Murray: My last information did not indicate that there was any problem on that score, but I will try to confirm that.

DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—ESTABLISHMENT OF TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I would like to clarify with the Leader of the Government the time period within which the two governments expect to agree on what the terms of reference will be for the final system of arbitration.

As I read what we have been provided with—which seems to me to be essentially a press release—there is about a six-or seven-year period during which time a great deal of negotiations will take place with regard to the terms of reference to be established for the arbitration procedure. Could the Leader of the Government enlighten me on that, please, as it appears to me to be of the essence of the agreement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think my friend is referring to the five-year period—with a possible two-year extension—that we have given ourselves to try to agree on a definition of “subsidies,” “domestic countervail” and “anti-dumping” laws. I do not know what more I can say about it. We have given ourselves five years, with a possible two-year extension, to do this. Meanwhile, we are putting in place a dispute-settlement mechanism which effectively provides a court of appeal from the domestic countervail and anti-dumping decisions based on existing law in both countries.

Senator Stollery: This is a subject that we should know more about, because the Free Trade Agreement essentially deals with how to stop the Americans from using countervail and other forms of non-tariff barriers to stop Canadians exporting to the United States, and more particularly, from my region of Ontario.

Isn't the Leader of the Government really saying that we now have an agreement to reach an agreement within the next seven years, because those definitions of countervail and what are essentially non-tariff barriers are the essence of the agreement? Without that we would not have bothered embarking on a free trade agreement. Isn't the government saying that what we have now is an arrangement to spend the next five to seven years defining what the actual agreement will be?

● (1430)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we will spend the next five to seven years trying to agree on definitions of subsidies and the domestic countervail and anti-dumping laws.

Meanwhile, we are putting in place what is, in effect, a court of appeal from the domestic countervail and anti-dumping laws in our respective countries.

The problem that we in this country have had with the United States process in recent years has been its politicization and our view that it has functioned in an unfair and sometimes capricious manner to the injury and potential injury of Canadian interests. Therefore, the court of appeal that we have set up, the dispute-settlement mechanism, will ensure, until we have an agreement on the definition of subsidy and countervail and anti-dumping laws, that the present laws are applied fairly. If they are not, the dispute-settlement tribunal will have the authority to overturn those unfair decisions.

Senator Stollery: Honourable senators, without getting into the question of the dispute-settlement process that will be in force, it occurs to me that for the next five to seven years, until the definitions have been agreed upon, there may well be questions in the United States law that have not been clarified. In the meantime, according to the information that I have read—provided by the government—and from listening to the Prime Minister, it sounds to me as if we have given all of the undertakings.

The problem, as I recall it in the Macdonald report—a lengthy 1,600-page document which was well reasoned and argued—was not that we imposed duties against U.S. products; the problem was in the fact that the United States was using non-tariff barriers to prohibit Canadians exporting into the United States market. From our perspective, the elimination of such barriers is the purpose of a free trade agreement. If we cannot protect our exporters, then we do not have an agreement that is in the interests of Canadians.

From what the Minister seems to be saying and from the material with which we have been provided the problem of municipalities, states a non-governmental organizations in the United States using non-tariff barriers against Canadians has not been solved. The definitions of what those barriers are and how they will be handled have not actually been decided upon. From what the minister says, from our standpoint, we are not actually going to see this Free Trade Agreement for up to seven years whereas, from the U.S. standpoint, they already have a free trade agreement with us.

I wonder if we will be provided with more material to clarify what is not a very mysterious issue, because the Prime Minister himself has been using the Donald Macdonald report as the basis for much of his argument. I am sure I am not the only senator who has read the report, and it seems to me that if the Free Trade Agreement is not consistent with some of the concerns expressed in the report then we really do not have a free trade agreement. We just have the promise that we will have one at the end of seven years, after we have already given the other side everything they have asked for.

[Senator Stollery.]

Senator Flynn: Good speech!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator keeps talking about non-tariff barriers. As he will see, they are addressed in a number of ways in the Free Trade Agreement. Various quotas, licences, and so forth, are addressed in that agreement.

I have tried, obviously in vain, to explain the operation of the dispute-settlement mechanism to him and the period during which we will attempt to reach an agreement on the definition of subsidy and, therefore, on domestic countervail and anti-dumping matters.

With great respect, I believe my friend is becoming quite argumentative, and it is for this purpose I have suggested on several occasions that we would do well to refer this agreement to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs so that my friend and others can examine the Minister for International Trade, and perhaps the negotiators, and go into the kind of detail that they would like to go into on these matters.

DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—EFFECT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF BI-NATIONAL TRIBUNAL—ADJUDICATION OF APPLICATION OF CANADIAN LAW

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I hope this will not be an argumentative question.

I want to ask the minister in what way the establishment of a bi-national tribunal changes the situation from the present situation. I understand that at the end of the day—if I may use that term—in the United States the settlement of a trade dispute is reviewable by a federal court.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Not after—

Senator MacEachen: I am talking of the present situation. I understand that the end of the process would be a review by a U.S. federal court.

Senator Murray: At present.

Senator MacEachen: I also understand that under the new regime, once it is established, the end of the process would be a review by a bi-national body. My attention was caught by the use of the expression, "The process was politicization" under the present system. Is the minister saying that when the court was asked to adjudicate a case that it was political, and that in this case there would be no political considerations? I do not understand that sort of comparison in the present situation. Are we to believe that this body would be better and fairer as the final arbiter than a federal court in the United States would be with respect to American law? What, on the face of it, would lead us to that conclusion?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I certainly mean no disrespect to the federal courts in the United States, but the fact of the matter is that if, for example, in some of the cases we have had recently, we had proceeded in that way, through the federal courts, it would have been considerably more time-consuming and more expensive for Canadians than the process proposed in the Free Trade Agreement will be.

Senator MacEachen: Presumably, the bi-national body will be dealing with complaints originating in Canada and also in the United States and that, at a certain point, it will reach an adjudication upon the application of Canadian law. Once it reaches that adjudication, will that be the final adjudication of Canadian law, or could the matter be carried forward to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my understanding—and I think it is in the text of the elements of the agreement—is that the judicial review would be replaced by the bi-national dispute-settlement mechanism.

● (1440)

Senator MacEachen: To a certain extent, then, if what the minister says is correct, the final arbiter of Canadian law with respect to trade is now transferred from, say, the Federal Court to a bi-national body. The same would hold true for American law. I simply ask now whether it is the view of the government that the new bi-national tribunal is a judicial body, a quasi-judicial body or an administrative agency.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would like to duck the opportunity to put any of those titles on the tribunal. I do say, as I said in answer to questions from Senator Gigantès the other day, that once we have signed the Free Trade Agreement and the United States Congress has ratified it we are bound by its decisions.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as a supplementary to Senator MacEachen's questions, and perhaps to help the minister get the information, I think the issue Senator MacEachen was coming to was that if a decision were made by this bi-national tribunal, whether that decision would be subject to judicial review in Canada—I do not know about the American law—would depend on whether anyone who wanted a judicial review could persuade the Federal Court of Canada that the bi-national tribunal was exercising a quasi-judicial function. Whether it was exercising that function would be decided by the Federal Court rather than by us or anyone else. Perhaps the best way to deal with the question would be to ask the Department of Justice if such a tribunal would be subject to Canadian judicial review as distinguished from an appeal. I am asking whether it would be subject to a judicial review, which would be based on grounds different from those on which a direct appeal is based.

Senator Murray: I appreciate the points made by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, which only confirm the wisdom of my initial course in ducking the question. I would draw his attention to page 7 of the document entitled "Elements of the Agreement":

C. Binational panel process.

A new binational panel would replace judicial review in both the U.S. and Canada.

I do not know whether that helps him, but I will see whether there is some further information that the Department of Justice can provide on the matter.

Senator Frith: It would not be the first time that a legislative body tried unsuccessfully to oust judicial review. However, we will see.

Hon. D.G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I have a question supplementary to those put by Senator MacEachen with regard to the appeals mechanism that is proposed in this agreement. Does that mean that in a case like the Saskatchewan potash problem, for example, a Canadian complainant could bypass the existing tribunals or courts of the United States and go directly to this dispute-settling bi-national tribunal? A complainant would not have to go through all of those processes and then, as a final court of appeal, go to this bi-national tribunal?

Senator Murray: I hope that I understand the honourable senator correctly, but, in the situation he describes, action was taken against Canadian potash producers through the process in the United States on anti-dumping matters. In such a case that could still take place, but at the end of the process the so-called court of appeal, the bi-national tribunal, could be appealed to on questions of fact and law, as indicated in the agreement.

Senator Steuart: In effect, then, this mechanism would not necessarily speed up the process, which, in the potash case, for example, can take an extremely long time—not months but perhaps years. If the Canadians then did not like the final settlement, they would have to appeal to this bi-national tribunal. Would the matter then be confined to a decision on whether or not the American law was applied correctly? Is that the case, or should I ask Senator Flynn? What are you doing? Are you changing the law or the judge or what?

Senator Murray: The official review takes place at a certain time towards the end of the process. The bi-national tribunal replaces judicial review in both countries.

Senator Steuart: I think that answers my question then. This tribunal will not necessarily speed up the process. The last time we had a problem with the Americans on potash, for example, the process dragged on and on. Several potash mines in Canada could have been broke before it was ever settled. What we are doing with this bi-national tribunal is really adding another mechanism with another set of judges—hopefully, perhaps, a little more independent, but not necessarily so—and the rules will not necessarily be changed. The judges would be changed, but the rules may not ever be changed, although there is a delay of up to seven years if the Americans finally do not agree. I suppose we could always back out if we did not like the final dispute-settlement mechanism.

Senator Murray: Let me draw my friend's attention to page 9 of the document entitled "Preliminary Transcript—Canada-U.S. Free Trade agreement—Elements of the Agreement", wherein it states:

The procedures for resort to a panel at the conclusion of an AD—

that is, anti-dumping,—

or CVD case—

that is, countervailing duty case,—

(i.e., at the time an order is issued) would be as follows:

— 30 days for the complaining party to file its complaint.

— 30 days for designation of the administrative record and its filing with the panel.

— 60 days for complainant to file its brief.

— 60 days for respondent to file its brief.

— 15 days for each party to file reply briefs.

— 15-30 days for the panel to convene to hear oral argument by each party.

— 90 days for the panel to issue its decision.

— the investigating authority concerned would take action not consistent with the decision of the panel, within time limits set by the panel—

that is, the bi-national tribunal,— taking into account the complexity and difficulty of such action (e.g., whether the investigating authority needs to obtain new factual information to take such action).

So the seven years that my friend was talking about would be considerably abbreviated by these procedures, I would think.

Senator Steuart: I was talking about seven years for a possible change in the rules.

Senator Murray: Yes, I am sorry. The point is that this is pretty precise as to the timetable.

Senator MacEachen: Is it not a fact that the timetable is not varied in all of the processes that take place presently in the United States; that the whole process remains intact, and that the only variance is the final step?

Senator Murray: That is pretty important, don't you think?

Senator MacEachen: It may be important, but the fact is that the existence of this tribunal does not end any of the harassment that can take place against Canadian producers. As has happened in the past, it can continue and complaints can be made by United States citizens before their investigative bodies. All of these decisions can be taken, and finally the matter will go to the bi-national tribunal. Perhaps at that point a new timetable is established, but some months and years could elapse in a settlement of trade disputes between Canada and the United States, as now happens. In other words, the agreement does not remove the present situation that creates so much harassment and time loss.

Senator Murray: This agreement substitutes for judicial review the bi-national panel, with quite precise timetables. Further to that, my friend loses sight of the fact that the whole system provides quite a disincentive to conduct harassment of Canadian industries. After all, at the end of the day, the bi-national tribunal can find that the countervail was not justified and that what has been collected must be paid back with interest; or it can find that the duty was too high and should be reduced; or it can find that the process was wrong and that the authority should go back and do it all over again. These are, I think, pretty substantial sanctions and disincentives against frivolous or capricious use of the countervailing duty and anti-dumping mechanisms by the United States.

• (1450)

Senator MacEachen: The United States could make precisely the same finding in the present régime. A court in the United States could make all of those findings now. What the government is saying is that it is a better court because there are two Canadians on it. That is the essence of the change—two Canadians and a neutral chairman. The assumption is that the addition of two Canadians will make it fairer. In other words, it is somewhat of a reflection on the fairness of the American court system.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE AUTHORIZED TO TELEVISION PROCEEDINGS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion, as modified, of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rousseau:

That pool television cameras be permitted in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of recording the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole with respect to its hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the proceedings be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable.—(Honourable Senator Kelly).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as I indicated yesterday, I had no intention of trying to delay this particular item. I simply wanted to hear from some of our colleagues on the matter. With that I have every intention of letting it go. I simply want to indicate that I, for one, do not support the presence of television cameras in the chamber. I have made that perfectly clear on several other occasions; so that will come as no shock to anyone. When the matter is brought to a vote, I have every intention of voting against it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion, as modified.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have little to add. I have given the explanation that I thought was asked for and I have explained the negotiations. Senators Doody's views are on record, and I do not think that I should add anything except to ask for the vote.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rousseau:

That pool television cameras be permitted in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of recording the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole with respect to its hearings on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to; and

That the proceedings be televised pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons, where applicable.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Senator Frith: Your Honour, did you say that the "nays" have it?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Yes.
And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

GREY NUNS IN CANADA

250TH ANNIVERSARY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 6, 1987;

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the 250th Anniversary of the Grey Nuns in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, we are living at a time when all interest groups ask for government grants, and women's groups are no exception. Today, I would like to call your attention to a group of admirable women who, without waiting for government help, were inspired by their faith to works that still elicit our admiration today.

The year 1987 marks the 250th anniversary of the founding of the Order of Grey Nuns. I say the founding, and not the arrival in this country, as is often said about other religious orders, because this Order is unique in that it was established in Canada instead of being a Canadian branch of one of the old religious orders in Europe. The Order's founder owes the title of "blessed", which the Church conferred upon her nearly thirty years ago, to the many trials she suffered. She was the first Canadian woman to be honoured in this way. Yesterday, His Holiness Pope John Paul II paid tribute to the Grey Nuns, while the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, and the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Doré, also marked the 250th Anniversary of the congregation founded by Marguerite d'Youville.

Marguerite d'Youville, née Dufrost de Lajemmerais, was a woman of great intellect and sensibility. Born in Varennes, Quebec, on October 15, 1701, she belonged to one of the first families of New France. On her mother's side, she was a descendant of René Gaultier de Varennes, Governor of Trois-Rivières, and of Pierre Boucher, Lieutenant General of New France. When she married François-Madeleine d'Youville in 1722, the colony's high society was at the wedding, including Governor General Vaudreuil and the governors of Montreal and Trois-Rivières. Her husband died eight years later, leaving her a widow at 28, with two children and expecting a third, who died at the age of five months.

[English]

This fateful event simply enhanced her already deep religious feelings. Three years before the death of her husband her relatives had observed that she was becoming more and more devout under the influence of her spiritual director, Sulpician Jean-Gabriel-Marie Le Pape du Lescoat. In working actively within sisterhoods which she had begun to join in 1727, she applied herself to easing the lives of the poor. Therefore, her early widowhood, combined with the fact that her marriage had not been a happy one, led her to a religious life. Incidentally, it has been observed that the women who launched religious orders were either widows or single women aged 30 or more.

[Translation]

The Grey Nuns Community was established in 1737 as a lay charitable association, because the customs of time did not favour this way of life and the French Royal authorities were opposed to the establishment of convents in the settlements. On December 31, 1737, Widow d'Youville and three companions begin devoting themselves to the care of the poor and the sick. At that time they are not yet a religious community as such. "The Associates", according to historian Marguerite Jean, "are living in a kind of religious way, but without any formal commitment nor specified status".

Nevertheless, some actions taken by the Associates show the quasi religious nature of their association. For instance, they fix up an oratory in the house they have rented to carry out their charity operations. They go into retreat for one day every month and abide by monastic life rules established by their spiritual director. After their house was destroyed by fire in 1745, they decide to pool their properties. That fire is not the only ordeal faced by the Associates. They have to carry out their work among a hostile public. It is the public that, referring to the infamous activities of the late husband of Madame d'Youville, gave the Associates the nickname of "the greys".

[English]

The lay association headed by Madame d'Youville took a decisive step in 1745 when Bishop Pontbriand asked them to take charge, on a provisional basis, of the Hôpital Général de Montréal. The hôpital had been founded in 1692 by François Charon and had been staffed by the Frères Hospitaliers de la Croix de Saint-Joseph, a male community which had become extinct.

[Translation]

A few years of intrigues will follow from which Mère d'Youville will be able to get out with no harm. In fact, on June 3, 1753, the King Louis XV signs new letters patent to put "The Widow dame d'Youville and her companions" in charge of the management and the administration of the Hôpital Général de Montréal. That will be "the cornerstone on which the new female community will gradually and definitely develop in Canada". Their charity had long since earned them public support. In Montreal, it was often said and I quote:

"Go to the Grey Nuns, they never refuse anything".

The time had come for the Associates to be granted in their own right the status of religious community they had acquired de facto. On June 15, 1755, Mgr. de Pontbriand granted them canonical agreement. Being known for so long under the name of Grey Nuns, which no longer had any derogatory connotation given the hard work they were doing, they decided to adopt that name which determined the colour of their common clerical dress.

[English]

The Grey Nuns were then called upon to face the hardships of the Seven Years' War, during which they distinguished themselves for what could be called their "language-blind" charity. However, the worst blow fell on May 18, 1765, when the Hôpital Général de Montréal was burned down, together with one quarter of the city. Tradition has it that Mère d'Youville reacted to this calamity by inviting her sisters, gathered around her and watching the destruction of their home, to sing the Te Deum, after which she told them: "Mes enfants, ayez bon courage, désormais la maison ne brûlera plus." Thanks to help from outside, including the people of London, the hospital was rebuilt in three years.

● (1520)

At the time of Mère d'Youville's death, which occurred on December 23, 1771, the Grey Nuns numbered 18, and they were in charge of 170 people.

[Translation]

The 19th century was, for the Grey Nuns, an era of establishment and expansion. From its creation until 1840, the Order grew very slowly. Then, within 20 years, it sprung off three different groups which carried out their activities independently in other dioceses. They were les Sœurs grises de l'Hôtel-Dieu de Saint-Hyacinthe, les Sœurs grises de la Croix d'Ottawa, and les Sœurs grises de la Charité de Québec.

Les Sœurs grises de Saint-Hyacinthe were founded as a result of an invitation made by Mr. Édouard Crevier, a parish priest, to the Grey Nuns to take charge of the hospital in that city. Four nuns were chosen then to assume this responsibility and on May 4, 1840, Mgr. Bourget signed a canon institution amendment. The new group would operate independently from the mother-house in terms of its spiritual and temporal needs and would have its own novitiate. Thirteen years later, the new group which numbered 17 professed and 3 novices was taking care of 355 patients and 16 disabled.

The year 1845 witnessed the arrival of the Grey Nuns in Ottawa (then called Bytown) at the request of Father Telmon, an Oblate priest. Thus, the new group agreed to depart from its initial calling, since teaching would be one of the activities of les Sœurs grises de la Croix d'Ottawa, with Sister Élizabéth Bruyère acting as its first Mother Superior. The first five nuns served at the Bytown General Hospital and soon opened a bilingual school. In late 1853, the group numbered 21 professed and 9 novices, who were taking care of 133 patients, 12 orphans and 24 handicapped, and teaching 321 students.

The care of orphans was the reason the Grey Nuns came to the Quebec Diocese in 1848 at the request of the auxiliary bishop, Mgr. Turgeon. Six sisters were chosen by the mother house and Mother Marie-Anne Marcelle Mallet, who lived from 1805 to 1871 was chosen as superior of the new congregation. At the time of their arrival, on August 22, 1849, the city of Champlain was painfully recovering from an outbreak of Asiatic cholera which had claimed more than a thousand victims. They immediately took charge of the orphanage set up by the Société des Dames Charitables de Québec. Four years after their arrival, the new congregations had 11 professed nuns and 12 novices. They were in charge of 43 orphans, three cripples and 340 students.

Following those successive separations, independent congregations were established and the mother house tried in vain to regain its authority. The situation was different with the Red River establishment in St. Boniface, Manitoba, in 1844 at the request of Mgr. Norbert Provencher, Vicar Apostolic for the Northwest Territories. Those nuns remained under the Montreal authority for recruiting purposes. By 1844 those nuns set up their first hospital in St. Boniface. In 1853, the 11 professed nuns in St. Boniface were teaching in French and in English to 70 children. Five years later, the congregation became entirely independent of the Montreal mother house.

The various Grey Nun convents will experience between 1859 and 1960, as did other religious orders, quite a large increase in number, reaching their zenith in the 1930s. Thus the Sœurs de la Charité de Saint-Hyacinthe who were 50 in 1865, were 801 in 1950. The progress appears in the increased number of nuns in existing convents rather than in the opening of new ones. However, let us mention the division within the Grey Nuns in the Ottawa area which occurred in 1926 for language reasons and which gave birth to the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception whose mother house is in Pembroke. Those nuns are in charge of hospitals, homes for senior citizens, orphanages and schools in Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and elsewhere. Their activities at one point even reached out to China, Japan and the Dominican Republic.

The increase in the number of nuns allowed for the establishment of many new charities. For example, tracing the charities of the Sisters of Charity of Ottawa, François-Paul Sylvestre enumerates about fifty schools, hospitals and orphanages scattered over 36 towns in Ontario including Ottawa, Cornwall, Pembroke, Hawkesbury, Sudbury, Sault-Sainte-Marie, Sarnia and Windsor. The Sisters of Saint-Hyacinthe worked at the Hôpital Saint-Charles and at the Convent Sainte-Geneviève. They were also active in Farnham, Hereford, Marieville, Saint-Denis, Sorel and Sherbrooke. They are in Manitoba, in the United States and in Haiti and they also worked in Brazil. As to the Grey Nuns of Montreal, in 1970, they were present in 196 establishments located in Canada, in the United States, in Brazil and in Nigeria. They were active in 30 hospitals, 23 nursing homes, 6 nursing schools, 28 elementary schools, 20 secondary schools, 12 boarding schools, 16 social services centres and three dispensaries.

Like all religious communities, particularly communities of women, the Grey Nuns were very affected by the crisis of Catholicism in Canada and in the world. The state substituted itself for the communities in the areas of health care, education and social services. The raison d'être of those communities was questioned and the recruitment was affected. At the same time, the Council cast a critical look at some forms of religious life. As the nuns became older, considerable adjustments were required. The loss of buildings built with the sacrifices of the past caused traumas. Not many institutions had to face such a sudden and profound crisis.

However, we heard from those who lived through those difficulties comments revealing that an acute awareness of the changes in progress can be coupled with perseverance. Listen for example to this confidence from a nun of your community:

We were asked from everywhere for a wide variety of foundations. It is because there were not enough people to meet the numerous needs, and also because the State did not take the responsibility for anything in those times. It is an evolutionary process; now the State has taken over the education of the young and the care of the sick, the old and the handicapped. What can I do about it? Does that mean that I am no longer needed? If I stick to my old ways, yes! I should step aside, and we should all step aside for that matter! So, I must adapt because there might be no more place for charity. However, the Lord said: "The poor will be with you always" (and poverty encompasses much more than economic hardship). That means the Grey Nuns will be needed till the end of time—

Today, more than 3,600 Sisters of Charity have followed in the footsteps of Mother d'Youville and kept her work alive.

Whatever the plans the Creator may have for the Grey Nuns in the future, they have largely earned an important place for themselves in our history through their many works of charity. Future generations should not be allowed to forget these courageous women who, for the past 250 years, have chosen to live according to the motto that was engraved as an epitaph for their blessed founder: "She devoted herself to Jesus Christ and the poor".

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the Senate is grateful and indebted to Senator Guay who told us the deeds, not to say the epic of Grey Nuns in Canada.

Founded by Marguerite d'Youville, the order spread throughout Canada and in many mission countries. The details given by Senator Guay are of great interest.

In subscribing to the comments of Senator Guay and his congratulations to the order, I would like to say three things. First, Marguerite d'Youville, as he pointed out, was a descendant of Pierre Boucher, Governor of Trois-Rivières and seigneur de Boucherville. I happen to have the same ancestor. My grandmother was called Angelina Boucher de la Bruère. I must say that sanctity is not hereditary!

An Hon. Senator: We did not say it.

Senator Flynn: No. I thought I had better say it before someone else did.

An Hon. Senator: What a coincidence.

Senator Flynn: No, it is not a coincidence.

The second thing I wanted to say is that I spent three years at the Saint-Louis-de-Gonzague boarding school in Quebec City, which was run by the Grey Nuns. I must say that I was not a very good student and that I gave a hard time to the poor sisters who were trying to teach me.

An Hon. Senator: We are not surprised!

Senator Flynn: I nevertheless managed to survive, and so did the order, which is even more surprising.

The third point I want to mention is that, later in life, when I was practising law, I had the opportunity to act on behalf of the order in Quebec City. Anyway, I want to stress that the Grey Nuns took care of all kinds of destitutes, of orphans, old people and sick people in hospitals and mental institutions. They also worked in the field of education.

When I attended the Saint-Louis-de-Gonzague boarding school, there was an orphanage and a nursing home nearby. Of course, I also knew the other institutions in the Quebec region.

As mentioned by Senator Guay, the Quebec order is an offspring of the order founded in Montreal in 1737. It served the Quebec region for over 150 years.

The order and all the nuns deserve to be congratulated for their extraordinary contribution during the past 250 years. I hope the nuns will continue their beneficial action in the future.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, I just have one more word to add. I did not mention that fact, but I now want to express my personal appreciation to the Grey Nuns for their work, specifically in my region, in the city of Saint-Boniface. As I mentioned earlier, they came to Manitoba 143 years ago.

I also want to express my deep appreciation to Senator Flynn for his good words. We share the same point of view about the contribution of the Grey Nuns. We are aware of their work which may have put us in a better position today.

May I mention, Senator Flynn, that I too attended the Grey Nuns school for eight years, starting in 1920. This gives you an idea of how long I have known them.

I want to stress all the sacrifices made by the Grey Nuns in various Indian missions, all the help they gave to the poor at a time when there was no welfare. They never refused their help. There are many things I could say about the Grey Nuns, but with these comments and what I said earlier, I think everybody will know that we give recognition to the accomplishments of these women who work for the good of humanity.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, on this memorable occasion when Senator Guay and Senator Flynn finally agree on something, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 15, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

THIRTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, October 20, 1987, I will move:

That the Thirty-First Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration respecting approved salary increases for Senators' secretaries, tabled in the Senate on October 9th, 1987, be referred back to the Committee with instructions that the Committee consider the impact such increases will have on negotiations with represented employees, and on the Hay formula of classification and salary levels for non-represented employees.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What was the date?

Senator Doody: Tuesday, October 20.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, usually at this time I have the duty to present the adjournment motion. As honourable senators are aware, there is a piece of emergency legislation in the process of being passed in the other place. I believe that an understanding is being arrived at among the various parties that the legislation might very well be passed some time later today or tonight. I do not have the exact details, and I am not sure that I can tell honourable senators exactly when the legislation will reach us. With the permission of honourable senators, I will revert to Notices of Motions later this afternoon after I have obtained more details, and we will then be able to decide when it will be most appropriate for us to deal with the legislation.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: It will be interesting to know if the Opposition is willing to forgo the delays and proceed with the bill as soon as it reaches us.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have already discussed that with the Deputy Leader of the Government. As is usual with this type of legislation, we will certainly consent to abridgement of time.

FIJI

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, over the past few weeks several members of this chamber have asked the Leader of the Government about the situation in Fiji. Now that the Commonwealth Meeting is well advanced and now that one of the Commonwealth leaders has commented to the effect that the Commonwealth is impotent to deal with the situation in Fiji, can the Leader of the Government tell us more about the position of his government? If the Commonwealth is not able to do anything, are there plans in place for the Government of Canada to take any independent action or attitude towards the situation there?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know what kind of action the honourable senator would recommend that Canada take in the situation. I have nothing new to report on Canada's position. In our judgment the only legitimate authority in Fiji at the moment is the Governor General of the country. We do not recognize Colonel Rabuka, who led the coup; nor do we acknowledge his right to declare Fiji a republic, as he has done.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators that response is similar to the ones we have received before, and I quite understand it. At the same time, a number of Fijians in Canada are very anxious about the fate of their families and relatives in Fiji. Will the Government of Canada, for example, be making any special provisions for people who may wish to come here, either temporarily or on a long-term basis?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries of the Department of External Affairs on the matter.

NEW BRUNSWICK

AUTHORS OF OFFICIAL BILINGUALISM IN PROVINCE

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. This morning I received a press release from the Prime Minister's office, dated October 13, 1987, which mentions the telegram sent by the Prime Minister to Premier Richard Hatfield. In the third paragraph of the telegram, the Prime Minister says, and I quote:

You have made New Brunswick the only official bilingual province in Canada, which will go down in history as an important and enduring contribution to the unity of our country.

I do not deny that Premier Hatfield did a great deal for the Francophone community in New Brunswick and that he sought the entrenchment of the official language rights of New Brunswick Francophones and Anglophones in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In fact, I had the honour and the privilege of presenting a motion to that effect to the joint committee examining the constitutional text at the time.

However, I would like the Leader of the Government to recall what our colleague, the Honourable Jean-Maurice Simard, said in a speech in this house on December 5, 1985, and I quote:

New Brunswick is the only Canadian province that is officially bilingual, something of which I am very proud.

And I share that feeling. Senator Simard went on to say:

However, for this achievement we also have to thank another honourable member of this house, Senator Robichaud, who as Premier of my province first put the concept into law in the late 1960s.

I raised the matter for the sake of historical accuracy, not for the sake of argument. The Leader of the Government knows I am not fond of controversy on these issues, and he knows I am more of a pacifist as far as the Official Languages Act is concerned. I just wish the people who draft telegrams at the Prime Minister's office would realize that the Honourable Louis Robichaud, P.C., when he was Premier of New Brunswick, gave the Official Languages Act his official blessing, and that it is true Premier Hatfield went on to seek entrenchment of this principle in the Canadian Constitution.

[Senator Corbin.]

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—CONSULTATIONS WITH PREMIER ELECT OF NEW BRUNSWICK—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ELECT OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I have another question for the Leader of the Government, and it concerns a statement he made a few hours ago, when reporters asked him whether he thought the Constitutional Accord would be adopted, considering the position of the new Premier of New Brunswick. The Leader of the Government said:

● (1410)

[English]

... he replied: "Yes, sir."

Here I am quoting from the press release:

But he added that if Frank McKenna is adamant the accord must be amended, that "would of course be a very serious matter."

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he has spoken to the Premier-elect of New Brunswick, requesting a meeting with him on this issue, or if this was simply said by way of sending him a smoke signal.

Is it the intention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who handles this dossier, to sit down with the Premier-elect, Frank McKenna, rather than sending messages through the self-declared official opposition of the press?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I rely on the statements that Mr. McKenna himself has made, and I believe I am stating his position correctly when I say that, first of all, he supports the main elements of the Meech Lake accord and, second, that he recognizes the fundamental importance of Quebec rejoining the constitutional family, which was—and is—the principal goal of the Meech Lake exercise.

I have not, of course, been in touch with Mr. McKenna, but Prime Minister Mulroney has sent him a telegram, and I certainly would make clear, on behalf of the government, that if he, his cabinet or caucus wished to be briefed either by ministers or by officials on this or any other matter of mutual interest, we stand ready to accommodate them.

Senator Corbin: Does the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate acknowledge that Premier-elect Frank McKenna has spoken of this issue during the recent election campaign in New Brunswick, and that he does indeed have a mandate from the people to debate the matter in the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick?

Further, is it not the feeling of the Leader of the Government in the Senate that we ought to allow the new Government of New Brunswick time to go through this exercise at its own speed and on its own terms, according to the mandate that it has received from the people, and not attempt to bully him, force him or dare him into taking a position which would necessarily be to the liking of the central government here in Ottawa? This is a new ball game. It seems to me that we should respect the democratic process. We now have a new government. That new government has a mandate; the issue has been debated, and the Assembly will make a decision. I am sure that Premier-elect Frank McKenna will respect the wishes and the decision of his legislative assembly.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sure that he will, too!

Senator Frith: He has a working majority—or a workable one, any way!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I understood that it was the intention of Premier Hatfield, supported by Mr. McKenna, as Leader of the Opposition, to have committee hearings on the Meech Lake accord. I assume—and I trust that I am not assuming too much—that the new government will take that initiative.

Meanwhile, if Mr. McKenna has, as he seems to have, some concerns that he wants to express and some suggestions that he wishes to make, he will have ample opportunity in the coming months. There are various multilateral meetings of First Ministers, including one on trade, and there is the annual First Ministers' Conference in Toronto in November. So, he will have plenty of opportunity to raise these concerns. Of course, he will proceed at the pace that he decides is appropriate for him and for New Brunswick, because no one is rushing anything.

All I am saying is that the Government of Canada and the governments of the seven provinces that have not ratified the accord committed themselves in a political agreement to proceed as soon as possible. My friend will know that the motion for a resolution has been debated for some time in the House of Commons, and we are proceeding there, as we are proceeding in this chamber, as we expect the other governments involved to proceed—

Senator Frith: Partners!

Senator Murray: —namely, as they committed themselves to do as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS FOR 1987 CROP YEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he could deliver on a commitment that he made to me and to the grain producers of western Canada some time ago, namely, that he would advise them of the consideration of the government with respect to a deficiency payment for the 1987 crop after a number of meetings that he then indicated were about to take place. Those meetings have now taken place, I believe. Indeed, I believe that there was a particularly important one in Winnipeg a few days ago where there was at least an indication that the government had decided to make a deficiency payment for 1987. If that is not right, I would like to be corrected.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us now how much it will be and when they will get around to specifically telling the western farmers when they can expect this announcement to be made?

● (1420)

Senator Olson: Is it now under active consideration by the government?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the entire question of possible assistance to grain producers is now under consideration by the government, yes.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, replies to the effect that the government is considering this have been given for about four months. In fact, if I look back in my notebook I find that I have repeatedly asked this question since the government announced a severe reduction in the initial prices for grain. Since then the Leader of the Government has been telling us that it is under consideration, whether it is active consideration or whatever. Is it not about time that we got an answer?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when a decision is made I will indicate that decision to honourable senators.

Senator Olson: Can the Leader of the Government give an indication today as to when we can expect a decision to be made?

Senator Murray: I am sorry, honourable senators, I cannot answer that question with any precision today.

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

CONGRATULATORY MESSAGE TO PRESIDENT OSCAR ARIAS SANCHEZ OF COSTA RICA

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I should like to make a brief sortie into the rarefied element of foreign affairs.

As a Canadian dove, deeply interested in and highly supportive of the peace efforts of Costa Rican President Arias, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to convey my appreciation of the Prime Minister's congratulatory message to the President on his being awarded the Nobel Peace Prize?

I hope I speak for other senators, but, being a long-time Conservative, I have learned that I should not presume to speak for others beyond myself.

Further, I would comment upon and commend the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs for his continuing wisdom and moderation on behalf of peace and reasonableness in respect to Nicaragua and the troubled central American region.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I thank Senator Macquarrie—whose dedication to the rule of law and to the principle of peaceful co-existence among nations is well known in this country and beyond this country's borders—for his comments, which I shall be glad to convey to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers. Following the usual procedure, I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings unless some honourable senator wishes them read.

TRANSPORT

ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT LINK BETWEEN NEW BRUNSWICK AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first delayed answer is in response to a question asked on September 16 by Senator Bonnell regarding Transport—Establishment of Permanent Link Between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island—Environmental Impact.

(The answer follows:)

At the end of 1986, Public Works was authorized to conduct feasibility studies regarding proposals to build either a bridge or a tunnel across the Northumberland Strait. These studies include an initial Environmental Assessment and Review Process. Public Works commissioned a number of environmental studies in February 1987, set up a public information office in Charlottetown and arranged for a mobile display to visit key locations in the three maritime provinces. The department also held meetings with fishermen's groups to discuss their interests and concerns about the proposals. A Project Planning Committee chaired by Public Works, together with associated working groups, has reviewed the results of the environmental studies as they have become available.

At present, Public Works, assisted by consultants, is preparing an Initial Environmental Evaluation (IEE) report which will present the final results of the environmental studies. The IEE is expected to be ready in draft form by the end of October 1987, at which time it will be made public. Following a review of the IEE in consultation with other departments of the Government of Canada, with the concerned provinces and with the public, the department will reach a decision on whether there is a need for any further environmental assessment of the proposal.

[Senator Macquarrie.]

AGRICULTURE

POTATO INDUSTRY—SUBSIDY PAYMENT FOR 1985 CROP YEAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the second delayed answer I have is in response to a question asked on September 29 by Senator Bonnell regarding Agriculture—Potato Industry—Subsidy Payment for 1985 Crop Year—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The 1985 crop year for potato producers was a very difficult year. Production exceeded demand in all eastern North America and prices plummeted to record low levels. In Canada, production was at a record high of about 3 million tonnes and prices at a record low of 9 cents per kilogram. Production would normally be about 2.6 million tonnes at a price of about 13 cents per kilogram (previous five-year average).

The federal government co-operated with the Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick provincial governments in a surplus disposal program in early spring of 1986 in an effort to relieve pressure on prices. The government was successful, but average prices received by producers were still extremely low. The agriculture sector in Atlantic Canada has continued to suffer since the potato industry is such an important part of the sector. The impact of the poor economic performance of the industry has long-lasting impacts on the regional economy. Therefore, the government believes producers should be assisted.

The government received representations from Quebec and the maritime producers as well as from their respective provincial governments to provide assistance. There were requests that this assistance be part of the $1 billion grain program. The government did not agree, as the poor prices for potatoes were not the result of the U.S./EEC trade war. Instead, the government assisted in the potato diversion program. The respective provincial premiers also raised the matter with the Prime Minister at the First Ministers' Conference in Vancouver last year. The Prime Minister indicated that he would seriously consider further assistance to producers.

The government is presently examining the mechanics and the source of funds for an assistance program and hope to have it concluded soon. This commitment will be met to the satisfaction of the provinces and in a responsible manner.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INITIALLED COPY OF DOCUMENT CONTAINING REFERENCE TO CANADA'S UNDERTAKING RE PASSAGE OF BILL C-22—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, under the heading of "Delayed Answers" I point out that there is still outstanding a question, the answer to which has not yet been given. It concerns the documents issued in Washington on the occasion of the Free Trade Agreement.

As I recall, the question concerned a previous document that had been circulated, withdrawn and then re-issued and about who had initialled it.

I waited until delayed answers were called in the hope that the government would have an answer to that question. I draw the attention of the leader and the Deputy Leader of the Government to a report by a journalist, Mr. Allan Fotheringham, which might help the government locate the document and get the information which is being sought. In fact, it might simply be a matter of confirming that the information in Mr. Fotheringham's article is correct. The article is to be found in the Ottawa Citizen of October 15 and refers to a document that was issued while in the presence of, in fact under the hospitality of, our distinguished ambassador in Washington, Mr. Allan Gotlieb. The document was issued to a group of journalists after they heard the tape of an earlier press briefing given by Ambassador Reisman. At the time Ambassador Gotlieb was leafing through the documents. The article says this:

On it is hand-written "Original." And: "Attached are 38 pages of agreed text setting out the essential elements of a Free Trade Agreement between the United States and Canada. Each was initialled by the negotiators."

Below are the signatures.

A number of adjectives are used to describe the signatures, and I will not read all of them. Included is a description of the signature of U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker III, a "Texas millionaire's" signature; an adjective which I will not use describing a signature of Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade ambassador, and the signature of Peter Murphy, the U.S. negotiator. The article goes on to say:

Opposite, there is—

And here I will mention the adjective, because if there is any double entendre intended it is unfair.

—the tight Michael Wilson, the expansive Pat Carney, . . .

He is describing here the signatures.

—the small-and-controlled script of Derek Burney—who is parenthetically described, also unfairly perhaps, as "the PM's new hitman," and the "screed" of Simon Reisman.

Then, apparently, this is what happened:

. . . John Fieldhouse rises, somewhat agitated, and announces that the usual "eagle eye" of the ambassador has detected a small glitch in the distributed "agreement" and would we all please hand in the erroneous document . . .

The article goes on to say that some reporters did not hand in the document.

When Mr. Fieldhouse, his minions swift with the Xerox miracle, hands back the revised document, page 37 is strangely stretched to be almost the same length—to obscure detection—as the previous page 37.

The only difference is that deleted is a vital paragraph: "Canada has agreed to pass the pending amendments contained in Bill C-22 in respect of compulsory licensing of pharmaceuticals."

I wonder if the Leader and Deputy Leader of the Government, when looking at the answer to the earlier question, might simply tell us whether that is correct. In other words, was the earlier document circulated—which was a part of Senator MacEachen's question, I believe—and is it correct that those are the initials that were on it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I recall the exchange last week between the Leader of the Opposition and myself on this matter. I have investigated the matter and I find that the situation is as I speculated it might be. Various drafts come forward from working parties in the course of negotiations. I am told that there were more than a dozen working parties focusing on major elements of the agreement in the final days of the negotiations. One of these working parties sent forward to the negotiators a draft initialled by the working party chiefs. I believe Senator Frith mentioned the initials of Germain Denis, who was one of the negotiators.

Senator Frith: I did not, but he is referred to in this article, I believe.

Senator Murray: I believe he was in charge of one of the working parties. In any case, that working party sent a draft up to the negotiators, and the negotiators for our side were Mr. Burney and Ambassadors Reisman and Ritchie.

In any case, the draft sent up was rejected. This is part of the overall process of these negotiations. As I suspected the other day might be the case, this was one draft that came forward and was rejected by the negotiators.

All of the relevant documents are those that have been signed by the negotiators for Canada and the United States and that were tabled in the House of Commons and the Senate following the agreement of October 3 between our two countries.

● (1430)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, that is exactly why I have raised this question. My recollection coincides with that of the Leader of the Government, namely, that he speculated at the time that what was involved was an earlier draft, that a number of drafts were kicking around, and a draft which had been sent forward had been rejected and had found its way into the hands of the press.

But that does not appear to be what happened. According to someone who was present, it was not a matter of a loose, rejected draft but of the distribution of an actual document that was signed and which said, "This is the agreement." The reporters were then asked to hand back that formal document—not some rejected draft that had been lying around—for correction.

That is why I ask the Leader of the Government, when he continues his attempts to obtain an answer to the earlier question, to take into account this version. I accept that he did not mislead us. He did not say that is what happened. He speculated that that is what happened. If what one of the reporters who was present says is true, then I think the Leader of the Government's speculation was not accurate, as it has turned out. That is why I am asking him to give attention to this matter to see if, in fact, the events transpired in that way.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my information is that what was agreed to in Washington, and signed by ministers, is the document that was tabled in the House of Commons on October 6 and in the Senate, I believe, either on the same day or a day later.

Senator Frith: According to this article, by someone who was present, there was an earlier document signed and released—not signed, rejected and left around—and then withdrawn: It is not the same thing. I ask the Leader of the Government to look into it and to check his speculation and understanding at the time he answered the question with the events described in this article.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. As honourable senators know, the issue of Bill C-22 is now before the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, which is striving to prepare a report to be made to the Senate. We will be meeting again on Tuesday next at 5 p.m., and I hope that the Leader of the Government will be able to dispose of this issue and have an answer so that when the committee meets at 5 o'clock that matter will not be overhanging, because the question of a relationship between Bill C-22 and the Free Trade Agreement was raised in the committee yesterday.

Senator Murray: I was not aware that this issue was part of the honourable senator's ostensible search for a compromise.

Senator Frith: Now you are up to date.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, no matter what the Leader of the Government may think we are trying to do, we will give him ample opportunity when we present our report to make his comments. In the meantime, would he please undertake to give us an answer so that we can deal with it next Tuesday?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think I have given the answer, which is that the commitments which our two countries have made—the only commitments, the only undertakings—are contained in the documents that were tabled in the House of Commons and the Senate—that is, the elements of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States; and whether an earlier draft was rejected or somehow was circulated by mistake at one point in the proceedings is really irrelevant. The document that was signed by ministers of the Crown and by the negotiators for the United States government, and which contains our commitments, was tabled in the House of Commons and the Senate on the days I have indicated.

That is the answer to the question. I will ask if there is any further information that needs to be brought in, and if there is

[Senator Frith.]

I will do so; but the information I am giving, by the way, is information that was conveyed to the country last Friday by the Minister for International Trade.

Senator Frith: I understand what the Leader of the Government has said, and that is acceptable so long as he understands that we hope he will have a look at this document and make the connection.

Senator Murray: The Deputy Leader of the Opposition cannot expect me to make an investigation based on a column by a journalist. He cannot expect me to do that, and he cannot expect me to comment. The rules provide that questions may neither be asked nor answered on the basis of reports appearing in newspapers.

Senator Frith: No question has to be answered. That is why I asked it in the way that I did. I was not asking the Leader of the Government to comment on the correctness of an allegation made in a newspaper article. I am simply asking him, when looking at the earlier question, to look at the allegations that are contained in this document as to events and to see if that helps him to bring back an answer to the question that was asked previously by Senator MacEachen.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING—GOVERNMENT ACTION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I am wondering whether the Deputy Leader of the Government has overlooked a delayed answer, because on September 29 I asked him whether or not he could find out whether Memotec was asked by the government to withhold the announcement of its bid back in January 1987. Two weeks have now gone by, and surely he could find out whether the government asked Memotec to withhold its bid and, if so, why. Is the Deputy Leader of the Government sure that he does not have an answer today?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am absolutely positive, senator. I can assure you that if I had an answer I would be the first to leap up and shout it from the housetops. But I will do what I can to find out something for the honourable senator, because I know how desperately anxious he is to get that piece of information.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT ON TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT—COMMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PREMIER OF SASKATCHEWAN—EFFECT OF ENTRY INTO CANADA OF U.S. MILLING WHEAT—COMPENSATION TO CANADIAN FARMERS FOR LOSS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Buckwold asked the Leader of the Government a question regarding the two-price system for wheat and whether there was anything in the Free Trade Agreement which meant that the two-price system for wheat would be discontinued. The minister replied:

I was trying to convey the fact that the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States obviously has no provision regarding the two-price system for wheat in this country.

The Regina Leader Post of a few days ago referred to a statement of the Premier of Saskatchewan as follows:

"A two-price system for wheat under which Canadian buyers pay more for wheat than foreign customers will be eliminated as part of the Free Trade deal with the United States", Premier Grant Devine confirmed on Thursday.

My question is: Is it part of the deal; does it flow from the removal of the Wheat Board licensing of grain coming into Canada; does it mean that from now on—I am asking for information—when this provision goes into effect, if it should go into effect with the agreement being ratified, that United States milling wheat for domestic consumption will come into Canada? Does it mean that with the removal of tariffs generally bakery products from the United States will be at such a low price that Canadian millers will not be able to afford the two-price wheat system?

Farmers are pretty disturbed about this, because the Prime Minister implied—that is a mild way of putting it—that he would be in favour of $11 per bushel for domestic wheat. A committee of the House of Commons looked into the matter and, with certain provisions, made recommendations that the price be $10 per bushel. That has not happened. The price now being charged in the Wheat Board system is something over $7 per bushel, which is a good deal more than the Wheat Board gets per bushel on the export market. So what I am asking is: Does the minister say that the report of what the Premier of Saskatchewan is alleged to have said is wrong; namely, that the two-price wheat system is in no way, directly or indirectly, a part of the trade agreement that has been divulged?

• (1440)

Senator Argue: That is right.

Senator Murray: I tell him, as I told Senator Buckwold yesterday, that there is nothing in the agreement between Canada and the United States concerning the two-price system which we have in this country. Nor is there any undertaking or commitment on our part with regard to the two-price system. I fail to see what the interest of the United States would be in the matter, in any event. The future of the two-price wheat system is a matter for the Canadian government to consider on our own responsibility, as we will do.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, is the Premier of Saskatchewan wrong in the sense that it is not part of the deal? I ask: Is the government considering removal of the two-price wheat system?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I answered the second part of the question yesterday. There is no such proposal before the government at the present time. As for the remarks attributed to the Premier of Saskatchewan, I cannot comment. It would be improper for me to comment on a press report of that kind. I simply say that the agreement made between Canada and the United States is on the table. It speaks for itself, and it says nothing about the two-price wheat system. I assure the honourable senator that no other commitments or undertakings in connection with the Free Trade Agreement between our two countries have been given by the Government of Canada in this or in any other regard.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, is it possible under the agreement that has been arrived at to allow, without licensing, milling wheat from the United States to enter Canada to be purchased by millers in Canada? If that is the case, there is no way that a miller in Canada will pay $7 for Canadian wheat when he can get American wheat for $4. That is obvious.

I think what has happened—and I may be 100 per cent wrong—is that the Premier of Saskatchewan knows that this may well be the case. If it is the case, it will destroy the two-price wheat system, because if the millers will not buy the wheat the fictitious price of $7 per bushel will not matter.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator has raised an entirely different question.

Senator Argue: All right.

Senator Murray: I am telling the honourable senator that if his facts are correct, it is a question that will have to be considered by the government in due course. However, it is not a matter on which the government has made any commitment to anyone in the course of the free trade negotiations.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, it is clear that the licensing is gone. When the Wheat Board's authority to license and thereby to prevent, as they now do, American wheat coming into Canada to be bought by Canadian millers is taken away, and if nothing else is done, then the two-price system will collapse. The government can technically keep the price on and can technically say that it is not considering removal of the system. However, in the words of Premier Grant Devine, the government has in fact removed the two-price system by this agreement that has been signed. That is the result of the agreement.

Senator Olson: Or else you didn't consider it! Which is it?

Senator Argue: I would ask further: Is the government considering, in the words of Grant Devine, a payment from the treasury equal to the value of the two-price system as a method of compensating farmers for their loss? Those are not my words. They are the words of Grant Devine, your buddy.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am glad to have that suggestion from the honourable senator.

Senator Argue: Not from me!

Senator Murray: However, I want to tell him and the house, I believe for the third time, that no such proposal is presently before the government.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, what is happening is that we have before the country a trade agreement with provisions to destroy the two-price wheat system, and the government is not even considering compensation. That is what we have.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not accept the premises of the honourable senator's question. The honourable senator has gone from supposition to conjecture, to allegation, to assertion—

Senator Steuart: To fact!

Senator Murray:—in one mad dash. I have made it clear in my answers to the questions, first, that there is nothing in the agreement about the two-price system for wheat in this country—

Senator Argue: What about the licence?

Senator Murray:—that the future of the two-price system for wheat is a matter for the Canadian government to decide, and that there is no proposal presently before the government to make any changes in that system. When and if any other decision is made by the government, I cannot undertake that the honourable senator will be the first to hear about it, but he will be one of the first.

Senator Olson: In other words, you have not considered the consequences!

Senator Argue: The minister has put his position before the house. I think it is just words. Premier Devine of Saskatchewan has said that the Free Trade Agreement will result in the removal of the two-price wheat system. He has said that his confidant, his buddy the Prime Minister—that is what he said—the Prime Minister, will consider compensation to the farmers. Events will show us who is right, but the fact is that by this action under this agreement the government is undertaking to destroy the orderly Wheat Board marketing system by removing the licensing power of the Wheat Board. That is what has happened.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator has worked himself into quite a state.

Senator Argue: Not at all!

Senator Murray:—on the basis—

Senator Steuart: You have not seen him in a state, yet!

Senator Argue: You should see me when I am worked up. You should have seen me going on at about 10.30 this morning. But here, now, is mild stuff compared to when Senator Doody gets worked up.

Senator Murray: I do not know anything about what the honourable senator was doing at 10.30 this morning. In any case, he is quite agitated over a press clipping. His first citation was that the Premier of Saskatchewan had said that as part of the Free Trade Agreement certain things have been done. I think I have explained the position of the government pretty fully. When and if there is a change in that position, I shall let honourable senators know.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a little while ago I undertook to report back to the Senate on the situation with regard to the return-to-work legislation in the other place. I am told that there will indeed be a House order to get the legislation out of there tonight. I was unable to get a firm time for tonight, so, rather than have honourable senators sit around waiting for the legislation, I suggest that we come back tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock and deal with the bill at that time. If that is acceptable to the Senate, I ask leave to revert to Notices of Motions to put a motion to that effect.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, October 16, 1987, at nine o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

● (1450)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think the proposal by the Deputy Leader of the Government is quite reasonable. I take it that our plan will be to proceed through the usual order of business, but that it is understood that, as far as I am concerned, we will be granting leave for first reading and proceeding directly to second reading. Also, I understand that, in accordance with the way we usually handle this type of legislation, after second reading debate the reference will be to the Committee of the Whole and that the minister will be present.

Further, it would certainly be my intention to give leave for third reading after the report of the Committee of the Whole.

Senator Doody: I certainly appreciate that, senator. It is our intention to ask for leave to go through all stages of the bill tomorrow morning and to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole. The minister has been invited to attend, and I am told that he will be here.

With the assurance of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, for which I am grateful, we can now also make arrangements to have Royal Assent tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE—MOTION STANDS

On Motion No. 1:

By the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the present formal procedure of Royal Assent be retained and that it be used (a) at the request of the Governor General or of either House of Parliament and (b) at least once a session, for example at the prorogation of a session;

That, in addition to the present practice, a simpler procedure be established based on the following principles: (a) that the procedure involve representation from both the Senate and the House of Commons, (b) that it be public, and (c) that the declaration of Royal Assent be subsequently reported to both Houses of Parliament; and

That representatives of the Senate meet with representatives of the House of Commons to draft a resolution for a joint Address of both Houses to be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General praying that she approve such changes to the Royal Assent ceremony as described in this motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since this motion deals with Royal Assent, if it turns out that we do not have Bill C-86 for consideration at 9 a.m. tomorrow, I will proceed with my speech on this motion. It seems to me that that is an appropriate time to do so.

Motion stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, October 16, 1987

The Senate met at 9 a.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

POSTAL SERVICES CONTINUATION BILL, 1987

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-86, to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, October 20, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

POSTAL SERVICES CONTINUATION BILL, 1987

SECOND READING

Hon. R. James Balfour moved the second reading of Bill C-86, to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise to speak on Bill C-86, known formally as the Postal Services Continuation Act, and I intend to be as brief as possible.

The bill is straightforward, at least in comparison with much of the legislation that comes before us. First, the bill provides for the immediate termination of work stoppages by the 23,000 inside workers at Canada Post and a resumption of full postal services. Second, the bill provides for the extension of the now expired collective agreement for a period of a minimum of two years and a maximum of three years. The actual length of the extension within these boundaries will be decided by arbitration after the bill is passed.

Finally, the bill provides for settlement of the issues in dispute by the appointment of a mediator-arbitrator. If negotiations between the parties do not result in a settlement, the mediator-arbitrator is directed by this bill to give due cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner in the dispute between Canada Post and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers in relation to the renewal of their collective agreement, otherwise known as the Foisy report.

Honourable senators, let me now turn to some of the criticisms of this bill made in the other place and in public through the media. There appear to be two generic criticisms: the first is that the government acted precipitately; the second is that this bill is unfair to the workers represented by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

To accuse the government of acting too quickly is, in my view, utter nonsense. The last collective agreement expired on September 30, 1986, over one year ago. A notice of dispute was received from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers on October 16, 1986, and the Minister of Labour responded with the appointment of a staff conciliation officer on October 30. Since it was not possible to reach agreement through this route, on February 23 of this year the Minister of Labour exercised his discretion under the Canada Labour Code and appointed Claude H. Foisy, Q.C., as a conciliation commissioner.

As many honourable senators know, Mr. Foisy is an experienced labour relations practitioner, a former vice-chairman of the Canada Labour Relations Board, and is now a highly respected labour arbitrator and conciliator in private practice. Mr. Foisy held a series of meetings with the parties from early March to mid-August, and his report was released on September 22. The report indicated clearly that Mr. Foisy found it difficult to engage the parties in a genuine dialogue and concluded that a settlement was not possible in negotiations under his auspices.

On September 29 the Minister of Labour directed his associate deputy minister, Bill Kelly, to meet with the parties and assess the prospects for a negotiated resolution. I am sure that we are all aware of Mr. Kelly's experience and skills in such matters. He reported back to the minister that a lengthy test of economic strength would, unfortunately, have to occur between labour and management before there could be any prospect for a negotiated settlement. The minister again urged the parties to return to the bargaining table, but warned them that the government would not tolerate a protracted and disruptive work stoppage.

The parties resumed bargaining, and met for all of two hours before negotiations once again broke down, and they resumed their war of words in the media, each criticizing the intransigence of the other. At that point, honourable senators, the minister formally notified both sides that their behaviour was unacceptable. He served notice that he was prepared to introduce back-to-work legislation and challenged them to show the will and capacity to achieve a resolution of their differences through collective bargaining. After a meeting lasting less than half a day, the parties once again admitted their utter inability to come to grips with the issues separating them.

A background to these events is the report of the Marchment committee. The report stated that the committee had never seen labour relations as acrimonious as those existing between Canada Post Corporation and its unions. Further background was provided by Kenneth Swan, the conciliation commissioner in the recent dispute between the corporation and the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada. He stated that the relationships between management and the unions have deteriorated to the point where they are intensely personal and bitter.

As we all know, the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada dispute resulted in postal interruptions across Canada through rotating strikes from June 16 through July 4 this year, and also resulted in deplorable incidents of violence on the picket lines.

Honourable senators, I believe it is clear that the government did not move too quickly with this back-to-work legislation. Given the events and circumstances that I have recounted I believe that the government made a reasonable and accurate judgment that the dispute was not likely to be resolved quickly—that, in fact, the situation was deteriorating.

In my view, there is a fundamental principle at stake in this issue. One of the first responsibilities of government is to protect the weaker, disadvantaged elements in society from oppression by the strong. Such is the nature of the social contract between government and the governed. In our Constitution this social contract takes the form of a general duty of the federal government to maintain "peace, order and good government." Our new Charter of Rights and Freedoms sets out a number of obligations for the government to protect weak or minority interests from oppression by the strong.

In the dispute between Canada Post Corporation management and the unions—described by some as the "war between the Titans"—innocent third parties are caught, who are no less important and needing of protection, for example, small businesses, the elderly awaiting pension cheques, people in remote regions, farmers, the disadvantaged, and the unemployed. Each one of these groups, and more, relies on an operating postal service. None of these groups can afford a protracted strike. Allow me to give you just one indication of the impact of a protracted postal strike. According to the Confederation of Independent Businesses, the 42-day postal strike in 1981 cost the small business sector $3 billion. Another charge levelled against this bill is that it is unfair to the unions. Let me say at the outset that I hold no particular brief for either side in this dispute. I have watched with dismay the machinations and media antics of both sides. I suspect they are both equally to blame for the current impasse.

Having said that, the union suggests that the mediator-arbitrator's statutory reference to the Foisy report "stacks the deck" against the union's interests. This, I understand, is largely due to Foisy's recommendations on the job security issue raised by the postal corporation's wish to award franchises and to open new sub-post offices. The report did not recommend modifying the corporation's contracting-out plans. Instead, it recommends guarantees of employment protection and financial compensation for employees currently working at post office counters. In my view, such a direction is reasonable: on the one hand, it provides protection for workers; on the other hand, it would allow the post office to improve and expand services and improve efficiency.

I note, honourable senators, that when the Foisy report was tabled, the unions characterized it as being a good basis for negotiation. I think, therefore, that under the circumstances it is entirely reasonable for this bill to incorporate a reference to Foisy as some form of touchstone, should all else fail. Surely, given all the studies, reports, inquiries, conciliators, et cetera, relevant to the Post Office over the past half decade, the mediator-arbitrator should not be expected to start from scratch. Finally, honourable senators, I think it important to note that in prescribing penalties for breaches of the provisions of this legislation the bill is entirely even-handed—prescribing equal penalties for both union and management.

In closing, honourable senators, let me make one final point. I suspect I speak for many parliamentarians and Canadians when I say that I am tired of postal strikes. In 1981 the previous government reorganized the Post Office Department into a crown corporation in response to union pressure. It was supposed to open a future of labour peace and postal efficiency. It obviously did not. Instead, the conversion from department to crown corporation proved to be largely cosmetic, an exercise in political gimmickry. The government appeared to give the corporation independence, but the increased independence was illusory to a considerable degree. Furthermore, removing postal workers from the Public Service Staff Relations Act to the Canada Labour Code evidently accomplished little, in light of the number of labour disputes since then. The same problems persist, the same disputes erupt, the same negative rhetoric bursts forth, and the Canadian public is held hostage.

In my opinion, Canada Post suffers from a severe structural malaise. Although important to resolve our current predicament, Bill C-86 is stop-gap, damage control, fire-fighting. The basic problems persist and more studies, more back-to-work legislation and more rhetoric will not solve them. Faced with the current impasse, there is nothing else that we can do but respond to the crisis that confronts us. I therefore commend Bill C-86 to honourable senators for expeditious passage.

• (0910)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at second reading we debate the principle of a bill. If the only principle this bill proclaims is to end the postal strike, then I think it will enjoy support here and I think it has support across the country. I agree with Senator Balfour that it is a fair reading of Canadian public opinion that the public is tired of postal strikes, although, looked at in the broader perspective, it has not suffered very frequent postal strikes. However, as Senator Balfour has said, because postal strikes affect everyone, one quickly becomes tired of them, and perhaps justly so. Therefore, if that were the only principle, I do not think there would be any difficulty in supporting this bill.

The difficulty, however, is that there have been allegations that there are some very unprincipled dimensions to this bill. There have been allegations that it is effectively a union-busting bill and that its main principle and main object is to crush this union; and, in the course of doing so, to hammer a savage blow against the equally important principle of the right to strike.

What was the situation when this bill was introduced? First, there were rotating strikes and not a strike of general application. Second, the mail was moving, and the Post Office boasted that the mail was moving. In fact, before the strike the Post Office predicted that the mail would move perhaps even better than it had moved before the strike. That may have been an idle boast to say that the mail would be moving better, but, in fact, the Post Office delivered on its undertaking to keep the mail moving, and I think the people of Canada recognize that. I, personally, received mail every day, here and at home. It may not have been the volume that I would otherwise have received, but there was no indication of that. I did not notice any important change—

Senator Guay: The bills got through!

Senator Frith: That is right, the bills got through, using the word “bills” in the other sense.

That, then, honourable senators was the situation. It is very important to remember that, and to remember how quickly this legislation was introduced. It is also important to remember how draconian are the provisions in this bill. I would ask honourable senators to remember the situation: the mail is moving; the strike is not one of general application and, considering the temperature of the feelings, there was very little violence.

The word “draconian” has been used to describe this legislation and other recent legislation by this government. Everyone else may know the origin of the word “draconian”. I did not; therefore, I looked it up in the dictionary.

In the Oxford English Dictionary it says:

Draconian, Draconic (Of laws)

Clearly it is of good application here.

... rigorous, harsh, cruel (f. Drakon ...

Drakon was apparently an Athenian legislator in 620 B.C., who was famous for his rigorous, harsh and cruel laws.

Why is that particularly important in the context of the introduction of this legislation?

Senator Nurgitz: It is not.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Frith: Senator Nurgitz seems to be convinced that it has no importance that this legislation is so draconian. Let him listen! This legislation is being introduced at a time when, I repeat, there is no general strike, there is virtually no violence, and the mail is getting through. So, exit Drakon; enter Machiavelli.

Senator Doody: Give or take a few hundred years.

Senator Frith: Yes, give or take a few centuries.

Senator Nurgitz: What section are you referring to?

Senator Frith: Of course, Drakon and Machiavelli are not named in this bill. They should be!

Senator Doody: That's an aside.

Senator Frith: As I was saying, exit Drakon; enter Machiavelli. Here is a government whose responsible minister is playing a role in Senate affairs on another bill, who, it is alleged—and we will look at the evidence to see if there is any justification for it—wants, along with his government, to break this union. They want to out-muscle—which was a word that was used—this union. What does the government have going for it? It has the fact that people are tired of postal strikes, although I do not believe it is justified to say that Canada has suffered too frequent postal strikes. However, that is the general feeling. They have a union that is unpopular. They have a union leader who seems to be locked in a bitter battle with the Prime Minister of Canada to finish last in the popularity polls. The perfect situation. They need not wait. They introduced premature legislation. Was it because they were impatient? Was it because they felt that Canadians really were tired of this “long” postal strike, which had continued for a matter of a few days—this “long” postal strike, while mail was getting through with very little violence and no general strike? No.

This is where the word “draconian” becomes important. Aren't you glad you waited? The word “draconian” becomes important because in that context this legislation was introduced and timed for one purpose. It was to provoke a general strike and to provoke the union into extending its strike. You will remember that at the time this bill was introduced there was no general strike. That is important to remember, because the government is trying to justify this legislation by saying, “But look, the strike has become a general strike. Violence has increased!” To which the union says, “Yes, because you introduced this legislation when those conditions didn't exist.” How perfectly machiavellian: provoke the union into a general strike, increase the heat and temperature, have some violence, which is exactly what the government wanted to happen, and then turn around and say, “What are we going to do? We have to introduce this legislation!”

• (0920)

Is there a familiar whiff here? There is. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that you think back to this summer when a relatively small number of refugees arrived in Halifax. What was the result then? Again, a strong reaction from the people of Canada against refugees; again, the government jumped at the chance to exploit that feeling to introduce the draconian legislation that is before our Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs now, Bill C-84.

Honourable senators, this bill is part of a machiavellian attempt to out-muscle this union. I expect that it will pass in the Senate; it passed in the other place. The result is that the callous exploitation of the unpopularity of the postal union has worked. But the bill, first in its terms, is too strong and too cruel on the questions of penalties, particularly penalties to prevent people—and there is a serious question as to whether this is consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms—from working for their union for five years, in the case of some breaches. There are heavy fines, all, as it turns out, effectively provocative. Without those provisions, and with more reasonable provisions in terms of penalties introduced when the strike had gone on too long and had become a general strike, or had resulted in violence without the provocation of the legislation, then I think the legislation would have been appropriate and would have been entirely acceptable. Those conditions did not exist, and therefore, because I believe that the bill will pass for the reasons I explained, I intend either to vote against it, if I can do so without defeating it, or to abstain if my vote would be—

An Hon. Senator: That is machiavellian!

Senator Frith: Is that machiavellian? Perhaps someone speaking on the other side will explain why that is machiavellian. In the first place, it is not machiavellian because it is not sneaky, as this bill is. I am saying precisely what I intend to do and why I intend to do it. This bill does not. This bill is an attempt to achieve something more than the end of the postal strike. It is an attempt, because of its provisions and its timing, to bust this union and to interfere unduly with an important Canadian right—the right to strike.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to participate in this debate briefly because of the type of bill we have before us and the methods used in this bill by the government to settle what I acknowledge is a serious problem. As Senator Balfour pointed out, this is not a problem that has just occurred this year—that is, 1987; it is one that has been building up for a long time. It is something, I am sure, that the government ought to come to grips with, for some of the reasons the sponsor of the bill pointed out.

At the outset, I have to say that if you have ever seen iron-fisted legislation, this is it. This is the most severe legislation in terms of the imposition of penalties that has ever been presented in Parliament, that I know of. There is absolutely no consideration for the other side of the argument at all.

I have looked this bill over from one end to the other, and there is absolutely no provision in it which deals with the grievances the union claimed they had and which led up to the calling of rotating strikes. That, honourable senators, so far as I am concerned, is a cop-out by the government. All they have done is introduce a bill, using the weight of the federal Parliament to hammer the union back into line. It is iron-fisted, there is no doubt about that. There is no compromise in this legislation. There is not even a reference to direct the mediator-arbitrator to deal with the privatization of certain postal stations, which, as I understand it, is the job guarantee issue—the major issue—in the dispute between the postal corporation and the union.

As I said, it is an abdication of responsibility. I suppose one ought not to be surprised at that, because this government has taken on a stance of deregulation—that is, getting the government out of everything—and just letting the chips fall where they may. That may fit some kind of Conservative philosophy, but I can tell you that the Canadian people are sick and tired of a government that is constantly backing out of its responsibility to govern this country. This bill is a good example of that.

As I said, it is a wrong principle to write a back-to-work order taking into account only one side of the argument. You can be neutral and provide for the termination of the withdrawal of services with some consideration being given for the grievance on the other side, and have a balanced bill. But this bill is not balanced. As has been pointed out, this bill is iron-fisted, draconian, machiavellian, or whatever you want to call it. It makes no provision for the argument on the other side. It orders the workers back to work.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): It provides for mediation-arbitration.

Senator Olson: Every bill that has ordered the termination of a strike has provided for some mediation and arbitration to follow, there is no doubt about that.

Senator Murray: Would you rather we impose a settlement and that we decide the issues ourselves in a postal settlement?

Senator Olson: The government is elected to make decisions, and I suggest that they ought to do so.

Senator Murray: Do you think we ought to decide the issues ourselves and impose a settlement?

Senator Olson: When you come to the conclusion that this is the only bill you can write to terminate a strike, it clearly indicates that you are unwilling to make any decisions.

Senator Murray: What do you think the settlement should be?

Senator Frith: That is a governmental responsibility.

Senator Olson: Should I stand up here and give my opinion? The government has had dozens of people working on this for months and all they have come up with is a cop-out.

Senator Argue: Stop privatization!

Senator Olson: Are you saying that you realize now that you cannot do the job and you would like us to help you?

Senator Murray: Senator Argue says that we should stop privatization.

Senator Argue: So does Premier Devine. He wants to keep the Candiatic postal station open.

● (0930)

Senator Olson: The only comfort for the members of the union in this entire bill is the obligation placed on the corporation not to discharge or in any other manner discipline the employees for having taken strike action. That is all.

Senator Murray: The corporation is subject to the same sanctions as those governing the union members.

Senator Olson: Oh, we understand that very clearly. We on this side also know the difference between laws that a corporation has to abide by and laws that individuals have to abide by and the enforcement of them.

Senator Murray: Read the bill!

Senator Olson: We are not that naive. I hope that the Leader of the Government is not so naive that he thinks that is fairness.

Senator Frith: Don't worry, he isn't naive; he is just parading naiveté.

Senator Olson: We have simply arrived at this situation: The government has ordered the termination of the strike. It has ordered the extension of the existing collective agreement without taking any action to recognize any possible grievances. That means that the employer wins all the way for the next two years, because there is no provision in the bill to change this.

Senator Balfour: Read the Foisy report!

Senator Olson: Oh, the mediator-arbitrator can come forward with some things, including some of the recommendations in the Foisy report. I understand that can happen. I am just saying that there is some validity to the union leaders' view that this government has not met its responsibility in terms of being fair. That is the point.

Clause 5 of the bill provides—although I will not get into the details of it—that the collective agreement can be extended and fixed by the mediator-arbitrator for at least one year and up to two years, up until September 30, 1989. Operating under the present conditions, if there is a grievance—and I think there is some grievance that this government has not come to grips with—then the workers are caught with two more years of the same treatment. That is why I say there are bad principles in this bill. There is no compromise; this bill is just an iron-fisted order to get back to work. The government has announced that the strike is over and that the employees must work under the same terms and conditions as before. If they do not, there are penalties of up to $50,000 written right into the legislation.

Senator Frith: Vintage Tory!

Senator Olson: As I said at the outset, this is the most severe penalty that has ever been presented to Parliament in this kind of situation. Of course, the Canadian people want the strike settled; there is no doubt about that. I think that Parliament has a responsibility to bring in a bill to terminate the strike; there is no doubt about that either.

Senator Murray: And to impose the new contract.

[Senator Argue:]

Senator Olson: There is no new contract—that is the problem. Nothing in the bill indicates a new contract. The bill states that a mediator-arbitrator should look for one.

Senator Murray: Do you want us to do it?

Senator Olson: I want the government of this country to govern. I don't want it to back out of its responsibilities, and it has done that in one field after the other, letting the weak fall where they may.

Senator Murray: Are you against mediation?

Senator Olson: I don't know if the government can twist things around so as to be able to say that this bill and all its parts will be settled by something called "Let the market decide," but I wouldn't be surprised if we get a speech on that, too.

The Leader of the Government either has to speak loud enough for me to hear him or keep quiet.

Senator Murray: I say that the honourable senator is against mediation. He wants us to impose—

Senator Argue: This is not mediation, it is a mailed fist!

Senator Olson: This is an iron fist, that's what this is!

Senator Frith: I wouldn't invite him to speak any louder if that is all he has to say.

Senator Olson: Good idea; I won't extend the same invitation again.

Honourable senators, I merely want to make these few remarks to point out the weakness of this government in dealing with these kinds of problems.

Senator Balfour: I thought we were too strong.

Senator Olson: You are too strong with the penalties. Are penalties the only thing this government understands? That must be true, because that is all this bill contains. There is no attempt in this bill to deal fairly with the dispute. I can tell the Leader of the Government that I have seen legislation like this before. I have seen legislation without any consideration for the point of view of the worker, and it was stopped in Parliament and amended so that at least some of the things offered by the employer to the union were included in the bill. At one time in a railway dispute, for example, I saw a bill brought in that did not even provide to the workers what the railway company had offered them. That only meant that the company could sit back, day after day, week after week, doing nothing, and still winning. That is what this bill does, too. If the company could sit back for two years doing nothing to deal with a grievance—

Senator Murray: That is nonsense.

Senator Olson: —it would be an important gain to the employer. I know that the mediator-arbitrator could come in with other recommendations, but that is not what Parliament is doing.

Senator Murray: Pick up the bill and read clause 7, please.

Senator Olson: I have read clause 7. It gives authority to the mediator-arbitrator. It does not tell him that this Parliament is in favour of fair treatment. It does not set out what fair treatment is going to be. This clause is only a bunch of words.

Senator Murray: It gives collective bargaining another chance. Read it!

Senator Argue: That's not collective bargaining.

Senator Olson: I have read it.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think I ought to read this into the record. Clause 7, subclause (2), states:

The mediator-arbitrator shall, within ninety days after the mediator-arbitrator's appointment or such longer period as the Minister may allow,

(a) endeavour to mediate all the matters referred to in paragraph (1)(a)— which is all the matters relating to the revision of the collective agreement —and to bring about agreement between the union and the employer on those matters;

The honourable senator suggests that we forgo that. He suggests that we not appoint a mediator to bring the parties together on those matters but, rather, that we decide the issues here in Parliament and impose a settlement. Who is recommending the iron fist here?

Senator Olson: That is the most ridiculous statement I have ever heard anybody make. This bill just contains some fancy words about a mediator who shall endeavour to settle the dispute. What has the government been doing since they knew that the last collective agreement was going to end? The parties have been endeavouring to settle the dispute.

Senator Simard: It takes two to settle.

Senator Olson: Now the government is taking the whole matter out of their hands, putting in iron-fisted penalties—

Senator Murray: On both sides.

Senator Olson: —and sending it off to a mediator to find a solution. The Leader of the Government says that penalties apply to both sides, but the government knows full well that the longer it takes the corporation to come to an agreement the more it will win in terms of the outstanding grievances and differences of opinion.

Honourable senators, I know that we need to terminate this strike. Very responsible people like Mr. Kelly have looked at this and have told us—or, at least, have told the government, and it has been reported to us—that there could be a long test of economic strength. That, of course, means that severe consequences would flow to third parties—namely, the Canadian public—and that is unacceptable. I agree that we probably ought to have a bill, but I am not so sure whether it is not too soon. I just say that the government has done a very poor, incompetent job of drafting the bill.

● (0940)

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I wish to say that I believe that this bill should not be before Parliament at this time. In my view, it was brought in precipitately. In fact, I believe that there was not really an effective strike going on, that it was a rotating strike, harassment, a slow-down—but it was not a full strike.

What disturbs me most about the government's course is that I feel it has taken a position which opposes the whole principle of collective bargaining that has been built up in this country over many years. It seems to me that for collective bargaining to work it is necessary that when there is a dispute, when there is a strike, or a rotating strike, a strike that was not holding up the total movement of mail—as a matter of fact, postal officials and others have said that the mail was moving in record quantities—there should not be too much haste; and, therefore, I feel that this legislation has been introduced far too soon. I have a suspicion that the government is following a course against the whole principle of collective bargaining. Collective bargaining, to be collective bargaining, requires that when there is a dispute the two parties to the dispute should be allowed, in a free and democratic society, to have a strike or a lock-out, and that there should be a period of time during which the workers may not be getting paid and the management may not be receiving an income and the company may not be receiving revenue—they suffer on both sides for a period of time—but then they start making offers and to bargain in good faith.

Therefore, I believe that a great mistake has been made, that it is going in the wrong direction, when the minister, even before the strike took place, said, "If there is a strike, back-to-work legislation will be brought in very quickly."

I still cannot fathom it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: When we have a government that is condoning and supporting a strike-breaking mechanism, training so-called "replacement workers" long in advance, getting them all set to come in and break the strike—and at pretty high wages, I guess, from what I have read in the press. They are guaranteed wages whether they work or not, so long as they cross the picket line. I believe that to be a very bad thing. I believe the government should keep its hands off that kind of stuff. The government obviously supports the Canada Post Corporation in that kind of attitude. If the government wants something done, then they are replacement workers; if people are more neutral, they are strike-breakers; and if you are on the side of labour, the words are, "They are scabs." That, in itself, is a very disturbing feature. It is vitriolic and it threatens violence.

Honourable senators, I am a farmer. I am not a labour official. I am pleased that I played some role in seeing a union established in Regina when settling the dispute involving the Co-op Oil Refinery there. The man who became the leader of the union was a close personal friend of mine. I worked there for a summer, and I believe that I have some idea of how working people think and react.

Senator Murray: Well, it's equal.

Senator Argue: The minister says, "Well, it's equal." I guess that if you are a big official with Canada Post and you had to pay a fine of $1,000 per day, perhaps you could digest it for a while; but if—

Senator Murray: But they lose their job.

Senator Argue: —you are working for $13 or $14 per hour, of course, that would be different; but it's nice to say that they are equal!

Senator Murray: They lose their job, senator.

Senator Argue: The Leader of the Government can go on and quote, but I am saying that this bill should not be before Parliament. The Leader of the Government can make his speech later. He does not have to gurgitate from his seat. He can get up and make his speech in time. You might convince Mr. Mulroney that you are a great cabinet minister and a great servant of the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: —but this legislation is anti-democratic, it is punitive, it is not helpful to labour relations in this country.

Of course, the Canada Post Corporation is out for privatization. Workers are concerned, and I believe rightly, about their jobs, about job security. The word "privatization" was just a new label, and if they received equal treatment, that would be one thing; but the workers are afraid that this government and other Conservative governments like privatization so that they can knock down the wage levels of workers. Perhaps they can get the wage levels down, if the workers are not unionized, if they are part of privatization, to something close to the minimum wage—and we do not need that in this country. I have read that the Canada Post Corporation wants to get rid of approximately 4,000 post offices—"wickets," as they are called—in urban areas, and that is privatization. Privatization is going on in my province. In the little village of Candiac they are ready to privatize that post office; and, when that is done, the postmistress has been offered one-third of the income that she now receives as the postmistress. That is privatization! People went to a meeting and came out of that meeting weeping and upset. That is part of the system. That is what this government is condoning, and I am opposed to it.

I do not believe it is necessary to promote the idea of replacement workers, to promote that kind of confrontation where we have to have busloads of police circulating around peaceful picket lines. That, in itself, promotes violence. I was the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board when a strike occurred at Thunder Bay. Many farmers said, "We want to go down and take over. We will run the place, we will go down and handle the grain." I thought it was a mistake for them to take that attitude, and responsible farm leaders agreed. We felt that it would create violence and ill-will. We believed that the strike would end some day, and that when it did end the workers would again handle the grain. The dispute was settled after some time, and when it was settled the workers went to work with enthusiasm and goodwill and handled more grain in the balance of the year than they had ever handled before in a 52-week period.

[Senator Murray.]

So, I believe there is much to be said for good labour relations and for keeping up the morale of the workers, and that there is much to be said against the kind of action now being taken by the government. The government says that the people of Canada are tired of strikes, tired of this and tired of that. I guess that if you were trying to govern the country all the time by popular opinion polls you might be going in a certain direction, and it might not be the correct direction. Sometimes there have to be people who stop and say, "There is a principle of collective bargaining here, and there should be a period in which that collective bargaining process is allowed to function." I realize that the bargaining period cannot go on forever, and the Post Office cannot be totally shut down for a long time.

• (0950)

I can remember the longer strikes. My gosh, people were starting to laugh, because they were getting their mail anyway by other means. They were starting to say, "Maybe the service has improved!" So the severity was not all that great. However, this government thinks that there is a mood in the country of anti-labour, anti-union, and they want to cash in on that mood by creating circumstances that really did not exist before they brought in the legislation. The government criticizes the CUPW leader, Jean-Claude Parrot. Mr. Parrot has a history of being an aggressive leader, who has sometimes done things that some would greatly disagree with. However, I cannot say that in this particular situation Mr. Parrot has been unreasonable, that he has supported violence, or that he has even instigated a total strike. A total strike has not occurred. Mr. Parrot has acted constructively.

Some time ago I went to a postal terminal in Ottawa and walked the picket line with the workers who were there. The mood was not a violent one; the mood was rather gentle. The police were present and buses went by full of riot police, but no offensive words were spoken when I was there. They made some body gestures to the people on the bus, but they did not take any violent action. I had a long talk with Louis Lang, who is a shop steward and lives in Aylmer. I thought he was very reasonable in everything he had to say. I spoke with Roland Beauchamp, who lives on Maitland Avenue, and Mike Tang, who lives on Prince of Wales Drive. I talked with other people present. These people have families. They do their jobs to earn their wages, but they are worried about security. The workers of this country number in the millions. Corporate managers number in the thousands. As far as I am concerned, if you want a country to function and if you want efficiency, you need the goodwill of the working people of this country. This kind of legislation will not generate goodwill. When the mediator has the powers of an arbitrator, you do not have mediation at all. If the parties do not accept mediation in the first few days, they will have to take arbitration later. Mediation should be neutral, without the power of arbitration. I think it would have been more in the interest of this country if the government had not brought forward this legislation as quickly as it has. The government should have allowed the collective bargaining process to proceed.

I believe that the government is anti-labour, is anti-union, and is trying to smash unions by privatization or by any other means. The government's philosophy is that if the country is to get going again economically, you have to get wage rates down, you have to destroy the power of the unions so that the bosses can manage and run their corporations as they like. If the government can destroy CUPW today, the government can destroy the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the Public Service Alliance tomorrow.

Senator Frith: And the government!

Senator Argue: The United States is an example. Industries there are moving out of unionized areas and are going to the sunbelt where unions are not as strong or are non-existent. It is the wrong way to go. The correct way to go is to have in the country a partnership of labour, management and government, not a government in office that is anti-union. It has been said very often in the House of Commons that this government would appear to be here on a temporary basis. Never has a federal government been so low in the public opinion polls. Never before has a government deserved to be so low in the public opinion polls. In my judgment, this kind of legislation will ensure that they stay low in the public opinion polls, in spite of the fact they think they are leading a cheering nation that wants this legislation. What the people of Canada want is a government that is fair, that recognizes collective bargaining, that respects the process, and that allows a mediator to mediate without being armed with the powers of an arbitrator, and allows a strike—and in this case there has not been a strike—to proceed for more than a few days before taking unnecessary, anti-union, anti-democratic action.

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, once again, we can say that the Minister of Labour will never make the World Series. He did not win the divisional penant this summer. In three games he struck out every time at bat, but he did get a walk on the postmen's strike. The honourable senator who introduced this bill stated that he was tired of strikes. We are all tired of strikes, but perhaps if the postal workers and all workers in Canada were lawyers, they would have a closed shop. They would set up their own wage scale and benefit plans and, above all, have their own court system to try members who violate the rules and regulations of the system. They would use their clients' trust funds for their personal use when they get a little short of money. We read every day in the Toronto Star, the Globe and Mail, and all the papers in Canada, about lawyers getting into trouble. We would all like such a job. We would never get into trouble with our federal members trying us, because, like lawyers, we would have a society where we try our own members. It is rather like putting a fox in the chicken coop. The unions would love to be in that position.

Senator Murray: I am enjoying this.

Senator Frith: We lawyers are used to being downtrodden and despised, a crown of thorns again pressed to our heads!

Senator Turner: Labour relations are nothing more than human relations. Many years ago, as an MP, I saw how post office officials operated the Post Office. In the main post office in London, Ontario, was a group of lady casual workers. All their bosses said that they were the best workers they had ever seen. They would do eight hours' work in four hours as compared to the regular postal workers. A new boss came in, right out of university. He was going to clean house. He was going to show everybody how to operate this post office. The first thing he did was lay off the casual workers. About two weeks later he brought them all back at half the pay. I am talking about the university grads who were management.

Senator Argue: An MBA from the U.S.A.

Senator Turner: These workers called me, and I went to work on the case. We got them all back to work, and for a Christmas present we got all their back pay. They were very happy people.

My good friend Bill Kelly worked on the railroad, like I did. If you want to destroy a postal service, Bill and I can tell you how to do it. A passenger train carries freight, express, passengers and mail. The railroads provided Canada with a very efficient mail service for many years. Then they decided they would get rid of passenger trains. I will tell you how they got rid of them.

I ran passenger trains between London and Toronto, London and Windsor, and London and Clinton, Ontario. We carried passengers, express and mail. You are ordered to report for work at 8.30 a.m. You go to the station and sit there for one hour and 45 minutes. You go in and talk to the dispatcher, and he says: "You will go when I tell you to go." So you leave one hour and 45 minutes late.

● (1000)

The further north you go the later you become. The mailman is down there, expecting the train to be on time. The mail that he picks up in the morning is delivered in the afternoon. The mail is eventually a day late when the train comes back to pick it up. The mailman gets mad; he complains to the Post Office. The Post Office complains to the railway. So they put on trucks. The mail service is lost by the railway, and eventually they lose the express service. The railway company can then walk into the CTC and say: "We lost $200,000 on this train. Take it off." That is how you destroy the mail service!

For many years mail was sorted on moving trains across this land. There were mail clerks that were experts at throwing letters into the various bags. When the train stopped at a station, they dumped the mail off. In those days over 60 per cent of the mail did not go into the terminals. It was sorted on the moving trains.

We now have a case here where hard-working people are concerned about their jobs. Everyone is concerned about his job. We had this same situation of technological change on the railway, but we did not lose too many employees. The situation is, if you are a worker you will certainly protect your wife, your family and your home. What is wrong with that? That is democracy. That is why we have 100,000 people lying in Flanders Field who lost their lives for democracy. That is the type of government we are supposed to be living under, but, apparently, it does not apply in this country.

I have lived under four Tory governments. I never worked harder or had less. I remember my dad taking me down to Massey Hall in Toronto to listen to this great new Canadian, R.B. Bennett. We were going to have a lunch bucket under both arms. In less than a year both buckets were gone.

Senator Argue: And in four or five years he was gone.

Senator Turner: When my good friend John Diefenbaker was elected, I was on a good day job. Six months later I was back working nights. That is Tory action in this country.

There is nothing wrong with rotating strikes. It is a new system. The mail was getting through. Even the Post Office said 80 per cent of the mail was going through. That is good. But even before the rotating strikes started the Post Office officials had ads in the paper. They were going to hire scabs; they were going to hire strike-breakers. No wonder the employees went on strike.

I say to this government that you have done a very poor job with labour relations in this country, and labour will take care of you in the next election, there is no doubt about that. Even in the House of Commons and in the Senate the employees are fed up with this government. So take it and run with it, because this will be your last chance for many years.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I want to make a few comments about Bill C-86. I do not think anyone quarrels with the objective of Bill C-86 since it is to restore the postal service, and I think we all want to see that happen. However, the objections being raised both in this house and in the other place are to what Bill C-86 does in going beyond restoring the postal service. I think it is one more example of the inept, dishonest manner in which the government has been governing this country since they were elected in 1984.

If we look back a little bit, we find that when Bill C-22 was introduced we were dealing with amendments to the Patent Act that were intended to protect the drug industry and encourage research and development in Canada. Those were objectives that people were in favour of. We had the Eastman report that said: "This is good for Canada; it should be done." So what happens? We have a government that brings in Bill C-22, a bill that has turned absolutely everyone in Canada against the amendments to the Patent Act that were brought in. The situation now is that we have people who are in favour of research and development being forced to vote against Bill C-22. We have people who wanted to see implemented the recommendations of the Eastman report, which would have done some of the things that were required in Canada, and who now have to vote against Bill C-22 because of what this government has done. Instead of introducing legislation that followed the recommendations of the Eastman report, or something close to it—

Senator Murray: When do you think that vote will take place, by the way?

Senator Lucier: You had better hope it never takes place. However, honourable senators, my point—

[Senator Turner.]

Senator Argue: When does Ronald Reagan want it to take place?

Senator Murray: That is your decision.

Senator Lucier: The Special Senate Committee travelled the country and heard very clearly from Canadians what they think of Bill C-22.

We then move on to Meech Lake. The objective of the conference at Meech Lake was to bring Quebec into the family, something that everyone in Canada wanted to see happen. So what happens? We end up with the Meech Lake Accord that, although it brings Quebec into the Constitution, sells out the Yukon; sells out the Northwest Territories, and sells out the rights of women. The aboriginal peoples have been absolutely sold down the river, and you have a whole group of individuals who—

Senator Murray: Is the Liberal Party, then, opposed to Meech Lake?

Senator Lucier: I really do not have a lot of difficulty with the Leader of the Government in the Senate objecting to the things I am saying. He has had a very serious part to play in what has taken place. In fact, as the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations, he should be ashamed of himself, and not enjoy the things I am saying.

Senator Murray: Mr. Turner supports it.

Senator Lucier: That is up to him; that is not up to me.

Senator Murray: I see.

Senator Lucier: But again, honourable senators, my point is that in Canada the large majority of Canadians support the objectives of the Meech Lake Accord, including Mr. Turner and everyone in the Liberal caucus. However, in the same fashion as in the Conservative caucus and in the NDP caucus, we end up with a group of people who cannot support it, and are placed in the position of voting against the inclusion of Quebec because of the other things that have taken place when, in fact, they really want Quebec to be part of the Canadian family. That is just another piece of inept Tory deceit. That is what we are dealing with.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear! You've got the word.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, we then move to free trade, and we are into the free trade debate one more time. I would think that 80 per cent of Canadians are in favour of freer trade with the Americans, but because of the sneaky way in which this deal was done, again very much like Meech Lake—

Senator Murray: You are going to vote against it?

Senator Lucier: We are not only going to vote against it; all Canadians will not only vote against it; they are going to be scared stiff of ever seeing any freer trade with the Americans. You have not only prevented yourselves from doing it, you have prevented anyone else from doing it in the future. In my opinion, the free trade deal is another example of the way in which this government governs.

Honourable senators, let us look now at Bill C-84, the refugee legislation.

Senator Murray: We are talking about Bill C-86.

Senator Lucier: Everyone in Canada that I can think of was opposed to illegal refugees coming into Canada in the way in which it was happening. Everyone wanted legislation that would prevent that from happening in the future. So what happens? The government brings in Bill C-84, a bill that not only will not accomplish that objective but will turn us into a country that will be the laughing stock of the world because of the way we treat refugees.

Honourable senators, the list goes on and on. My point is that, again, I have no problem with the objectives of Bill C-86 in respect of restoring the postal service.

● (1010)

Why didn't you leave it at that? Why do you have to bootleg these other things in, which make those who would otherwise be supporters of Bill C-86 vote against it?

Senator Murray: What are those things that you object to?

Senator Lucier: They have been outlined very clearly. If you do not know that by now, honourable senator, I do not think you will ever know it.

Senator Murray: What part of the bill are you referring to?

Senator Argue: You're getting as bad as Senator Flynn!

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, some of the postal workers and some of the leaders in the postal unions are very militant. Quite frankly, I do not agree with the way they do things, and I am in full support of a piece of legislation that stifles some of their activities. I have no problem with that.

Senator Murray: Good!

Senator Lucier: However, the majority of the inside postal workers are good Canadians, who are trying to earn a decent living and a decent wage. I do not see anything wrong with that. The majority of them, in fact, are women—many of them are single women who really need the job. They want to go back to work. There is general support for anything that would make them go back to work.

I think the government should take a look at the policy they have concerning replacement workers. As Senator Argue has said, this is a very distasteful policy, especially for a government to be following. I could understand Chrysler doing this, but the Government of Canada?

If the government is opposed to strikes, why can it not be honest and say, "We are opposed to strikes in the Post Office." Why does the government not declare the Post Office an essential service and introduce legislation that will bar strikes?

Senator Murray: Is that your policy?

Senator Lucier: I am asking you if that is your policy.

Senator Frith: It is your policy, but you will not do it openly.

Senator Lucier: If it is your policy, why don't you do it? If that is what you think, why don't you introduce legislation, and then we will tell you how we feel about it. Introduce legislation. You are the government; your job is to govern.

Senator Murray: We have introduced legislation.

Senator Lucier: No, you have not.

Senator Frith: It is your policy, but you do it in this sneaky, underhand way.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, this is just a continuation of the other things I have described. It is not what this government is doing; it is the way they hide under the table and the way they do things that has turned Canadians absolutely against them. If you do not believe that, check the polls. You will find that you have a 23 per cent standing in the polls, and you have that standing for a good reason. You are there because you are dishonest. You do not know how to put things up front and deal with Canadians up front.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Lucier: In closing, I just want to say that, as far as this piece of legislation is concerned, I have no objection to what Bill C-86 wants to do as far as it deals with restoring postal service. Generally speaking, Canadians want postal service and Canadian postal workers want to be back at work. I object to the sneaky, underhand way that this government continues to govern. They are going to pay for it; there is no doubt about that. The polls indicate what people think of the government for this type of behaviour.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Balfour speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Balfour: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Senator Argue: There will have to be second reading.

Senator Balfour: I have nothing to add.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Balfour, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, that this bill be read the second time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Argue: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Senator Argue: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

Senator Frith: On division.

Senator Argue: I would like to have a recorded vote.

Senator Frith: On second reading?

● (1020)

Senator Argue: I would like to have a vote on second reading. If there are no other senators who wish a vote, I cannot call it myself. However, I want a recorded vote.

Senator Frith: Wait for third reading. We will have a recorded vote then.

Senator Argue: I think it is better to have a vote on second reading because second reading deals with the principle of the bill. When we get to third reading it is finished. It is too late.

Those are my reasons why I think we ought to have a recorded vote. If there is no other person to call for a vote, there will be no vote.

Senator Frith: We promise we will have one. There will be a recorded vote.

Senator Turner: I call for a recorded vote, too.

Senator Argue: My colleague and I are calling for a recorded vote.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Balfour, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is now in Committee of the Whole to consider Bill C-86, to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if it is the committee's pleasure, the Minister of Labour, the Honourable Pierre H. Cadieux, be invited to take part in the deliberations of the committee.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the rules of the Senate, the Honourable Pierre H. Cadieux, Minister of Labour, was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, there is hardly any need to introduce my colleague, the Minister of Labour, the Honourable Pierre Cadieux, who is before the committee for the third time in recent months. Mr. Cadieux is the member of Parliament for Vaudreuil and has been Minister of Labour since June 1986. He is accompanied, as has been the case in the past, by the Associate Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. Bill Kelly. I believe the minister has an opening statement, Mr. Chairman.

● (1040)

[Translation]

The Chairman: Mr. Cadieux, I wish to welcome you in this house. If you have a statement to make, you have the floor.

[English]

The Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux, Minister of Labour: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Honourable senators, as my colleague, Senator Murray, has indicated, this is my third visit to the Senate within a period of 11 months. One would, perhaps, be tempted to point out that this is a confirmation of what was earlier said in this house, that labour relations in Canada are not that good. But, of course, one really has to look beyond the major cases that make the headlines to see what labour relations are all about in Canada.

I am pleased to inform this house that, notwithstanding the fact that this is my third visit within a period of 11 months, more than 90 per cent of all collective agreements in Canada have been arrived at without one single day of strike or lockout in the past year. Consequently, the labour relations system and the negotiation system works very well in most cases. Unfortunately, there are cases such as this one where Parliament has to intervene.

I can assure honourable senators that I do not wish to transform the Parliament of Canada into a labour court. I do hope that the parties involved in the various negotiations in the country will not abdicate their responsibilities, as has, unfortunately, happened in this case, and will do everything possible to come to a negotiated settlement. I could point out that as of the day before yesterday a settlement has been reached in the St. Lawrence Seaway negotiation, and that is an indication that the system works.

I would be pleased to answer senators' questions.

Senator Frith: Mr. Minister, is it not correct that at the time this legislation was introduced mail was being delivered and the strike was not of general application?

Mr. Cadieux: I heard earlier this morning in this house some senators saying they had read in the paper that the mail was being delivered at 80 per cent. I have read the same news story, senator, so I presume that one could conclude that the mail was being delivered. Whether the strike was rotating, general or total, I suppose that would depend upon which part of the country you look at. I would point out that in Montreal, where I am from, there was a general strike at the post office, whereas in other parts of the country it was a rotating strike.

Senator Frith: Did you realize at the time you introduced the legislation that it would provoke a strong reaction from the union?

Mr. Cadieux: What we realized at the time of the introduction of the legislation, honourable senators, is that we were in a dead-end situation. I would like to go over the various facts of the dispute.

As senators are aware, the parties had been negotiating directly for 15 months. Then they negotiated with the help of a conciliator, then with the help of a conciliator-commissioner, after which a report was handed down by Commissioner Foisy. Upon publication of the report of Commissioner Foisy both parties made statements. I should like to quote what Mr. Parrot is reported to have said upon the publication of Commissioner Foisy's report:

Commissioner Foisy made some recommendations that reflect our demands, some recommendations that reflect the employer's, some others that go half way for both and others which are not addressed. This report, therefore, sets the stage for serious negotiations, but does not necessarily provide the basis for an agreement.

The parties went back to the table with that report after making those statements, and I must admit that the Post Office made similar statements and they were getting nowhere.

Sensing that the parties were getting nowhere, and that there might be an escalation in the various procedures they were both using, I decided to involve my associate deputy minister, Mr. Bill Kelly, whom I think all senators know. I do not think I have to go through the curriculum vitae of Mr. Kelly with respect to labour relations in this country.

Senator Frith: No.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Kelly was sent to meet with the parties to assess the progress that had been made since the release of Commissioner Foisy's report, how far the parties were apart, their willingness to compromise, and whether, in his view—acknowledging his qualifications, capability and knowledge in this sort of situation—the dispute could be resolved through the collective bargaining process, short of a protracted strike with all its inherent dangers.

Mr. Kelly reported to me that in his opinion there was very little possibility, not to say no possibility, that this dispute could have been settled at the bargaining table without a protracted, disruptive work stoppage, with all its inherent dangers. I informed the parties at that point that I encouraged them to come to an agreement, but that I thought they would not be able to do so, and that we would not tolerate a protracted, disruptive work stoppage in Canada, and that we would intervene if they did not meet their responsibilities and come to an agreement. Consequently, unfortunately, I introduced the legislation.

[Translation]

Senator Frith: Mr. Minister, which clause contains a provision for a five-year suspension of union officers or representatives?

Mr. Cadieux: Clause 11, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: Our Liberal colleagues in the other place moved several amendments, and perhaps I may recall what those amendments were and ask you to explain why you refused to accept them.

If I am not mistaken, the first amendment concerned this particular provision. Is that correct? Liberal members in the other place suggested dropping this provision.

Mr. Cadieux: I believe they wanted me to drop clause 11 from the bill. Apparently, a motion to withdraw clause 11 is out of order, according to the procedures of the House of Commons.

First I was asked to drop clause 11, and failing that, Mr. Guilbault, the honourable member for Saint-Jacques and Liberal Labour critic, moved an amendment that would reduce the period from five years to three days, if I remember correctly.

Senator Frith: Did you agree?

Mr. Cadieux: No.

Senator Frith: Why not?

Mr. Cadieux: There was of course a lengthy debate in which Liberal and NDP Members were particularly active. My main reason for objecting—

Senator Frith: You objected to a reduction but not to eliminating the clause.

Mr. Cadieux: I objected to the proposed reduction as well as to withdrawing the clause altogether. In fact, a reduction was proposed because the clause itself could not be removed, and reducing the period from five years to three days would have substantially the same effect.

You will agree that a three-day period means that practically speaking, the clause has ceased to exist.

Consequently, we made the following point—but incidentally, I would also like to clarify something. Unfortunately, it is not the first time this clause has been included in a bill. In fact, this is the second time the clause has been used. The first time was in Bill C-24 which concerned ports in British Columbia, when an identical clause was incorporated in the bill.

In fact, this particular clause has already been the subject of a fairly long debate in this house. At the time, the amendment was passed because, I suppose inadvertently, the bill originally indicated a suspension of employment in the capacity of officers or representatives only in the case of the union. In the other place, we passed an amendment to make the clause apply to the employer as well.

In fact, the clause as passed in Bill C-24 now appears in Bill C-86.

The reason for inserting this clause in Bill C-24 was more or less the same. The history of negotiations between the parties justified inserting such a clause, considering the very real possibility that the bill would otherwise be unenforceable.

Need I remind you, honourable senators, that in 1978, after similar legislation concerning the same parties was passed by the Liberal government at the time, there was a case of failure to comply with the legislation in question, with the result that one of the union leaders spent a few months in prison.

Senator Frith: You say Bill C-24 was passed in 1978?

Mr. Cadieux: In November 1986.

Senator Frith: That was after the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, of course.

[Senator Frith.]

Mr. Cadieux: Yes.

Senator Frith: Was any consideration given to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and how it would apply to this provision? If I am not mistaken, the subject was never brought before the courts, in this particular context.

Mr. Cadieux: To my knowledge, this particular clause has never been subject to a ruling by any court whatsoever. Fortunately so far, the legislation has been complied with. I hope that will also be the case with this bill and that we will never have to test the clause before the courts.

However, you know better than I do that all bills tabled in the House are referred to the Department of Justice, which determines whether they meet certain standards, including the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Senator Frith: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I will yield the floor to Senator Argue and to other senators who may wish to put questions to the minister.

● (1050)

[English]

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the minister. I have already said in my speech on second reading that I felt that the government acted precipitately, that it did not allow the period of time for collective bargaining that I believe should have been allowed. It is one thing to say that there were many weeks or months when they could have been settling this, but the rotating strike existed for only a short time, and I personally was surprised that the minister should have announced early that if the workers and the corporation did not reach an agreement quickly there would be back-to-work legislation—because that very announcement removed any chance for a negotiated settlement. When the parties know that the government is going to interfere, then the easiest thing they can do is to stop the collective bargaining process.

I therefore want to make my position clear. I believe that the government was mistaken, that this is bad legislation, that it is anti-labour legislation, that it will not help future labour relations in this country. I believe that labour will get its back up and will oppose this kind of legislation. I ask the minister: What is the thinking of the government, what is his own thinking, and when he announces that there will be immediate back-to-work legislation, does he not think it will torpedo the whole process of collective bargaining?

Mr. Cadieux: Senator, I wish to point out particularly that I sincerely believe in the collective bargaining process. If you look at the number of bargainings in which the federal jurisdiction is involved that occur in Canada over a year, particularly with respect to the Mediation and Conciliation Department of Labour Canada, you will notice that the numbers are there to show. Earlier I heard people talking about polls, but if you accept certain numbers then you have to accept all numbers; and we have numbers to show that the system works. We are there to encourage, help and enhance this particular system.

As I said before, honourable senators all know the credibility and knowledge of my associate deputy minister, who is my principal counsellor in these issues. In this case, if I did inform the parties of my intentions, it was because there was no other alternative. There was no other alternative, after going through 15 months of negotiations. I agree with the honourable senator that it is not a question of 15 months being not enough or too much. Nevertheless, we have spared no effort in this case, as we spare no effort in other cases, and as we have spared no effort in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway dispute, which was settled two nights ago with the help of the federal Mediation and Conciliation Department of Labour Canada. But in this case we concluded—I concluded—after obtaining Mr. Kelly's assessment, that there was no way that this particular dispute would be settled through the ordinary collective bargaining system without a protracted, disruptive work stoppage.

I should like to make a parallel here, senator. I was accused in the LCUC dispute of not moving fast enough and of sitting back and watching violence on the picket lines. We were told that the government was not doing the right thing, that it should step in and do what it had to do. We did not do it at the time because we had the conviction—or, at least, a fair degree of conviction—through the good auspices of my principal counsellor and mediator in that case, that the system was workable. But that is not the case in this particular dispute.

Senator Argue: Well, I can see the advantage of having a mediator at an early stage of a dispute. I will not try to rehash the other situation, but if my memory serves me correctly, it was the feeling among some that a mediator should have been assigned to that dispute at an earlier date.

I have the greatest respect for the judgment of your deputy minister, Mr. Bill Kelly, but no one is infallible in forecasting what is happening in a labour dispute; no one is infallible in forecasting the future. So it was a very able person, a person who has a very good track record, who gave you that opinion.

It is my judgment that by bringing in this legislation immediately—I call it “immediately,” before there was a general strike—this legislation denies workers the right to strike. We may not like the idea of a strike; we may think it is inconvenient; the public may not like it, but show me a country where there is no right to strike and I will show you a country where there is no democracy.

That is what really disturbs me, what really galls me. I believe that this legislation is anti-labour, anti-democratic, and if it is a consistent practice of this or any other government it will, in fact, outlaw strikes—and I do not think that should happen.

Let me comment on what might have happened. One scenario is that there could be a protracted debate, and there could be violence. But another scenario might be that the labour leadership has learned something over the years, that perhaps it senses that the mood of the public is different. It must sense that the mood of this government is different. By God, it is a lot different from that of a Liberal government which more or less let them knock their heads together and let each side suffer for a while—and it is admitted that the public would suffer at the same time. But that is part of the sacrifice that everyone pays for the free democratic process of collective bargaining. But this government shut it off, it stopped it, and there was no chance—and that is what I object to.

If the government goes on with this kind of thing, then it has all of the elements of turning this country into a dictatorship. Some honourable senators can snicker, but I would remind them that there could be an election within the next 12 or 15 months, and this government does not have a hope; yet this government proceeds to alienate everyone—labour, the farmers. The government promised farmers $10 per bushel for a two-price system for wheat; it gave them $7, and then took it away—and so on and so on. I do not expect the minister to agree with me, but I repeat that, in my opinion, this is very bad legislation. Another thing I object to, and I object very strongly, is a crown corporation—and I believe the government is condoning it—that has as a policy the hiring of replacement workers to break strikes. You can call them replacement workers, strike-breakers or, in the language of the labour movement, scabs. I am a farmer. I am not a labour expert, and I do not belong to a labour union. But, by God, I have been down to Cape Breton, which some would call the seat of the labour movement of this country. They have experienced all kinds of situations in the past such as companies bringing out goon squads and strike-breakers.

• (1100)

Senator Murray: Under Liberal governments, as it happens.

Senator Argue: The honourable senator can get into playing that kind of political game if he likes. I think that there are some things that are more important than citing action by a given party in the past. I say that the record of Liberal governments on labour over the years is a proud record. It does not contain the shameful kind of tactics that are being undertaken in this instance.

Before the honourable senator interrupted I was about to say that this kind of strike-breaking action was originally undertaken to wreck the labour movement, to stop it from being formed. Now this government is condoning a return to strike-breaking.

I joined a picket line before one of the post offices in Ottawa. While I was there some buses with replacement workers came along, and the police were there. The workers did not get upset. They did some fiddling to indicate that they were not too happy. They said things to the effect, “You guys go back to sleep and leave us alone.” The mood of the workers on the picket line was that they were frightened. They were not militant in the sense that they were threatening what they would do. They talked about their futures and their families. These are the things they are worried about. They do not trust Canada Post with its privatization policy. They have no trust in what is going on. They fear that they will lose their jobs and that if they have to take new jobs they will be paid something pretty close to the minimum wage.

My question is this: Why does the government condone a crown corporation undertaking strike-breaking activities, which I think are absolutely repugnant? We have had railway strikes and other labour disputes in this country. I do not remember the railways trying to hire replacement workers and providing them with training months in advance. I do not remember crown corporations ever taking such action. Why should it be necessary? When the Liberal Party assumes office after the next election, I hope that it will correct the sad state of affairs that allows crown corporations to engage in premeditated strike-breaking of the worst possible kind. That is one of the elements in this situation.

Mr. Cadieux: With respect to the mediation process, again, obviously, it is a judgment call. As I indicated in the other place earlier this morning, some people will agree and some will disagree as to whether or not the right judgment call was made. Of course, each judgment call is made on the basis of the particular circumstances. In this case, after following the history of the negotiations of the parties involved for 15 months, after hearing the statements of both parties with respect to how the negotiations were going, and after wondering would they go anywhere upon hearing statements from one of the parties about whether or not a mediator should be appointed—and I am not one to follow necessarily the advice of either party or both parties—we had to take some action.

Unfortunately, I do not have the exact quote with me, but the honourable senator referred to the fact that a mediator was requested in the House. As a matter of fact, the request was made by the honourable member for Saint-Jacques, the Liberal Party labour critic. He asked that a mediator be appointed. At the time the honourable member asked me to appoint a mediator both the president of the union and the vice-president of the union said publicly that they were not prepared or ready to sit down with a mediator. These comments are documented. They were made by Mr. Tingley, first vice-president of CUPW, who suggested that perhaps in a month or so a mediator could be appointed. Mr. Parrot picked up the same argument that I used in the LCUC strike, that timing is everything, and that you appoint a mediator when you think the parties are prepared to compromise. In this particular case, and according to my judgment, after receiving very good advice that, unfortunately, is not infallible—but Mr. Kelly is not wrong too often—I made a judgment call and took the action I have taken.

Senator Argue: We do not agree, so I do not see much point in carrying this line of questioning further. However, I would ask the minister to comment on the strike-breaking activities that have been undertaken by the Canada Post Corporation. The newspapers say that for months you have been training replacement workers. If that is not provocative action, if it is not insidious action, I do not know what is. I am disturbed that the government would condone—and it is probably supporting it, too—this kind of action, and I think it is a grave situation.

Mr. Cadieux: Honourable senators, this point has been argued at length in the other place by various members of all parties, including the honourable minister responsible for Canada Post. I shall just repeat what the minister has been saying in the House and outside the House in reply to various questions to that effect: The crown corporation, operating as a private business, has hired some replacement workers, as they are referred to in some circles, which is not illegal in this country.

Senator Argue: That is not a satisfactory answer. I can understand the Minister of Labour. He is quoting what his colleague has said, which is perhaps a nice way of saying, "I do not agree with what the hell he is saying, but I do not dare to disagree with him in public." It is a very bad move. It should be opposed. I cannot for the life of me see how the Canada Post Corporation could think that it would be seen as going into a reasonable collective bargaining process if, before the strike, lockout or rotating strike even takes place, they have their goon squad or scabs trained to come in as replacements. These scabs are Canadians. They are just people out of work. If you guarantee them up to $159 per day whether or not they work, it looks like big wages to them, but if you bring these people in, smash the union, and go on to privatization, the workers who are presently employed as well as the replacement workers will all be receiving the minimum wage.

I say that the Minister of Labour has failed to give an effective answer on behalf of the government. I think the answer is that this kind of practice is abhorrent and undemocratic. It is likely to lead to less productivity on the part of labour. The labour movement of this country is composed of Canadians like all other Canadians. They want to do a job, they want to be productive and they want some consideration. This government, with its anti-labour pitch, is condoning replacement workers by saying, "Yeah, its legal." I never said that this action was illegal, but I think it is a very bad labour practice. I would be highly surprised if the man to whom you referred earlier, your associate deputy minister, said that Canada Post was going in the right direction by training and hiring replacement workers and then asking the police to protect them as they cross picket lines. In my judgment, the government is fomenting labour violence by its action. It is not saying that there should be labour violence. On the contrary, it is saying that there should not be labour violence, but it is allowing this situation to arise and it is condoning it. The minister in charge of Canada Post obviously condones and supports it. That kind of action is aimed at destroying the labour movement; it is the kind of action that is undemocratic and is likely to lead to generally less productivity from labour. This is not a constructive thing to be doing.

● (1110)

Mr. Cadieux: Since I quoted my honourable colleague, the minister responsible for Canada Post, I will perhaps simply paraphrase something that the honourable senator said a little earlier, before his last intervention, and that is that obviously we will not necessarily agree on that point so we may not usefully continue this particular debate. However, this may not be the appropriate legislation to deal with this particular question, and perhaps there may be other interesting debates in other quarters at other times on this particular issue.

Senator Argue: I do not know whether the minister is implying now that the government intends to undertake to introduce legislation to outlaw that. All I say is that it would be better if the Prime Minister were to whisper to Canada Post: "Don't do this stupid kind of stuff," instead of indicating that it is a great way to go.

As I see what has happened, the Prime Minister thinks it is great to have a big labour dispute; he thinks it is great to have a situation such as this; he thinks the public is on his side when he says: "We will settle this, and settle it fast."

However, I think the public catches on to these kinds of shenanigans. I want to say to the honourable minister that I have had a lot of experience in this area. When you vote on the side of the workers who are in trouble, they remember your vote. However, when you vote the way the general public think you should be voting, sometimes that is a pretty soft vote, and very often they do not remember what you did, even for 48 hours. In the same fashion, when you undertake legislation that damages agriculture, you have the same kind of reaction. I think the more than two million trade-unionists of this country will remember what you are doing and, because of what you are doing, they will be far more effective in their political action, which they are still free to undertake. That is just the way I read it.

Mr. Minister, you are talking about the public wanting you to undertake this action. But the public are pretty fickle, and if this labour difficulty had been allowed to go on it is quite possible, in my judgment, that public opinion might well have come around to the side of the workers. Because the government seems to want to react to that kind of public opinion, that would then have forced the government to take a different course of action and to bring in legislation at a much later date, if it were necessary, which would be less draconian—to use that word that has already been worn out in the House of Commons—and that might have had more support.

I point out to the minister that a different set of circumstances prevails in this country at the moment from that which prevailed a few years ago. There is a lot of unemployment; there is a lot of anti-labour feeling that I think labour does realize, although both they and I feel that a lot of it is unjustified, but it is there.

I may be very naive, but I think if this situation had been allowed to continue for some time conditions could have arisen whereby the parties were ready to bargain. Then bargaining could, in fact, have come about. It would have been necessary for the government to endeavour to call off the strike-breaking tactics of Canada Post. While I realize that the Minister of Labour cannot do something that the Prime Minister does not want him to do, as I know from my own past experience, I still feel that the Minister of Labour might have taken a position more in keeping with the traditional position of a Minister of Labour; perhaps more in keeping with what is in the heart of the Minister of Labour, although I cannot read that. But if the minister had taken that position, I think it is quite possible that a settlement could have been reached; that the workers would have felt a lot better about the situation, and the general public would have come to the conclusion that it had been better to let both the Canada Post Corporation and the workers suffer for a longer period of time before the government—with expert but, perhaps, faulty advice in this case—brought in this kind of legislation.

Mr. Cadieux: I very much appreciate the comments of the honourable senator. Again, obviously, we will not agree. However, the honourable senator did mention a set of circumstances. I just want to reiterate that I made my decision according to the set of circumstances with which I was faced at that moment. I will obviously live with it, and perhaps the wishful or not so wishful thinking of the honourable senator will or will not occur.

Nevertheless, this decision was taken, in my view, in the best interests of the Canadian public.

Senator Argue: I disagree most strongly with that. I do not think the facts were available; I do not think the situation is really as it was said to be. In my opinion, if the government had called off the strike-breaking tactics of Canada Post and had given the parties a fairer chance to bargain, my judgment is that there would have been a chance, and a good chance, for settlement.

However, the minister by undertaking what, in my opinion, was wrong, precipitate action has not only brought about an undesirable situation in the Post Office, but that action may have very bad repercussions within the labour movement generally, and may adversely affect the economy of the country, instead of operating in a constructive way, which might have had more beneficial results.

I understand that the minister and I will not agree on these points. However, before I sit down, I do reiterate that what troubles me most is that I feel there is a deliberate plot to remove the process of collective bargaining which, over the years, has served this country so well.

Senator Lucier: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Senator Lucier, is this a supplementary? I have the names of several senators who wish to question the minister.

Senator Lucier: Mr. Chairman, it touches upon the point with which Senator Argue has just been dealing with respect to the replacement workers.

The Chairman: Senator Lucier.

Senator Lucier: Mr. Minister, my question is with respect to replacement workers, following what Senator Argue has just said. It seems to me that there would not be much doubt that the practice of training and hiring replacement workers, even before a strike takes place, will incite violence rather than curb it. It seems to me that the violence is brought on by the hiring of replacement workers. I do not think there is much question about that.

My question is: With respect to this new policy that apparently is being followed by this government as far as crown corporations are concerned, does the government intend that as an ongoing policy? Would it not be better, if you feel that a service is essential, to protect that service by making it illegal for people to strike? It just seems to me that what the public wants in this particular case is mail delivery.

In Whitehorse I had the pleasure of working in the fire hall. I was working for an essential service. I was the president of a Public Service Alliance in Whitehorse; I was the shop steward in the fire hall, and I was working for a service where we were not allowed to strike, and we knew that we were not allowed to strike. That was not a problem for us. We knew that our services were required, and that was no problem.

At one point I sat on the City Council of the city of Whitehorse where I was a negotiator for the City of Whitehorse with respect to labour disputes—some, in fact, involving the fire hall. There was never a question about the fact that the essential services were to be maintained.

With respect to mail delivery, it does not matter to me if I get a letter from my sister three or four days late, but it does matter to a small business operator whether or not his bills are paid on time, and it seems to me, Mr. Minister, that if you really believe that mail delivery is an essential service it would make more sense to simply say: "There will be no strikes in the Post Office," rather than going through this charade of hiring replacement workers.

● (1120)

Mr. Cadieux: With respect to the question of essential services, senator, I am sure you are aware that that question is being studied right now. There was a House of Commons Standing Committee on Government Operations report that was tabled in June, if my memory serves me correctly. In that report I believe there is a recommendation with respect to making the Post Office an essential service. The report has to be answered by the government within 150 days. My understanding is that the minister responsible for the Post Office is in the process of going through that particular report and will presumably be stating the government's policy on that issue in the near future.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am sure the minister is aware that I have fairly severe criticism of the way this bill is put together, notwithstanding certain reports that were made to the government, the most important one being that there would be a long test of economic strength before the two sides would sincerely get together and try to settle this. Therefore, I support the need to have back-to-work legislation.

I would like to ask some questions about the contents of the bill that disturbed me.

There is no provision in this bill for proclamation or for authorizing the government to make regulations. This may be something that has been settled some time ago. Is there a blanket authorization for a bill to come into force, or for the proclamation to be made, that has been given some time ago by the Parliament of Canada? Clause 13 of this bill says:

This Act shall come into force on the day immediately after the day on which this Act is assented to . . .

Does the government no longer need to proclaim legislation?

[Senator Lucier.]

My next question is this: There is no authorization sought in this bill to give the government power to make regulations for application of this bill. Is that normal now?

Mr. Cadieux: Honourable senator, with respect to the entering into force of the bill, you have referred to the amended clause, which is one of the two amendments that were agreed to. The original clause read:

This Act shall come into force on the twelfth hour after the time at which it is assented to.

My understanding of the procedure is that the legislation is assented to when Royal Assent is granted and will come into force 12 hours later. After discussions with the opposition critics, we agreed that it would be a little complicated to do this with such a "short" delay. Therefore, we reviewed the clause which was contained in Bill C-85 that was passed in Parliament approximately a month ago. There were four sections in that particular legislation, one of which came into force, as is the case with clause 13, which reads:

. . . come into force on the day immediately after the day on which this Act is assented to, but not before the twelfth hour after the time at which it is assented to.

And if need be, in that particular legislation, which is not the case in this legislation, the other parts would have come into force upon proclamation. Obviously, this legislation comes into force after a number of hours following assent.

Senator Olson: Could you explain why you do not need authority in the statute to make regulations for the application of the bill?

Mr. Cadieux: I do not foresee the need to make any regulations, honourable senator, with respect to this particular legislation, as we did not foresee making any regulations in Bill C-24 or Bill C-85.

Senator Olson: What is the position with respect to what I think is the major grievance in applying this act? I made a reference to it and the Leader of the Government answered previously but, I have to say, unsatisfactorily.

Senator Murray: I only read the section.

Senator Olson: I understand you did that. Will Canada Post Corporation be free to consummate postal station franchises during the period when the mediator-arbitrator is trying to get agreement for some modification of that?

While you are answering that perhaps you could answer this: Does the present agreement deal with how Canada Post Corporation can conduct its franchising of postal stations? As far as I know, that is not part of the agreement. Therefore, if the mediator-arbitrator is confined—if that is the right word—to modifying the present collective agreement, then he cannot deal with what the Post Office is going to do. Therefore, you come to the conclusion that Canada Post Corporation will be free to continue making franchising arrangements, or what you call "privatization".

Mr. Cadieux: Honourable senator, we could argue that there are many different ways of referring to the process that you are calling "franchising." I believe that the entire debate has been around the word "franchise." However, I believe you will agree with me that it is also a question of whether or not there is the right of contracting out and a question of job security, which obviously is addressed in the existing collective agreement and is addressed in negotiations. Presumably, it will be dealt with in the settlement or, perhaps, the decision of the mediator-arbitrator.

If you look at the clause that my honourable colleague, Senator Murray, referred to, clause 7, you will see it has different parts to it. One of the paragraphs says that the mediator-arbitrator is to meet with the parties in order to try to bring the parties to an agreement. Obviously, they will be discussing the contracting out, job security and franchising issues. If they agree on one or all of those particular issues, there will be an agreement between the parties. If they do not agree, then the mediator-arbitrator becomes an arbitrator, and paragraph 7(2)(b) says very specifically that the mediator-arbitrator will meet and hear the employer and the union, and will take cognizance of Commissioner Foisy's report, which deals with the franchising issue. Obviously, it is an issue that is being dealt with. I sincerely hope that the union not only makes its point but brings in arguments, either at the mediation stage—and hopefully comes to an agreement—and/or at the arbitration stage, and the arbitrator, if he is in a position to have to make an arbitration judgment or decision, will bear all the arguments in mind and will bring down the best decision possible.

Senator Olson: When this bill is passed, will the arbitrator-mediator have the power to prevent Canada Post Corporation from entering into franchising agreements until the union agrees?

Mr. Cadieux: Right now there is no impediment for the corporation to carry out exercises that we will call for this discussion "franchising." Whatever it does is subject to the Canada Labour Code. I am sure I do not have to remind the honourable senators that the CLRB has already pronounced on one issue of "franchising" or contracting out.

● (1130)

Senator Olson: Only what they have to be paid.

Mr. Cadieux: Well, it is on the successor rights as to whether or not the negotiation unit follows what was determined, in that particular case, the sale of the business. Obviously, whether it is dealt with in the collective agreement or not, it is subject to the other laws that exist in this land, including the Canada Labour Code, which, in section 138—I stand to be corrected on the number—

Senator Olson: That does not matter.

Mr. Cadieux: —deals with successor rights and transactions of that sort. Whatever is done will have to be in accordance with the agreement or the law. Commissioner Foisy deals with this particular issue, and I do not want to stand here stating that I agree or disagree with Commissioner Foisy, because it may eventually be the arbitrator's task to do that. Consequently, I want to leave him free to draw his own conclusions. However, that is stated in the report and, as far as I am concerned—whether it is called contracting out, job security or franchising—obviously, it is an issue which both parties will want to discuss, negotiate, hopefully settle, and, if not, there will be arbitration.

Senator Olson: I understand that there is a possibility of all of that unfolding. But I would like to suggest another situation that could unfold, because, as you have pointed out—at least, that was my understanding—this privatization can continue. There is no provision in this bill for the government to say to the mediator, "You can stop this." Therefore, there is an incentive for the Canada Post Corporation to speed it up so that they can get as much of it done as possible within the two-year period, which is the full extension of the mediator's authority.

The next thing I would like to have answered is the question of what is a postal station and what is a substation. There are all kinds of substation post offices around the country now, in drugstores and other stores, and, as has been pointed out a few minutes ago, they are now privatizing the whole post office activity in some smaller towns. Post offices are now being placed in stores and a different structure is being set up from having a postmaster there, as has been pointed out. Could the minister tell us if that kind of activity will take place during this so-called "truce period" that the bill calls for, or will the workers be involved?

I have some sympathy for the problem of severely militant labour union leaders—and I know that you have to deal with that; make no mistake about that—but what I find difficult is that you want to open up the possibility of swooping up thousands of other workers who are not in that category of being exceedingly militant with respect to the operations of the Post Office.

Mr. Cadieux: First, with respect to whether or not it can be done right now, it could be done, since some operations of privatizing or franchising went on. Some cases were brought before the CLRB and decisions were rendered. I do not want to force my judgment on the CLRB or any other deciding authority as to whether or not the decision was correct and should have been done, and so on.

With respect to whether it can be done during the collective agreement or the extension of the collective agreement, I would like to point out that the mediation-arbitration period is 90 days, unless there is an extension, which I have the discretion to grant. Obviously, if the parties ask for an extension to continue negotiations, I presume that I would make a good judgment call in probably agreeing to extend the negotiation period, without presuming what my decision may be at that time. Therefore, the problem will probably be addressed—perhaps solved—within 90 days. After that there will either be a negotiated agreement or an arbitration decision, which may or may not prevent such an exercise. You are asking me to comment on hypothetical questions which I do not think I should do in the circumstances.

As to whether or not it is a sub-post office, or whatever else we may call it, there again, those issues are dealt with by the parties, the mediator and the arbitrator and, finally—if need be—by the CLRB, which has the jurisdiction to make those determinations, not the Minister of Labour.

Senator Olson: I do not think that the Minister of Labour should be so modest; he is expected to have an opinion on many labour matters. I do not think he can leave all of it to the CLRB, because they have to function and operate within the parameters of the authority that they have.

What I am concerned about—and I am sure that the minister realizes that—is that the one side, namely, the Canada Post Corporation in this case, does not take unfair advantage of the situation in which they received back-to-work legislation terminating the strike and imposing what I call “iron-fisted penalties”—beyond anything that I have seen before. I am concerned that they do not take some kind of action during that period to take unfair advantage of the legislation that we are passing today.

We expect the minister to have an opinion and to make judgments, not to superimpose it in every case on what the CLRB is authorized to do. I am trying to explain to the minister that there is an opportunity here for the corporation to take advantage of this legislation. I hope that he will whisper, or even say loudly, that he does not expect them to do that in this case—not to deal with some of the extreme militancy but to deal with thousands of other people who are also involved in this work stoppage.

Mr. Cadieux: I will deliver your message to the minister responsible for the corporation, who may or may not whisper in the ear of the corporation. Some people say that we should be at arm's length; others say that we should not. Again, we can get into an interesting debate on that. However, I am sure that whatever the corporation and/or the union may or may not decide to do during this collective agreement will be done at their own risk, according to the laws and the rules that are in existence.

For instance, the CLRB has two cases before them on this particular issue, and one case in which a decision was rendered. Will there be an attempt to rush into other situations without knowing what those decisions will be? If I was legal counsel for the corporation—which I am not—I would, perhaps, tend to recommend that they wait and see.

Senator Olson: Well, the minister almost replied to the question that I put to him, but not quite. I asked him whether or not he would agree that the Canada Post Corporation should not take advantage of the situation during the period that we pass back-to-work legislation—because we already agreed that they are free to act on it—to achieve a lot of what they were doing any way, which is what the dispute was about. I asked the minister if he agreed that that kind of activity by the corporation should be discouraged.

Mr. Cadieux: Both the parties should take advantage of this legislation, get back to the table and negotiate a settlement which is the best settlement they can get.

[Mr. Cadieux.]

Senator Olson: That is still not an answer to whether or not you will support the argument which you agreed a few minutes ago was a good one.

● (1140)

Senator Turner: Mr. Minister, when the rotating strikes started, did you conduct any tests or check out the progress of mail delivery as compared to when there was regular mail service?

Mr. Cadieux: Personally, no.

Senator Turner: Did any of your officials in Canada Post Corporation conduct any tests?

Mr. Cadieux: I am unaware of that.

Senator Turner: Well, I did. Mail service to Burlington, Ontario, from Ottawa before the rotating strikes started took five to six days. Even registered mail took four days to go from the Ottawa post office. When the rotating strikes started, it took two days for a letter to go to Burlington, Ontario.

This proves to me that you are getting back to the many years when you were providing good mail service. It can be done.

Why did you or someone in the department not conduct tests when this rotating strike started?

Mr. Cadieux: Honourable senators, as Minister of Labour, I follow the negotiation process very carefully and draw my conclusions on how the process is working with respect to the negotiations themselves in particular.

In this case, as I indicated earlier, we have had negotiations for over 15 months directly and with the assistance of some very able conciliators and conciliation commissioners of Labour Canada. Then I turned to my associate, the assistant deputy minister, whom you know very well, who was, as you indicated earlier today, in the railroad unions, as was Senator Turner, and on whose judgment I rely fairly regularly. With all due respect, sometimes we do not see eye-to-eye, because I have to make my own decisions. But he met with the parties and made his assessment on very specific facts that I outlined. I asked him to find out if the parties had gotten any further ahead since the Foisy report; if they had made any progress in the negotiations; and if there was a chance of the parties making progress, and, finally, coming to an agreement without protracted, disruptive work stoppages in the country that would affect not only the economic strength of both parties but would, unfortunately, perhaps, cause more problems to innocent third parties.

Senator Turner: For over 25 years, 19 of those in public office, I have heard about the sharp practices of the management of the Canada Post Corporation. Sir Henry Thornton, the first president of the CNR, used to wander around the property and talk to employees. Does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the President of the Canada Post Corporation or the Minister of Labour drop in to various post offices and talk to the employees? I would suggest that you do this unannounced, as did Sir Henry Thornton, and talk to the employees to find out what their grievances are, because they are stacked a mile high and no action is taken. Why don't you wander around and listen to what the employees are saying about this great corporation they work for, the Canada Post Corporation?

Mr. Cadieux: Honourable senators, I suppose there are various times when that could be done. I do not want to boast because I have already been qualified as being modest, but I do go to the post office in Hudson to pick up the mail.

Senator Frith: You don't want to spoil a good reputation.

Mr. Cadieux: I do speak to the people who work in that post office. Mind you, I do not have to go and pick up my mail in all post offices in Canada. However, I will bear Senator Turner's comments in mind.

Senator Turner: Do you go into plants where the workers are to find out what their grievances are? It is all right to go into a post office, but you should go into the plants. I go into the plants and I know what is going on. What do you do? You go to the post office, period.

Mr. Cadieux: There are processes for that, honourable senators, and I am sure that some union leaders might not appreciate my visiting the plants to talk to the membership. However, I will bear that thought in mind, and perhaps I will drop in one day.

Senator Turner: Honourable senators, while driving along highway 401 I listen to all kinds of advertisements which state that Canada Post Corporation is going to hire people at $13.25 an hour. Where did this figure of $13.25 come from?

Mr. Cadieux: I have no idea. The minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation is my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and he, presumably, is more aware of those facts than I am. I have no idea.

Senator Turner: Is it not true that down through the years CUPW produced this figure by negotiation and the odd strike?

Mr. Cadieux: Perhaps they produced that number by negotiation, but I am sure it is a combination of both those facts, and presumably including inflation.

Senator Turner: Can you tell me where the figure of $159 a day came from?

Mr. Cadieux: Again, honourable senators, I regret to inform you that I do not know.

Senator Turner: We read and heard that this whole situation was costing this government a lot of money. In fact, the words were, "It is costing us dearly." Can the minister tell us what it cost to use the strike-breakers, the buses and the helicopters to move the mail when the full strike took place?

Mr. Cadieux: No, sir, I do not have the figure for the replacement workers and the various pieces of equipment that the honourable senator has just listed. I want to inform the honourable senator that, contrary to what a lot of other people believe, I do not always believe what I read in the papers.

Senator Turner: The Canada Post Corporation had big advertisements in the newspapers saying they were going to hire strike-breakers to move the mail. I believe that this is the first time in the history of the Post Office that we have had strike-breakers hired by the Government of Canada to bust a strike.

Mr. Cadieux: With respect to replacement workers, I would point out that they were used in the LCUC strike earlier this summer. I would also point out that they were used in the Air Canada strike. It is my understanding that even now they are being used by the Lake Carriers Association in order to replace the engineers so that western grain, which is, of course, a major industry in this country, can be moved to the ships and exported.

Senator Turner: If you were a good, honest, hard-working postal worker, how would you feel if you had listened to the radio and watched TV and saw those big advertisements that your boss was putting in the papers, knowing full well that you could be on strike and that scabs and strike-breakers would be hired to take your job, your wife and family's living and your home away in the event that you were not recalled?

I realize that there are no guarantees for anyone in the working world today. It may be so in the case of a policeman or a fireman if he does not lose his life by being shot or in a fire. We have to gamble and we have been gambling for many years. How would you feel if you were a worker in the Canada Post Corporation?

Mr. Cadieux: Fortunately, I have never worked there, so I would not know.

Senator Turner: You are a lawyer, so you set your own pay and your own benefits. That is the difference between the working people and the professional people of this country or of any other country. You live in a different world.

Mr. Cadieux: As a lawyer, from what I recall of the profession it is a fact that we set our own hourly rates, subject, obviously, to review, complaints and judgments from the Bar Association, which has the discretion to modify, reduce but, unfortunately, never to increase our fees.

Senator Turner: You are judged by men of your own profession. That is like putting a fox in the chicken coop.

Mr. Cadieux: Sometimes, honourable senators, I would prefer that I not be judged by the Bar Association, by my own colleagues, because, in most of the recent jurisprudence that I have seen, they have, rightly or wrongly, taken the side of the client.

Senator Turner: I have talked to a lot of workers since this strike began. We will take care of you in the next election. Thank you very much.

[Translation]

Senator LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it is fair for the Minister of Labour whose instincts, I believe, would or should lead him to take side with the workers, and if, under such circumstances, we should not hear from the minister responsible for that crown corporation who put him in this unenviable position to defend, because of cabinet solidarity, this case which he might not be very proud of.

I did not intend to rise and I voted against the bill. I am scandalised by the hiring of temporary workers who are replacing regular workers of crown corporations.

● (1150)

[English]

Senator Argue did a much better job than I could ever hope to perform on the issue of replacement workers, which is really a polite society term for scabs. The fact is, however, that crown corporations are not ordinary businesses. There is a mythology which is frequently heard in Ottawa—and, by the way, I heard it around the table where I sat for many years—that crown corporations are in some way at arm's length. Yes, they are at arm's length, because they are frequently out of reach of the government which has to answer for the messes they create.

I think that as a matter of policy crown corporations, to whom a government appoints boards, the senior officers of which are appointed by order in council—although that cannot be said for the numerous vice-presidents of Canada Post, because I do not think that many orders in council would be passed in a year—are not really “at arm's length.” No government can pretend that it is not in a position to give directions to crown corporations. I know that when I was in government some of my colleagues did entertain this myth. The reality is that crown corporations must have labour relations and must have an attitude towards their workers which is a lesson to the rest of the country, not one of the worst examples.

Personally, as one who has tried to help a group within this society that was disorganized officially, I am profoundly offended that crown corporations should be taking out full-page ads to hire scabs. I am also offended by the televised images of police being used as the “fer de lance” for the penetration of picketers' lines. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there are two recent situations where, in the coming together of the media and a political attitude, rather strange circumstances have been created.

To illustrate my point I take the case of Charlesville, Nova Scotia, where refugees recently came to Canada—as my ancestors did, by the way, by boat, without proper papers. The people of Nova Scotia did what Canadians by instinct do—they received them, they offered them food and they offered them beverage. It was only when the media and tight-mouthed bureaucrats began to produce pictures of military personnel herding these people around that the backlash started to percolate, if I can use that expression.

In the case of this postal strike, pictures of violence have been published—but violence created by what? By a bus moving into a group of people? Who is violent, the bus or the people who are being pushed? Who is violent, the guy getting out of the way of the police coming through a picketers' line or the police themselves? I think these pictures can be very misleading. And I think attitudes harden and change by allowing the projection of images along with words that create the sort of collective malaise that we saw around the refugee issue and that we see again around the Post Office. As somebody said, these are good Canadians doing an honest day's work. They are perfectly entitled by law to go on strike. Why do we apply against them pressure tactics? These are pressure tactics which I, frankly, do not find acceptable in a society.

I think that it is the minister responsible for the Post Office and the officers of the Post Office who really should be sitting in Mr. Cadieux's place, answering some of our questions. If it is going to be a policy that a company can advertise for replacement workers—that it can, in fact, create an act of terrorism in time of negotiations by calling for replacement workers before the strike actually occurs—then I suggest that whoever forms the next government had better think again about the labour relations of this country. I do not think it is civilized behaviour on the part of any crown corporation, as much at arm's length and as out of reach as it pretends to be.

Mr. Chairman, I really did not intend to make a speech at the minister, but Senator Argue asked the right questions. I will put one question by way of a conclusion: Does he, as Minister of Labour, believe that the practice of hiring replacement workers through advertising during a negotiation is a practice which he recommends and can live with?

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: I would like to call the honourable senator's attention to and emphasize the fact that the corporation we know now, Canada Post Corporation that has become a crown corporation and must deal at arm's length with the government, was established rightly or wrongly in 1981 by the previous government. Someone pointed out to me this morning that if it was not on October 16, 1981, at least it was in October 1981.

Of course we inherited the corporation as it was at the time. And to my knowledge, the corporation has been and is still operating under the laws of Canada. To my knowledge, during the negotiations that started 15 months ago, the practices referred to by the honorable senator did not always prevail.

Senator LeBlanc: I watch television quite often and I am a bit sorry this government should take such an attitude: because something was done in the past and it is quite correct to keep doing it.

When the minutes of the cabinet discussions are published 30 years from now, the minister may then discover that some of us did not agree entirely about the myth that is widely circulated in Ottawa to the effect that when people are appointed to a board of directors, we have no right to give them directions. Indeed, I think that if you look at legislation that at some point is developed by the government, you will find its purpose indeed is to give ministers in charge the authority to give directions to the crown corporations they are responsible for. I believe that is a myth. We may not have been perfect when we established Canada Post Corporation, but I think this government cannot claim that our imperfections warrant the kind of carelessness that prevails today.

[Senator LeBlanc.]

Mr. Cadieux: It was pointed out to me on a number of occasions, senator, with all due respect of course, that indeed the previous government was not always perfect in a number of areas. However, as far as Canada Post Corporation as such is concerned, it was established in 1981 under the previous government. I agree with the honourable senator that this is not cast in concrete, if I may use the phrase; I would point out to the honourable senator, as I indicated to another senator earlier, that there is now a standing committee report that deals with Canada Post Corporation, to which the government should be responding in the coming weeks or months.

The Chairman: Have you concluded, Senator LeBlanc? I have no other names on my list. Mr. Minister, have you any comments in conclusion?

Mr. Cadieux: I would simply like to thank honourable senators who welcomed me this third time. Not that I do not appreciate your company, but I hope—
[English]

—and I hope—and this is no reflection on your company—that I will not have to come back again.

Senator Frith: Not for these reasons, at least.

The Chairman: Are honourable senators prepared to proceed with clause-by-clause study of the bill?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the title be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, the short title, carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Senator Olson: I have only one point on clause 7, Mr. Chairman. That is the clause with respect to which both the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the minister indicated there is authority with which to deal with everything, including privatization.

Could the minister be more specific about what it is in clause 7 that gives the mediator-arbitrator the authority to order—I cannot think of another word—the crown corporation not to proceed or expedite the privatization during the period of the truce and the period of extending the existing contract?

• (1200)

Mr. Cadieux: As the honourable senator has indicated, clause 7 deals specifically with what the mediator-arbitrator will have to do. Clause 7(1) says:

The Minister shall, after the coming into force of this Act, appoint a mediator-arbitrator and refer to the mediator-arbitrator

(a) all matters relating to the amendment or revision of the collective agreement that, at the time of the appointment, remain in dispute between the union and the employer;

Subsequently, should the mediation stage fail, then clause 7(2)(b) says:

(b) if the mediator-arbitrator is unable to bring about agreement in respect of any such matter, hear the employer and the union on the matter, give cognizance to the report of the conciliation commissioner that was released to them on September 22, 1987, arbitrate the matter and render a decision in respect thereof;

It is my understanding that at the present time—and most probably at the time of the appointment of the mediator-arbitrator—the issue of contracting out, job security and franchising has not been settled. Consequently, it will be dealt with by the mediator-arbitrator.

Senator Olson: It is the wording that troubles me. I will not take up much time on this. I guess that one could interpret the word “revision” to add something that at present is not there; but when it says “. . . relating to the amendment . . . of the collective agreement,” one cannot amend something that is not provided for. Certainly one could not add something to the collective agreement that was not envisaged when the collective agreement was made, however many years ago that might have been. Also, in dealing with the terms and conditions with respect to franchising, as you said, it was not in the agreement; so how can you amend what is not there?

Mr. Cadieux: It is the issues that are in dispute that will be amended or revised; and obviously job security and contracting out are already dealt with specifically by the actual collective agreement. With regard to the franchising, it is dealt with in the Foisy report. So, consequently, the parties will be dealing with those issues.

Senator Olson: I know that the Foisy report dealt with it, and there is reference to that later in the clause. Are we now trying to equate this contracting out provision to include a whole lot of other things besides just privatization of stations and substations—that certain transportation services and other things could be contracted out? I am concerned that this could change the level of franchising. There have been substations for a long time to which, apparently, the unions have not objected. But now, if the corporation takes a large postal activity and calls it a substation or “franchising,” is the minister saying he believes that the contracting out that is in the collective agreement envisaged that sort of activity?

Mr. Cadieux: The parties have specifically indicated, through various media reports that I have seen, that one of the issues upon which they could argue was the franchising issue. Consequently, it is one of the matters in dispute. In my view, it is directly related to the contracting out, because should there be an agreement and/or a decision by the arbitrator that there should not be contracting out, then how can you franchise?

Senator Frith: I have a question concerning the English and French versions. The Foisy report appears to play a more muscular role in French than it does in English. At the bottom of page 3 it says:

(b) if the mediator-arbitrator is unable to bring about agreement . . .

et cetera; then, at the top of page 4, it says:

. . . give due cognizance to the report of . . .

Foisy. It does not use the name "Foisy", but that is what it is referring to. The French version says "prendre sérieusement connaissance." I would think that in English it is easier to say "give due cognizance," because it is a little more subjective as to what is due.

Senator Doody: It was amended in the bill that was passed.

Mr. Cadieux: On that matter, senator, that clause was the object of an amendment following discussion with the opposition parties.

Senator Frith: I was reading from a "First reading" copy of the bill.

Mr. Cadieux: It now reads in English, "give cognizance"; and, in French, "prendre connaissance". I accepted the amendment for many reasons, but also because the opposition parties suggested it after, I am informed, they had checked with various lawyers and other authorities with respect to the equivalence in the language.

Senator Frith: I apologize, Mr. Minister. I was working from the First reading copy of the bill. However, I am glad that I raised the matter and underlined the fact.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

The Chairman: Carried, on division.
Shall clause 11 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

The Chairman: Carried, on division.
Shall clause 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

Senator Macquarrie: I should like to say a word in connection with clause 13. With regard to the careful scrutiny which the Senate gives to clauses contained in all legislation, I regret that the wording of this clause should end with the preposition "to;" and therefore the bill ends with something that is rather inelegant. I hope that on the next occasion we will have that little inelegance removed.

Senator Frith: It is something that we should not always assent to!

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, the short title, carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

---

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-86, to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as I said during second reading, the bill will pass. I believe that the Canadian people want it to pass; but I hope that they will realize how the government has, I believe, mischievously manipulated to set up the conditions for the bill and its premature introduction. We believe that the popular end should not justify such a cynical means.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

Senator Denis: A small division!

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL

OTTAWA

THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

October 16, 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 16th day of October, 1987, at 1:00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth

Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1300)

At 1.00 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of postal services (Bill C-86 Chapter 40, 1987)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 20, 1987 at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 20, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

DELEGATION FROM U.S.S.R.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to draw your attention to the presence in the South Gallery of a delegation from the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics headed by Mr. Efren Sokolov.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Allow me as well to extend a special greeting to one of the delegates, Mrs. Valentina V. Tereshkova, the first woman astronaut.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege.

Yesterday, Montreal daily newspapers carried a full-page ad addressed to Quebec senators.

An Hon. Senator: In both official languages!

Senator Lafond: This ad claims that I support Bill C-22 at this time. I may have been sympathetic to Bill C-22 when it was first introduced in the other place.

As a result of the debates in the other place and here, and given the obvious arrogance, inflexibility and offensive attitude of the government and its spokesman, the sponsor of this bill, whatever sympathy I may have felt at the outset has been severely eroded.

Given also what to me appears to be hypocrisy, not to say a lie—and here I say a “lie” on the part of the government, not of the individual—concerning the link between Bill C-22 and the free trade issue, the sympathy I may have had has been further eroded.

At this time I do not support Bill C-22. I am waiting for the report of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce before making up my mind.

In the meantime I would suggest that this kind of lobbying and pressure tactics is altogether reprehensible and dishonest. The Senate privilege committee and the Senate itself should severely reprimand this so-called coalition committee of green-horns of the City of Montreal.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker *pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-83, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): On Thursday next, October 22, 1987.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Corbin: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday, October 22, 1987.

TRADE

IMBALANCE BETWEEN CANADA AND U.S.S.R.—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I am sure that I speak for all senators in saying that we welcome to our country the distinguished delegation from the Soviet Union. Some of us have had the opportunity to meet a number of them.

I rise now to refer to the fact that the Soviet Union is our number one customer for grain, which includes wheat, and has been for many years. The Soviet Union has always worked very closely with our Canadian Wheat Board. They have been excellent customers by way of buying the largest volume and by way of accommodation, from time to time, with regard to the programming of grain for the export market. They have sometimes accommodated our Canadian Wheat Board when the Canadian Wheat Board has pointed out, for reasons of weather, that perhaps some grades were not available in quantity, and the Soviet Union has altered its buying requests to accommodate Canada. It has been a very good mutual arrangement.

We look forward to the continuing sale of large quantities of grain to the Soviet Union. I am sure I express the hope of everyone that the Soviet Union will continue to buy quantities in the future similar to those it has in the past.

The Americans are looking very closely at this market. They are tough competition. They are asking Soviets to buy grain from them, with the added incentive that they are prepared to provide some of that wheat at a zero price—a gift. The main problem the Soviets have in dealing with Canada is that trade is almost a one-way street. We sell to the Soviet Union quantities varying from $1.5 billion to $2 billion a year. We buy from the Soviet Union perhaps $25 million or $50 million or $75 million worth of their goods in a given year. Some effort has been made on their part to entice this country to buy more. Some effort has been made on our part to facilitate their goods coming into this country. In response to questions I have raised in the Senate previously, the Leader of the Government has pointed out that there is a desk in the Department of External Affairs that takes a particular interest in this problem, and it hopes to facilitate their sales into Canada.

With that long preamble, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if this area—the area of facilitating the Soviet Union by importing larger quantities of their goods into Canada—is now being looked at in a very active way, and has Canada, directly or indirectly, made some commitment to use its best efforts to increase our purchases of Soviet goods by a very large amount within the next few years?

● (1410)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the answer to the question, generally speaking, is in the affirmative. “Best efforts” is what we have undertaken to deploy, to the extent that the government can. This was the subject matter, as the honourable senator knows, of discussions on the occasion of Mr. Clark’s visit to the Soviet Union and on the occasion of the visit of the Soviet Foreign Minister to Canada. We understand the importance of the market of the Soviet Union for our products, and we understand equally well that trade is a two-way street and that, therefore, it is in our mutual interest to promote the purchase of products from the Soviet Union in this country.

Again, I can only reinforce what the honourable senator has said and advise him that our Department of External Affairs and our people in international trade here and in the Soviet Union—and quite a number of private sector people in this country—understand this and are pursuing it with all possible vigour.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I appreciate the minister’s reply. I have had some association with this problem in a modest way since I was a minister. I know that, although the Canadian Wheat Board is not in the import business by any means, they have been using their good offices, as best they can, to facilitate contacts between Soviet exporters and potential Canadian importers.

Over the last large number of months a distinguished official of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Terry Martin, has devoted a great deal of his time in a constructive way for Canada by meeting with Soviet representatives and introducing them to potential Canadian buyers, whether those buyers be representatives of governments or of private business in Canada. His effective work on behalf of western grain producers is greatly appreciated.

I wish to ask a specific question. There is a rumour around that Canada is trying to be more concrete in its suggestions that it will make a stronger effort. I may not have the right language—and, I hope, the minister will pardon me if the description is not correct—but may I ask him whether or not a letter of comfort has been sent from Canada to the Soviet Union indicating that we in this country, that is to say, the government, would use its best offices to expedite importation into Canada from the Soviet Union of goods produced by the Soviet Union to a value of some $780 million Canadian over the next three years?

I do not put that forward as being something that I can vouch for, so I ask the question. I am not suggesting that you should comment on any answer that has not been given, but that seemed to me to be at least an encouraging rumour, and I wonder if it is more than a rumour.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend is becoming quite specific in his questions now. He will understand if I tell him that I would want to obtain a precise reply from the responsible minister on this matter.

Senator Argue: I understand that.

Can the minister say whether or not the Canadian government in its purchasing program has looked at the possibility of the Government of Canada’s buying some portion of those goods from the Soviet Union when it needs particular goods for the servicing of its departments?

I understand that the Department of Highways of the province of Saskatchewan some two or three years ago purchased a few Soviet tractors and has found them to be very efficient. That department recently purchased an additional small number of Soviet tractors. I am sure that machinery is a requirement of the Government of Canada from time to time. It seems to be a constructive suggestion that in looking at possible sources of supply, in the interests of Canada we should do all we can to assure the Soviets that we want to retain that market for Canadian wheat. I think that $5 billion in hard currency from the sale of Canadian wheat to the Soviet Union over the next three years is something of great benefit to all parts of this nation. I think it would be constructive if the Government of Canada could purchase some of its requirements from the Soviet Union, and I believe that that would be taken as a signal that the government was sincere in wanting to address this problem. The benefits that flow from an acceptable minor effort in this respect would be very important.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do know that the Soviet trade people have been increasingly aggressive in recent years in terms of the possibility of the sale of their machinery and other products to governments and crown corporations in this country. I will see if there is any more detailed information that I can bring to the attention of the house. Meanwhile, I will convey the honourable senator's representations to my colleagues who are directly responsible for these matters.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

AVAILABILITY OF TEXT

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would be kind enough to tell us when we will have the legal text of the free trade deal, the sort of "illegal" or "not-yet-legal" version of which was given to us some time ago.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I hope that Senator Gigantès is not suggesting that the Elements of the Agreement that have been signed by representatives of our two countries and tabled here and in the other place are anything less than authentic and official. In any case, legal texts are under preparation, as the honourable senator knows. My colleague, the Minister for International Trade, advises that it is hoped to have the text available early in November.

ENERGY PRICING POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, since the sort of foretaste we were shown was, as the Leader of the Government says, legal and factual, would he answer the following question? On the energy side, all the Americans asked for—and, presumably, all we asked for in exchange—is that they be able to purchase energy here at the same price as we charge Canadians, minus transportation costs, of course, and vice versa. Is that a correct understanding of the agreement?

● (1420)

Senator Gigantès: I think I will give the Leader of the Government an opportunity to answer the question one more time. Is it or is it not correct that the text which was distributed to us says that each signatory should be able to buy any form of energy without any restrictions in the other country—with some exceptions for times of war and grave shortages—at the same price as nationals of the selling country buy it? Is that or is that not correct?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again, I invite the honourable senator to read the Elements of the Agreement and, indeed, the legal text when it becomes available; but the Elements of the Agreement will suffice for the time being. I want to remind him—again, this is a general comment on that component of the agreement—that one of the lessons that we have learned from the disaster of the National Energy Program is that energy development must be driven by decisions made in open and internationally competitive markets, not by government intervention and price fixing, which tries to ignore economic reality.

Senator Gigantès: So, if I understand correctly the answer of the Leader of the Government—I will ask his forgiveness if my English is inadequate—he is saying that the Americans should be able to buy any form of energy in Canada at an internationally set market price, and we should be able to buy any form of energy in the United States on the same conditions. Is that what you said, sir?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what I said was that the honourable senator should consult the agreement to understand all of its provisions with regard to the markets for energy and to Canada's rights in this matter and to the rules with regard to investment, ownership, and so forth. It is all there, and I suggest that my honourable friend should read it.

Senator Gigantès: I read it all the time, sir. I find the document absolutely fascinating. But you are still avoiding the question. I have asked you a simple question. Why will you not give me a simple answer? Is it or is it not true that according to the agreement any American can buy any form of Canadian energy at an internationally set market price, and vice versa? Is that not the basic condition really?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hesitate to take the time of the Senate to read the section on energy and other relevant sections into the record. That would seem to me to be an abuse of the time of the Senate and of the Oral Question Period. The honourable senator can read and can understand the Elements of the Agreement, and I invite him to do so.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I think it is an abuse of Oral Question Period to evade questions. It would be much simpler for the Leader of the Government to say, "I refuse to answer." Why does he not say that? He has the right to say, "I will not discuss this. I refuse to answer." What he does say instead is, "Read the agreement." I have read the agreement. He then says, "Try to understand it." I have tried to understand it. I am asking for his help in understanding the policy of the government.

But let us try it another way. In the energy sector, let us suppose that the Government of Canada or a provincial government subsidizes the production of a particular form of energy. For so long as the product of the particular subsidized facility is sold for the same price to U.S. customers as to Canadian customers, would that be within the legal limits or the spirit of the agreement?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the question asked by the honourable senator is hypothetical. Once again, it points up, I believe, the inadvisability of trying to use the Oral Question Period in the Senate for purposes which would be better served in a standing committee of the Senate, where the agreement could be submitted and discussed in detail with the responsible ministers and the negotiators. The honourable senator should know—and I am sure he does know—that subsidizing energy costs to a particular firm, for example, with or without a free trade agreement, leaves that firm or that industry vulnerable to attempted retaliatory actions, counter-vail and the like, on the other side of the border. There is nothing new there. But, again, I shall not use Oral Question Period to try to enter into detailed discussions on the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement and to answer all manner of hypothetical questions about it. This exercise should be carried out with the responsible ministers and negotiators, as I have suggested, before the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senator Gigantès: So, honourable senators, is the Honourable Leader of the Government saying that the product of Syncrude, which is subsidized by both the federal government and the provincial government, is countervailable if sold to the United States?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not saying anything of the kind. I am saying that hypothetical questions are not to be entertained during Oral Question Period. I suggest that detailed questions about the meaning and application of this agreement should be asked of ministers and negotiators in the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs as soon as we can arrange to have the agreement referred to that committee.

EFFECT ON CANADIAN ECONOMY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, from the beginning of these negotiations we have been denied information. We are still being denied information. We were told that there was no connection between Bill C-22 and the negotiations for a free trade agreement. There is, at least, circumstantial evidence that there is a connection. We have been told by one minister that there would be no loss of jobs. We have been told by another minister that they are preparing to deal with the loss of 500,000 jobs. We were told by the Prime Minister that marvellous facilities and programs would be put in place to take care of the people who might lose their jobs. We were told by the Minister of Finance that this was not so. Please, could we not be informed? The fate of Canada is in the balance. Does the Leader of the Government not think that he should give us some information?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, every reputable study that has been done on this matter has forecast that tens of thousands of new jobs would be created in Canada as a result of free trade with the United States. This prediction applies with regard to jobs, output, income and living standards in the country as a whole and in each of its regions. The honourable senator need only consult the studies done by the Economic Council of Canada, by the royal commission headed by the Honourable Donald Macdonald, by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, by the Economic Council of Newfoundland, and I do not know how many other studies of that kind. All these studies indicate strongly a net increase in output, income, living standards, job creation in the country and in each of its regions. If the honourable senator does not want to believe this point, then I take it that it is not possible to persuade him. However, he still has an opportunity to gain some understanding of the details of the agreement, what it means and how it applies, if he and his colleagues will agree to have the agreement referred to a committee in the near future.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have looked at all these studies and I find them extremely interesting. They all have one basic assumption, and that is that trade remedy laws of the United States would cease to apply to Canada—all of them. The Economic Council of Canada study is based on the assumption that tariffs would be abolished in 1987. So, assumptions on which these studies were done are not at all what we see in this preliminary text that has been tabled. That is why I am asking questions, to try to understand where we are and where we as a country are being led. We are taking a leap of faith—into what?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators—

Senator Muir: Our leader has the patience of Job!

Senator Murray:—even since the agreement was signed by the two countries some of the people who were involved in the studies, including the Honourable Donald Macdonald—

Senator Muir: Tell us about Donald Macdonald! Who was he? What government did he serve in? He is a pretty brilliant man, isn't he?

Senator Murray: He was before Senator Gigantès' time, but he was a Minister of Finance in a previous government.

Senator Muir: It seems to be silly season, so I might as well ask silly questions, too!

Senator Murray: Mr. Macdonald and others have looked at this agreement and have not changed their opinion as to the positive effects of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States on Canada's economy, our living standards, our incomes, our output, job creation in this country and in each of its regions. If the honourable senator wishes, I can supply him with the relevant quotations from Mr. Macdonald and many other responsible business people and government leaders in this country.

● (1430)

Senator Gigantès: The Honourable Judy Erola has joined the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association. Just because she was a Liberal minister it does not mean that I have to agree with her. The Honourable John Crosbie used to be a Liberal and he crossed the floor to the other side. Every time you mention what Mr. Crosbie had to say I do not get up and say, "Who was he and what did he say when he was a Liberal?"

We are asking some questions about matters that are terribly important for this country, and all you give are answers based on assumptions that are no longer valid. What I am saying is that you did not get the thing which you said was most basic, which was the binding dispute-settlement mechanism. Further, you refuse to answer any questions, and I would like to know why. You say these questions are not proper in the Oral Question Period. What is the Oral Question Period for if it is not to get answers from the government? I wish to be instructed on this.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what it is becoming is the "Senator Gigantès Show," and I think the honourable senator ought to consider his responsibilities in this place in relation to the responsibility of other honourable senators and to the Senate generally. This is not a period for dialogue between only two senators, so I suggest that he permit other honourable senators, if they wish to ask questions, to do so, and if not, that he let the Senate proceed to Orders of the Day.

Senator Gigantès: I would like to assure the Honourable Leader of the Government that I have absolutely no doubts about his love for this country. I do not want him to have any doubts about my love for this country, too, and I am asking questions because I feel that the future of this country and its well-being are being imperiled by this free trade deal.

POSSIBILITY OF REFERRAL TO FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if it is the government's intention to introduce a motion referring the agreement between Canada and the United States on the subject of trade, and any subsequent texts, to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. Has such a motion been made?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Perhaps I can help the honourable senator. We certainly would like to introduce such a motion. I have discussed the matter with Senator van Roggen and he indicated that he would entertain such a request to have his committee look at the matter. I do not know if he has yet had a chance to consult with his committee, but if that committee wishes to examine the matter I am sure that we would be only too happy to refer it to that committee.

Senator Frith: In that case, honourable senators, I will certainly take it up with my colleagues, now that I have some formal notice. Certainly, the Leader of the Government has not been at all diffident about it, and I am not criticizing him or complaining. He has mentioned the matter two or three times. However, I wanted to know that there was such an intention before I took the matter up with my colleagues.

I must add, however, that that does not guarantee there will be no subsequent questions in Oral Question Period.

[Senator Gigantès.]

PARLIAMENT HILL

CONDITION OF SIDEWALKS

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, may I raise with the Leader of the Government in the Senate a perhaps more pedestrian type of question? It deals with the walkways on Parliament Hill. Last evening, when I was on the Hill, I saw a guest who was walking around stumble and almost fall on the sidewalk beside the East Block. There are very wide cracks in that sidewalk. It is a disgraceful situation when guests and Canadian citizens visiting the Parliament of Canada must go through this type of obstacle course.

I simply ask the Honourable Leader of the Government if he would speak to his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, to see if some action can be taken before freeze-up. I am sure that the winter ice will fill in the cracks, but perhaps we could do something else before that happens.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to three questions.

With the permission of the Senate, I shall follow the usual procedure and identify the date, the questioner and the subject matter, and ask that the answer be taken as read and form part of the proceedings, unless any honourable senator wishes me to read it.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CREATION OF NEW AGENCY—EFFECT ON TENURE OF PRESENT COMMISSIONERS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 12 last by the Honourable Edward Lawson regarding Canadian Transport Commission—Creation of New Agency—Effect on Tenure of Present Commissioners.

(The answer follows:)

Legislation which provides for the abolition of commissions, boards, ministries or other entities often carries with it the elimination of positions. Holders of positions in such entities are provided with reasonable notice or where such notice cannot be given, payment in lieu of notice.

Compensation is offered in accordance with the separation-pay policy approved by the Treasury Board in 1984, which policy can be found in the Personnel Management Manual, volume 2, chapter 8-3. Within that policy, individual claims are negotiated based on precedents in both the private and public sector.

Negotiations are carried out on a confidential basis between representatives of the Crown and the employees or their representatives. Such negotiations are aimed at arriving at a fair settlement. The government is always careful to follow precedent in these matters. An individual may, of course, seek redress through the courts.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

LUBICON LAKE INDIANS—NEGOTIATIONS FOR ALBERTA RESERVE—APPOINTMENT OF NEGOTIATOR

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on September 29 last by the Honourable Joyce Fairbairn regarding Indian Affairs and Northern Development—Lubicon Lake Indians—Negotiations for Alberta Reserve—Appointment of Negotiator.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Perhaps the honourable deputy leader would read the answer to my question.

Senator Doody: Yes, certainly, senator.

The Honourable Bill McKnight announced the appointment of Mr. Brian Malone as the new negotiator for the Lubicon Lake Band land claim on October 5, 1987. In his announcement the minister reaffirmed Canada's willingness to continue substantive negotiations over the Lubicon claim. Mr. Malone hopes that productive negotiations on this claim can be commenced by early November 1987.

When the Honourable E.D. Fulton undertook his assignment to inquire into the facts of the Lubicon lake Band's land claim, there was an agreement between Canada, the Province of Alberta and the band that the results of Mr. Fulton's work would not be released without the consent of all three parties. To date the province has not consented to the release of the document.

COMMUNICATIONS

SALE OF TELEGLOBE CANADA TO MEMOTEC—INVESTIGATION OF INSIDER TRADING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on September 30 last by the Honourable H.A. Olson regarding Communications—Sale of Teleglobe Canada to Memotec—Investigation of Insider Trading—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The government ran a sealed bidding process. All potential bidders received information on Teleglobe only after they had signed a confidentiality agreement. This is standard commercial practice to protect the company being sold.

The bids were received on January 9. The government had agreed with the bidders as part of the confidentiality agreement, that the government would not announce the names of the bidders. The government did not advise them one way or the other on whether they should make an announcement. The government advised any who asked to seek their own legal advice. The government was anxious to have the bidding process conducted confidentially, as is the case in any sale of a similar nature in the private sector.

At a meeting on January 10, the government together with outside legal counsel, Justice counsel, CDIC and Dominion Securities agreed that should any bidder make an announcement the government would not comment. The government knew at this point that Spar/Caisse/CTCI were contemplating a press release and that Memotec had already informed the stock exchanges that it had bid.

The confidentiality of the names of the bidders, from the government's point of view as vendor, was to protect the bidders, as is normal commercial practice, because the government did not feel it would be fair to tell bidders who they were competing with. At no time did the government "insist" that any bidder not disclose. The government merely informed them that the government would not disclose.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Stollery).

Hon. Ernest G. Cottreau: Stand!

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I would like to say that this bill is not receiving the benefit of the democratic process in this institution. This bill, Bill S-7, has been on the order paper since April 2. Senator Stollery has had two months in which to say something, and has not chosen to do so. I am now informed that Senator Stollery will not return to this chamber for two or three weeks. In all fairness, this bill should go to the committee, so that the witnesses can be heard.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: On the point of order, I wonder if I may be allowed to ask Senator Bélisle if he has received any guarantee from the committee that they are prepared to examine that bill immediately upon its referral. Has he, in fact, spoken with the chairman of the committee?

Senator Bélisle: May I say to the Honourable Senator Corbin that he was one of those who accused me of being too nosy!

I may say that I have not spoken to the chairman of the committee, because I am waiting for the democratic process to take place so that this bill will go to the committee. I ask the Leader or the Deputy Leader of the Opposition to see if something can be done about this matter. This is the first time in the history of the Senate that a bill is not receiving—and I repeat—the democratic process. Let the bill go to the committee.

Senator Corbin: On that last point Senator Bélisle is wrong. I looked at some precedents going back to the last century.

However, I would like to answer the question that I put to him, and which he did not answer: Last summer I spoke with the chairman of the committee to which this type of bill is normally referred—namely, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs—and she informed me that as far as she was concerned this private senator's bill would be at the bottom of her list and she did not think the committee would find the time to deal with it this fall. Therefore, I do not know why there is all this pressure on poor old Senator Stollery to speak to this matter either today or tomorrow, when I know for a fact that he is doing research on the background of that famous institution.

Senator Bélisle: Honourable senators, I must rise again and say that if the chairman of the committee has already made up her mind not to give this bill consideration in committee, then the democratic process is indeed being stopped by the chairman.

● (1510)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I take it that Senator Bélisle wishes to record his objection to the motion to adjourn the debate in Senator Stollery's name. No doubt, what he has said today will come to Senator Stollery's attention.

Senator Bélisle: Thank you.

Order stands.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I wish to advise honourable senators that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be meeting in room 256-S on the Bill C-22 reference. The notice is for when the Senate rises, so it will be meeting immediately following the adjournment.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 21, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Rhéal Bélisle, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM COMMONS PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the nineteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce concerning the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., dated September 3, 1987, and the Message from the House of Commons, dated August 31, 1987, relating to certain amendments to Bill C-22, an act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 2009.)

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Stewart, that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Tuesday next, October 27, 1987.

Senator Flynn: That will give honourable senators opposite a chance to read it!

Senator Frith: And you too! I always mind my own business—in the same way you mind mine!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration on Tuesday, October 27, 1987.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

STOCK MARKET ACTIVITY—CONGRATULATIONS TO MINISTER OF FINANCE FOR STATEMENTS AND ACTION

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I am sure that all Canadians have been concerned and wondering what has been going on in our world over the past few days. They have seen tremendous and traumatic action being taken in the equity markets throughout the world, and I believe that we should all reflect on the situation and congratulate the Honourable Michael Wilson for the statements he made and the action he took to quieten the situation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, on behalf of the Honourable Michael Wilson I thank the honourable senator for his intervention. I hardly think it will be necessary to draw that intervention to Mr. Wilson's attention, he being the avid reader of Senate Hansard that he is! I am sure he will be pleased to hear that comment, particularly coming from one as experienced and respected in the private sector as Senator Sinclair.

Senator Frith: Harvie Andre always passes his copy of Senate Hansard along to Mr. Wilson!

An Hon. Senator: With teardrops!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF CONCERNS OF MILITARY FAMILIES—STATUS OF REPORT AND NATURE OF RECOMMENDATIONS—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators know that later this afternoon we will be in this chamber as witnesses to the presentation of the Persons Award for 1987. It seems to me that it would be very helpful if some of the questions that have been asked concerning the status of women in this country were answered a little more quickly than they have been. I hope I am not being unfair, and that they do not turn up in the delayed answers today.

However, on August 28 I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the status of the report on spouses of members of the military. About one month later an answer came back saying that the Minister of National Defence had the report and that it had been reviewed. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate can give us some further information on the status of that report, which affects mostly wives and children of a great many Canadians in the forces.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall have to make inquiries of my colleague in that regard.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, it would be very helpful if the Leader of the Government in doing so would get an answer which is a little more definitive than the last one, which said that the minister had taken note of the request and would consider the question when a decision was made. I am sure that the minister has looked at the report very carefully. It is a matter of urgency to a great many women, their spouses and their children in this country.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT CONTRACT FOR CONSULTANCY WORK OF CERTAIN WITNESSES APPEARING BEFORE SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have an additional question concerning a question I had asked on September 2 about people who had appeared as witnesses before the Special Joint Committee on the Meech Lake accord. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate has any indication when it will be possible to get an answer concerning the status of those witnesses, as to whether or not they were consultants or in any way linked to the PCO or the government.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I recall the question, it asked whether these people had been employed or engaged professionally by various agencies and, indeed, by any department of the federal government. That is a rather wide net, but I have a partial answer that I can give the honourable senator now.

The partial answer is that insofar as the Privy Council, the Prime Minister's Office, the Federal-Provincial Relations Office and the Department of Justice are concerned, the answer is in the negative. I ask the honourable senator to allow me to confirm what I have just said and also to investigate whether replies have come in from other departments concerned.

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

[Senator Marsden.]

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.—(Honourable Senator David).

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, in his speech of June 11, Senator Argue explained why he gave notice on March 12 that he intended to move a motion to create a Special Committee of the Senate on Health Care. I read with much interest the comments made by Senator Marshall on September 14. He spoke about the possibility of reducing health costs for veterans who might take advantage of the Veterans Independence Program. He also referred to the Health Promotion paper published by the Department of National Health and Welfare which recommends a nationwide discussion on this issue.

I rise today to ask for further information on the objectives of the proposed committee, the budget needed to meet these objectives and possibility of producing a report within 12 months.

The motion of Senator Argue gives the terms of reference of the committee in a single sentence:

First, to examine Canada's health care system. Second, to report upon the role of preventative medicine and other preventative measures, third, to determine whether the provision of a wider range of health services can make the health care system more effective and contribute to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians, and fourth, to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care.

Let us look at these four objectives separately so that the sponsor of this motion can give us a better idea of the research that will be needed to obtain the desired results.

A review of the health care system in Canada would cover the ten provinces and the territories. This alone is an enormous task.

For instance, the Quebec government created a commission to examine its health care system and to suggest improvements. For the public and the media, this commission became known as the Rochon Commission after its president, a doctor specializing in epidemiology who, at the time of his appointment, was dean of the faculty of medicine at Laval University in Quebec City. This six-member commission, which included four full-time commissioners, began its study on October 15, 1985, and is expected to present its report on December 18 of this year. It has had an average full-time staff of 30 employees and has contracted work out to some 60 researchers. It will have cost about $6 million. This example in only one province clearly shows the enormous challenge which Senator Argue's motion represents as it covers all Canada.

In his speech, Senator Argue indicated a few parameters for the consideration of the health care plan: the cost of the present plan; the aging of the population and its impact on the utilization and duration of care; cutbacks in services in several provinces, following budgetary restraint; longer waiting lists for surgery and the occupation by senior citizens of short-term care hospital beds over long periods.

We could have added the extreme congestion of emergency wards in most city hospitals, a situation which forces patients to spend many days on stretchers in corridors, while waiting for beds. Many other problems certainly will be brought to the attention of committee members—for instance the shortage of general practitioners and more importantly of specialists in remote areas, the obsolescence of hospital equipment, the renewal or purchase of which is increasingly left to volunteer organizations; reduced numbers of orderlies and nurses on the labour market; beds shut down during summer and winter holidays, etc.

Could Senator Argue tell us whether all the problems relating to health care will be studied by the committee or whether the review of the current system will be limited to specific aspects? Further to that question, could he give us an idea of the size of the funding that will be requested and made available to the committee?

The second purpose of the motion is to study the role of preventive medicine and other measures.

This analysis, I gather, covers two aspects—first, conventional preventive medicine, and second parallel medicine which, according to the mover of the motion, would have preventive effects. Does my interpretation agree with that of Senator Argue?

Conventional medicine always has been and still is playing today, honourable senators, an essential role in prevention. Although it accounts for a mere 2 per cent of the health funding, a figure that was quoted by Senator Argue and which officially seems accurate to me, we should not underestimate the significant contribution made by the 44,000 physicians who individually counsel their patients. The costs of that preventive medicine are not quantified. It is nonetheless part of the medical fees paid by the governments. Whenever a physician counsels his patient not to smoke, to cut down on fat, or salt, or sugar, or calories, as is the case, or to exercise, to change one's lifestyles, etc. he is practising preventive medicine. That kind of medicine is a significant factor in health maintenance.

As factors of risk, Senator Argue insisted upon stress as the most costly of all, and I quote:

The No. 1 cost resulted from stress. Those people who suffer stress cost more money than people treated for other ailments or afflictions.

And as examples of stress:

... facing unemployment or the current agricultural crisis as we do, facing technological change and the unemployment resulting from that ...

That is something that should also, according to him:

... be examined and it needs to be considered in any study of Canada's health costs and needs.

It must be pointed out that stress, in itself, is not an illness that can be measured. It is part of our daily life and every individual reacts and adjusts differently to any kind of situation. Hans Selye, whose life has been dedicated to the study of stress as it affects human health, made a remarkable synthesis of his observations in his book entitled Stress sans détresse, which I highly recommend to you, honourable senators. Is it conceivable to live in a society free from stress? Would any consideration of causes which might create, maintain or intensify stress not extend considerably the mandate of that committee, so that it would have to review countless psychological, physical, economical and political factors which affect us as individuals and as a society?

The third objective of this motion would provide for the consideration of a wide range of services so as to make the health care system more effective, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians.

Among that range of services and preventive measures, Senator Argue mentioned "homeopathy, osteopathy, reflexology, holistic medicine, acupuncture, allergy treatments, naturopathy, chiropractic, meditation, herbs, massage, psychic therapy, health foods, counselling and self-therapy".

In my opinion, most of these techniques should not be considered as preventive measures since they are used to alleviate the patients' symptoms.

If such is the case, the study proposed to the committee will deal more with the merits of these parallel medicines and the benefits of integrating them into the present health care system. To demonstrate that these services would contribute to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians is a utopian exercise, considering the subjectivity of the definitions of such terms as health, not to mention happiness. As to longevity, it is the result of a great many factors whose individual influence would be extremely difficult to determine.

For instance, we are all aware of the aging of our population. Statistics seem to be clear and to be a source of real concern, because they indicate that in 1985, the ratio of people 65 years and over was 10 per cent, while in year 2031, it will reach 20 per cent. We should not overlook, however, that this percentage is figured out in terms of overall population and that it increases faster as the number of young people decreases. In other words, the current birth rate of 1.7 per cent in Canada explains significantly the rapid climb in the ratio of senior citizens.

Senator Argue will certainly be able to shed more light on the goals of this part of his motion which, in itself, might deserve a special and particularly complex review.

The last objective of the motion is to examine how such an improved health care system could stop or slow down the increase in health care costs.

The health care system, as it exists now, is universal, available, and free of charge. First of all, I should like to know whether Senator Argue's motion challenges the three principles underlying the current legislation. If the answer is no, if this is not part of the committee's mandate, the integration of the various parallel medicines mentioned in his speech into the present health care system would mean added services. I would be quite surprised if added services were a factor in stopping or reducing increases in health care costs.

The introduction of new technologies to treat people more efficiently is, in my view, the major factor of cost increases that have taken place in the last thirty years or so. Senator Argue emphasized in his remarks the increase in days of hospitalization for older people. Our ability to offer palliative or curative treatments to people getting increasingly older confirms that fact. One example is the by-pass involving the use of the artificial heart-lung which is common practice these days with senior people.

I doubt that the addition of parallel medicines to the practices of traditional medicine can change significantly the unavoidable degradation of health with age. Prevention is limited by our knowledge and it regularly improves as medical research progresses. It would still be sheer utopia to think that some day, hundred-year old Canadians will die in "good health"!

To conclude, I will say that Senator Argue's motion has brought to our attention the very real need, and I insist on that, the very real need to assess health programs and costs since a universal and no-charge plan was introduced. Such an assessment would require, I think, a large qualified and full-time staff. Does the Senate have the huge budget required, I suggest, to achieve the many objectives of that motion? Can one really carry out such a mission within the proposed deadline of 12 months?

I wish that Senator Argue would eventually answer my questions and comments before the whole Senate reaches a decision. Thank you, honourable senators.

[Senator David.]

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—
CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have a Senate order that we proceed with the hearings of the Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord at 3 o'clock every Wednesday afternoon, unless otherwise ordered.

Since we have now come to this item on the order paper, and since this is our first experience with television media access, I wonder if we could bring this order forward by 25 minutes. I realize that the Senate will adjourn during pleasure while the Senate is put into a Committee of the Whole and await the arrival of the witnesses and the setting up of the cameras, all of which will, as indicated earlier, take approximately three or four minutes. I would suggest that we do not actually leave the chamber but proceed to Committee of the Whole in the normal way and await the arrival of the witnesses.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Did you say "witness" or "witnesses"?

Senator Frith: My understanding is that there is only one witness.

Senator Doody: I may have misheard, but I thought Senator Frith said "witnesses."

Senator Frith: I'm sorry. As far as I know, it is one witness.

Senator Doody: My impression was that the television people were to be available from 3:00 to 4:30 o'clock. Are they at the starting gate? Millions of excited Canadians are awaiting the results. I certainly will not stand in the way if the Senate wishes to proceed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, since we are 25 minutes ahead of schedule, is it your pleasure to continue with the Orders of the Day and Inquiries and Motions, and then revert to this item?

Senator Frith: I think that is a good idea, because the Persons Award ceremony is scheduled for this afternoon and we have been asked to try to adjourn no later than 4:30 o'clock in order to make the necessary preparations.

I did hear someone suggest that we revert to Question Period, and if leave is granted to do that, we should do so. However, I ask that we continue with the Orders of the Day before we ask for a reversion.

Senator Doody: I am advised that the television technicians are not yet available but that they will arrive in 10 or 15 minutes. In any event, my cynicism was indeed well founded—they are not restlessly waiting at the door for this television phenomenon.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, am I correct in my understanding that, with leave, any honourable senator can sit wherever he or she may wish to sit this afternoon and ask questions from wherever that may be?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps the Speaker can tell us about that.

Senator Doody: This is not the Roman Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: I have heard conflicting opinions on this matter between the Clerk and the Clerk Assistant.

Senator Doody: Come down clearly in the middle!

The Hon. the Speaker: The rules of the Senate are being perused.

Senator Doody: By that time the technicians will have arrived.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, rule 64 states:

When the Senate is put into Committee of the Whole every senator shall sit in the place assigned to that senator. A senator who desires to speak shall rise and address the Chair.

Senator Frith: I thought Senator MacDonald was asking about the Persons Award.

Senator MacDonald: I was wondering if senators could sit in any place they wish. As I understand it, some senators are going to be discombobulated.

Senator Frith: I still feel combobulated. I have not been discombobulated yet.

The Hon. the Speaker: We will continue with Orders of the Day.

---

All further items of business on the order paper having been called and stood:

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to, the Honourable Senator Gildas L. Molgat in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the business before us today is the continuation of the presentation by the Honourable Eugene Forsey. I presume that he will be down shortly; he was expected here at 3 o'clock.

As was agreed to by the Senate, television cameras will be allowed in the chamber for this meeting of the Committee of the Whole. There will be a slight delay until such time as they are in position. Is that agreeable?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Pursuant to Order adopted on June 18, 1987, the Honourable Eugene Forsey was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators will recall that at a previous meeting we discussed the matter of where the witnesses should be seated. Various points of view were put forward on whether they should be seated at the front or the back of the chamber, where the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod normally sits. It was decided that the best position would indeed be at the back of the chamber so that the witness could face all honourable senators, and it would be easier from the point of view of questioning. Therefore, the witnesses will be seated, as is Senator Forsey at the moment, just in front of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

A few questioners were left over from our last meeting. I shall take the names of senators who wish to ask questions as they raise their hands. From my list I have Senator Le Moynes, and Senator Turner has indicated to me his wish to question, as has Senator Olson. I will take names as they come. I believe that Dr. Forsey has some opening comments to make. Is that right, Dr. Forsey?

● (1430)

Hon. Eugene Forsey: Well, very brief ones.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Thus, Senator Forsey, I welcome you and I invite you to take the floor.

[English]

Dr. Forsey: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I have only a brief introductory statement. It is simply this, that I have already had sent to all honourable senators copies of two documents which I have produced recently, one being a submission that I made to the public hearings held by the New Democratic Party in Alberta on this subject, in which I added certain things to what I had said to this committee before; and then, more recently, an analysis of the report of the joint committee of the two houses on the Constitutional accord. I do not know whether those have reached all members of the Senate. I am quite sure that you have not had time to read them, but you may have had time to glance at them. If so, you may want to ask questions arising out of them.

[Translation]

Unfortunately, I have no French version of my text, as I did not have much time and have no secretary at my disposal. I mistrust my capacity to write a French text or translation that would be worthy of your consideration.

However, if you want to question me in French, I shall do my best to answer in spite of my insufficient knowledge of the French language.

[English]

I think that's about all I wish to say now, although some of the questions that you may see fit to ask of me I may find I have answered in one of these documents—they run, I am sorry to say, about 50 pages of typescript—and I may simply lift something from those to answer some question that is asked.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Thank you, Dr. Forsey. I have presently on my list the names of Senator Le Moyne, Senator Turner, Senator Olson, Senator Frith and Senator Robichaud.

I will take names as they come. Thus, I add the names of Senator Hays, Senator Denis and Senator Molson.

[English]

In view of the fact that many senators have indicated that they wish to ask questions, I ask honourable senators to try to keep their questions reasonably brief. Our limits this afternoon are that we must rise by 4.15 p.m. because, as honourable senators know, there will be the Persons Award ceremony here later this afternoon and the chamber must be prepared for that. I presume, however, that if we do not conclude with Dr. Forsey today, he would be prepared to come again if need be. Is that correct, Dr. Forsey?

[Translation]

Dr. Forsey: I am always at your service, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The first name on my list is Senator Le Moyne.

Senator Le Moyne: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Forsey, my question is general in nature and will probably not surprise you.

I would like to know in what way the Constitutional Accord could contribute to what we frequently call balkanization of the country?

Dr. Forsey: I think that it is probably the clause on immigration which could lead to it, but also, in my opinion, the clause concerning the spending power of the federal government. I believe these two clauses might lead to that.

Senator Le Moyne: Do you see in these provisions the makings of a development potentially detrimental to this country and its unity as we see it now?

Dr. Forsey: I think that the provisions on immigration could lead to a fragmentation of the federal jurisdiction on immigration.

As to the spending power, we could rely on the very forceful, detailed and knowledgeable testimony of Professor Johnson, a former deputy minister first in Saskatchewan and then in Ottawa. He asked questions and levelled very precise criticisms based on his outstanding experience. In my opinion, the Joint Committee did not give a very convincing answer to his questions and comments.

Senator Le Moyne: So you think that there is a very real danger there. This is not just a matter of feeling or idealism about Canada.

Dr. Forsey: Well, I think that his criticisms are very detailed and are based on the profound experience of a very learned man.

It is often said that this is an interpretation principle which is not very important. Interpretation principles are said to carry little weight. I could give a very detailed answer as to the importance of the interpretation principle but I do not think that the answer given is very well justified.

Senator Le Moyne: Thank you, senator. I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Le Moyne.

[English]

Senator Turner: Dr. Forsey, I believe that you were a former Director of the CLC. As you know, Canada passed the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Under "Fundamental Freedom" there is:

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

What does that section mean under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Dr. Forsey: Well, senator, you had a judicial interpretation of part of what it means—an interpretation which I think surprised many people in the labour movement. It didn't particularly surprise me, because I thought that the section in the Charter was so broad that it was certainly open to the interpretation which the Supreme Court placed upon it, a narrower interpretation than many people in the labour movement had expected. But I thought they had expected rather too much of the Charter, and it increased my feeling that possibly the Charter's drafting left something to be desired.

I don't know whether I quite caught the full bearing of your question, senator.

Senator Turner: What do those two sections mean, in your personal opinion?

Dr. Forsey: Well, I think they ought to mean that freedom of association, as most people understand it, is unlimited—save by the provisions of section 1 of the Charter, of course—where you can show the limits to have been reasonably justified in a free and democratic society.

I don't think I can say anything more than that. I think it is possible under section 16 of the accord that these as well as other features of the Charter might in the province of Quebec be placed in jeopardy.

Senator Turner: In your opinion, under the terms of the suggested Meech Lake Accord, will the meaning of those sections be changed in any way?

Dr. Forsey: Yes, it could be, I think, because in the province of Quebec—I don't think outside—it is conceivable that you might find the government of the province saying that they are empowered to promote the distinct society of Quebec: "The distinct identity of Quebec enables us to pass this particular piece of legislation." It would go to the courts, and the courts might say, "Yes, that's quite true." But on the other hand, they might say, "No, it isn't true." We don't know. Nobody can prophesy what the Supreme Court of Canada will say on the matter. But I think there is a possibility there that there might be limitations attempted by the government and the legislature of the province of Quebec which might or might not stand up in court.

Senator Olson: Dr. Forsey, there are a number of areas in the Meech Lake Accord about which I am very concerned. They have to do with the transfer of a certain amount of control over the federal spending power to the provinces; there is the matter of provincial control over certain federal institutions, such as the new method of appointing senators and the matter of Supreme Court nominations; there is also the new, or what I understand to be the new, amending formula.

It seems to me that we are going back into the straitjacket of the requirement for unanimity before any further changes can be made to the Canadian Constitution; and there are some important matters such as the redistribution of powers which was to be another phase of constitutional reform in Canada, and so on. I wonder if you can help me to understand what is in the accord now with regard to the veto that the provinces will have. Will that veto apply only during negotiations, or will there, in fact, be a reference to provincial legislatures after the First Ministers have reached agreement, at which stage the veto can be applied? It seems to me that a lot of other factors come into play here. One, of course, is the Supreme Court ruling of a few years ago with respect to changing some federal institutions, some kind of assertion that provincial agreement was necessary. However, the ruling did not say at what level agreement was necessary to make changes. I wonder if you can help me and give me your understanding of what unanimity means in the context of what we know now about the so-called Meech Lake Accord.

Dr. Forsey: As to your last point about what I fancy is the Senate reference case in connection with Bill C-60 of 1978, I think that is vieux jeu. I think it is now out of the way, because it arose under the old section 91, head 1, which has now been superseded by the Constitution Act, 1982. So I do not think that that question will arise.

The case of where the veto of a single province might apply before it ever got to the stage contemplated in the act of the 1982 formal amendment arises in connection with the inclusion in the accord of the provision for annual First Ministers' conferences, at which Senate reform and fisheries will be on the agenda. Other things can only be put on the agenda by general consent. This means, as Chief Georges Erasmus pointed out in a brilliant piece of evidence to the joint committee, that the question of the rights of aboriginal peoples cannot be brought up at any future First Ministers' conference except with unanimous consent of the premiers. One province can say no, and it is wiped out. This is a very important point which has been largely overlooked.

As to the power of a single province to veto, it does not arise in connection with all amendments. The general formula, the seven-province formula, applies to amendments which are not specified, but what has happened is that a whole series of things that formerly came under section 42 of the 1982 act and the seven-province formula are now transferred, en bloc, to section 41 and are made the subject of unanimous consent. For example, there is the admission of new provinces, and I believe, the extension of provinces into the territories, changes in the powers of the Senate, changes in the number of senators from any province, and the method of selection of senators. Formerly these matters could be changed by the seven-province formula. Under the Meech Lake Accord it can no longer be done in that way, and any one province can say no. That kills the thing as dead as mutton. That is why I have said that Premier Getty has been sold a pup on the subject of Senate reform, because any one province can simply say, "We are not interested in Triple E. We won't consider it. We won't consider anything. We are perfectly happy with the transitional Senate where we, the premiers of the provinces, decide who will go to the Senate. We see nothing that can possibly touch that for perfection. This is superb. This is magnificent. We are the wisest people in the country, and the power is vested in us. Why should we want to hand it over to anybody else?" There are other points on this issue, but those are the ones that occur to me at the moment.

Senator Olson: So it is not only a matter of whether such subjects may or may not be negotiated, but if one province objects, the item will not even make the agenda for discussion.

Dr. Forsey: Except for Senate reform and fisheries, nothing can be put on the agenda without general agreement. On many things it may be very difficult to get general agreement, and on some it might be very hard, indeed, to get general agreement. I cannot prophesy.

Senator Olson: My last question is with regard to section 92 being superseded by what has happened since.

Dr. Forsey: It is section 91, head 1, to which I referred.

Senator Olson: But the distribution of powers between the two levels of government has not been changed.

Dr. Forsey: No, it has not been changed. The powers of the provinces and of the Parliament of Canada in the Constitution are not changed except in regard, of course, to the amending formula; especially as there is a non-derogation clause in the proposed section 2 where you have duality and distinct society. They are not changed except that, in sharp contradistinction to what you get in the equalization section of the 1982 act, the exercise of the authority of Parliament and the legislatures is not safeguarded. Therefore, you have, it seems to me, a possibility that minorities could go to the courts and say, "Look, the legislatures and the Parliament of Canada have committed themselves to the principle of linguistic duality. They are not living up to that principle, and they ought to live up to it. While we cannot expect you, the court, to take away any power they have or to give them any new power, we can expect you to say to them, "You have the power to do such and such more for the minorities in order to preserve the principle of linguistic duality. We want you to exercise it.'" The courts might conceivably be in a position to say to Parliament, "You are not doing enough for the minorities. Get busy and do something more." They might be in a position to say to the Legislature of Quebec or to the Legislature of Ontario, "You are not doing enough." For example, they could say to the Government of Ontario, "What the French-speaking minority in Ontario has by statute is not enough. You must do more. You must add further rights." So the courts may not be able to touch the authority, but they can tell Parliament and the legislatures how to exercise it.

On the other hand, of course, the principle of duality may mean absolutely nothing. It may mean simply the preservation of the status quo ante. So, if the minorities try to do something under this provision, they may be faced with the reply, "All that is guaranteed is your preservation, what you have now. Nothing more." This is one of the great questions. This is one of the cornucopia of ambiguities you find in this accord.

Senator Frith: Dr. Forsey, since you last appeared before this committee we have had the benefit of the report of the joint committee. There are two aspects of that report I ask you to comment upon. The first one deals with the question of whether or not this accord is a decentralizing step in Canada's constitutional history. Essentially, as a federation, Canada has been considered to be more decentralized than many other federations. I get the impression from reading the report that the committee is of the view that the Meech Lake Accord does not really change anything and does not have a decentralizing effect.

● (1450)

On page 14 the committee put to itself this question:

Is the 1987 Constitutional Accord consistent with the basic structure and values of the Canadian Constitution or it is a package of provincially oriented amendments that will stand the constitution on its head?

They then cite a former Liberal cabinet minister, Eric Kierans, who said:

Meech Lake is not new. It is simply the closest that we have come to following the original intent and meaning of the British North America Act since Confederation itself. It reflects more accurately the view of what the original Fathers of Confederation thought that they were agreeing to at Confederation. They lived with each other, quarrelled and wrangled in debates, assemblies and conferences for years. They knew what was possible and what the different colonies could accept. They never intended that the provinces should be as dependent as they, in fact became. Above all else, they knew that a centralized Canada would not work.

Then there is a quotation from another witness, Mr. Gordon Robertson:

Another question is whether the argument weakens the federal government in any significant and important way.

My parenthetical comment to that is that this has become a very important political question.

I continue:

Here one has to note that the accord does not change the distribution of powers in any way; nothing is changed in sections 91, 92 and 93.

During the constitutional negotiations in 1968 to 1971 and later up to 1979, it was fully expected that there would be changes in the distribution of powers. Quebec sought a number of changes in the distribution of powers.

This accord does not change that distribution in any way.

That seems to lead to the conclusion that, in fact, the concern about the accord having a decentralizing effect is over-stated. What is your view?

Dr. Forsey: Senator, I cannot for the moment locate the page from which you read, but the committee itself admitted explicitly, in so many words, that this accord was more decentralizing than the Constitution Act of 1982. It could scarcely fail to do otherwise. It then quoted, with approval, what you, sir, have quoted of what Mr. Kierans said, and I think it might be worthwhile for me to read my comments on Mr. Kierans' remarks. I described his statements as sheer rubbish, which I think they are. I think they are demonstrable rubbish, and here is why:

Mr. Kierans, plainly, has never read, or has completely forgotten, the British North America Act. He has never read, or has completely forgotten, the Confederation Debates. And the Committee, apparently, is in the same state of ignorance, blissful or invincible. Look at the Act of 1867: section 24 (appointment of Senators); section 58 (appointment of Lieutenant-Governors); section 59 (dismissal of Lieutenant-Governors); . . .

And I remind you that three have been dismissed.

. . . section 91 (the residual power of 'peace, order and good government'), and heads 2 (trade and commerce), 12 (seacoast and inland fisheries), 22 (patents), 23 (copyrights), 25 (naturalization and aliens), 26 (marriage and divorce), 27 (criminal law); section 92, head 10(c) (works for the general advantage of Canada). Look at the provisions for reservation of provincial bills and disallowance of provincial Acts (sections 55, 56, 57 and 90). Look at section 93, paragraphs 3 and 4 (power of the Dominion Government to pass Remedial Orders, and of Parliament to pass Remedial Acts, to protect the educational rights of the Protestant and Roman Catholic minorities). Look at section 94 (power of Parliament to make uniform the law of property and civil rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick). Look at section 95 (Parliament's paramount power over immigration and agriculture). Look at section 96 (power to appoint the judges from County Courts up); . . .

Except for the judges of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

. . . section 101 (Parliament's power to establish the Supreme Court of Canada); section 132 (Parliament's power to implement treaties). Look at what Macdonald said in the Confederation Debates (and he was not expressing an individual opinion; he was speaking for the Government): 'We have given the General Legislature all the great subjects of legislation. We have conferred on them, not only specifically and in detail, all the powers which are incident to sovereignty, but we have expressly declared that all subjects of general interest not distinctly and exclusively conferred upon the local governments and local legislatures, shall be conferred upon the General Government and Legislature . . . We make the Confederation one government and one people, instead of five governments and five peoples, . . . one united province, with the local governments and legislatures subordinate to the General Government and Legislature'.

I do not know how on earth anyone who has ever read any of those documents that I have mentioned—and there are others—could make the statement that Mr. Kierans did that the Meech Lake Accord “is simply the closest that we have come to following the original intent and meaning of the British North America Act since Confederation itself.” That is something that is beyond my understanding and requires a very superior intellect to mine to be able to describe in any other terms than I did, as sheer rubbish. It is demonstrable rubbish; it is nonsense, and “non-sense” in the literal meaning of the word. It makes no sense. Therefore, I think that that particular statement of Mr. Kierans, which is quoted with approval by the committee, is not worth considering at all.

You then get this business that there has been no change in sections 91 or 92. However, there you are up against the fact that you have two new principles of interpretation which apply to everything in the Constitution and in the Charter except multiculturalism and the aboriginals. Exactly what that would do to the various sections of the Constitution or of the Charter is, of course, a matter of opinion, and we shall not know the answer until we get a decision from the Supreme Court of Canada.

The idea exists that principles of interpretation hardly matter; that, after all, they might touch a few grey areas; that they might touch the interpretation of section 1 of the Charter, but, really, you do not need to worry about them at all, because they are only principles of interpretation.

But I say to you: Look at history; look at the history of the United States. They started out very deliberately with a highly-decentralized federation, and the Supreme Court of the United States excogitated from its own inner consciousness a series of principles of interpretation which have turned a great deal of the United States Constitution upside down, so that the United States is now a highly-centralized federation.

Look at what the great Chief Justice John Marshall did with banking. There is not a syllable in the written Constitution of the United States about banking as a power of Congress; not one word. A case concerning a United States bank came before the Supreme Court of the United States, and Chief Justice John Marshall, in effect, said this: “While it is true that there is nothing about banking, there is the power to collect taxes.” Yes. “If you are going to collect taxes, that is not going to be much use unless you have a safe place to put them. You cannot expect Congress to put all of the revenue of the United States in an old sock, or up the chimney, or under the pillow. The only place you can be sure of having your revenues safe is in a bank.” Yes, again. “But the bank will not be safe unless you have the power to say what the bank shall do and what it shall not do.” Yes, again, and from that sprouted the whole idea of the jurisdiction of the United States Congress to establish a United States bank.

You have the same kind of development with the Interstate Commerce Power, which has now become far more than it is reasonable to suppose the Fathers of the American Constitution intended. In any event, that part of the Constitution of the United States has been turned upside down and inside out by a principle of interpretation.

Then you look at our own Constitution, and it seems perfectly clear that the Fathers of Confederation had a very strong belief in highly-centralized federations. Sir John A. Macdonald looked at the American Constitution and said: “They commenced at the wrong end. Here we will adopt a different system.” Those are his exact words, and he then went on to make some of the statements I quoted a few moments ago.

● (1500)

The Judicial Committee of the British Privy Council then took a look at our Constitution again, and by a principle of interpretation, excogitated out of its own inner consciousness, it turned the thing very nearly upside down. The general power of “peace, order and good government” has now been whittled down to very narrow proportions, as we all know. Moreover, they did that in the teeth of a statutory statement. In section 91 of the act the examples that were given of the exclusive powers of the Parliament of Canada were not to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms of the section. They excogitated a principle which was directly contrary to the express words of the act. They did what the act forbade them to do. However, they did all that by a principle of interpretation. If someone says to me, “It is just a principle of interpretation, don’t worry about it. It won’t really change anything,” my answer is, “Tell it to the marines!”

Senator Frith: Your conclusion is that the interpretative rule that is contained in the first part of the Meech Lake Accord potentially has an effect on these other aspects of the present Constitution that you have just referred to.

Dr. Forsey: Yes. Of course, it notably has an effect on Quebec. You cannot positively say that, because some people have said—some of my critics have said—that I have raised questions; I have not given answers.

You cannot give answers to many of these questions until the Supreme Court gives an answer, and then the answer is given for you. The Supreme Court says, “this does mean” or “this doesn’t mean.” The Supreme Court may say, “The distinct society does not enable the Legislature of Quebec to wipe out the Protestant school system in Quebec and with it, of course, the Roman Catholic school system,” or the Supreme Court may say, “Section 93 still holds,” or the Supreme Court may say, “The distinct society is something new. Here is a new principle of interpretation.” “Bang” goes the whole educational system in the province of Quebec!

There may be linguistic schools, for example, with no kind of guarantee for educational rights of linguistic minorities except what is in the Charter, which is not as government-proof or legislature-proof as it might appear to be.

I am prepared to elaborate on that, if necessary.

Senator Frith: Dr. Forsey, the other aspect of the report of the joint committee I would like you to comment on is what I read as the burden of chapter 5 dealing with Canada's linguistic duality and Quebec's distinct society. I have the impression that the committee seemed to feel that the Meech Lake Accord in that chapter asserts the obvious and consecrates the obvious, namely, that linguistic duality is a fundamental characteristic of Canada and that Quebec is sociologically a distinct society. Is that a fair summary of what the accord does?

Dr. Forsey: If that is all it means, then, as Mr. Trudeau said, when a decision of the Supreme Court on these matters comes down, there will be a good many people in Quebec who will find vilaines surprises—nasty surprises, ugly surprises.

Monsieur Rémillard and Monsieur Bourrassa have been vociferously trumpeting forth that this gives all sorts of wonderful new powers. If it turns out that the Supreme Court says that they will not get any real new powers, they are going to be madder than a collection of wet hens. They are going to say, "The damn English have swindled us again. They're too clever for us. They've led us down the garden path." I cannot give you any idiomatic French translations for those expressions, but I think you can see what I mean. However, I do not think they would lose any force if the correct French expressions were used. If, on the other hand, it turns out that the linguistic duality and the distinct society clause, as the committee calls it, really does a great deal, then a lot of people are going to be very much annoyed.

Senator Frith: Having been told that it has no effect?

Dr. Forsey: The idea that this will mean there will be a delightful harmony and all our troubles will be over is, I think, overdone. It has been suggested that this would cure the Canadian disease and everybody would be happy. However, it may turn out to be a narcotic, not a cure.

When Quebec comes out from under the influence and when the rest of the country comes out from under the influence, because the Supreme Court has withdrawn the drug one way or the other, Quebec may say, "This is appalling. We're going back to ask for something in unambiguous terms which not even the slick, clever, diabolically ingenious English can winkle away from us." Other people may say, "We're going to go back and ask for something unambiguous," and it will mean that we'll find the English-speaking minority in Quebec has lost everything but its shirt and socks.

You may find that it leads not to a beautiful harmony but, in due course, after the answers have been given by the Supreme Court of Canada one way or the other, to fratricidal bickering and perhaps worse.

● (1510)

The Chairman: The next person on my list is Senator Robichaud. He was to be followed by Senator Hays. However, in the interest of balance, I wonder if I might put Senator Tremblay on my list after Senator Robichaud.

[Dr. Forsey.]

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting there has been no balance up to now?

The Chairman: Senator Flynn, I would say that I find the balance very good.

Senator Flynn: I know on which side you are leaning.

The Chairman: For your information, I have the following senators on my list: Senators Robichaud, Hays, Denis, Molson, Steuart, Neiman, Buckwold, Tremblay, Stewart and Marsden.

In view of the fact that most of the questions have come from the Liberal side, I thought it would be fair to give Senator Tremblay an opportunity to ask questions after Senator Robichaud.

[Translation]

Honourable Senator Robichaud, please.

Senator Robichaud: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. After all these discussions, I am quite happy to direct a rather trite, yet basic question to our friend Senator Forsey.

I am always quite impressed by his performance whenever he speaks in the Senate, using sometimes French and sometimes English, and handling both official languages with perfect ease. For a Newfoundlander, it is quite remarkable. All his fellow Newfoundlanders do not enjoy such a perfect command of both languages!

As I was listening to him, I was wondering whether he felt nostalgic about his years in the Senate. He could express himself at the time with the same extraordinary ease that he still demonstrates today.

I have discussed with him a number of points relating to the Meech Lake Accord. He touched on this subject this afternoon, but I should like to know his views concerning the proposed amendment concerning the appointment of senators.

I am well aware of the process by which he and I, and all other senators, came to sit here. As a senator and former premier of my province, I should like him to tell us what he thinks of the proposed amendment which reads:

25. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

In short, this means that the premiers may—they are under no obligation to do so—submit to the federal government a list of nominees. The federal government may be agreeable or not. It can do what it wants and appoint one or two persons from that list.

It seems to me that system is far from being perfect, even though the present one is also far from it. No system, no legislation is perfect.

I am asking for Senator Forsey's opinion, and I call him "Senator" because I believe he should remain a senator for life. Would that new process not be more imperfect than the current one?

Senator Guay: Alberta's Premier Getty wants elected Senators.

Dr. Forsey: First, this is a "transitional" system. In my view, it probably will be permanent. No premier with the power to appoint senators will ever relinquish that power to anyone. One premier saying no is enough to put an end to the process definitely.

However, is it a better system than the current one? Now, if we want a Senate that is more representative of provincial governments or legislatures, very well. If we want that kind of Senate, with the Senate's present powers including absolute veto on any legislation, very well.

If we want a Canadian Parliament that is capable of achieving something important without the final obstacle of someone endowed with that power, then it is another matter. It must be emphasized that such a transitional Senate would have exactly the same powers as the present one. The present Senate can very seldom exercise its powers.

It is now close to half a century since the Senate last rejected a bill passed by the House of Commons. To use a term borrowed from English slang, the present Senate does not have much political clout. I do not know the French word for "clout", but—

Senator Robichaud: "Pouvoir".

Dr. Forsey: All the French-speaking senators are fluent enough in both languages to find the correct word to translate "clout". So, I was saying that presently the Senate does not have political clout.

A Senate appointed by the premiers would be entirely different. These new senators will not think in terms of the Prime Minister, the opposition leader, the third party or whoever in the other place. They will be indebted to the premiers. They will represent the provinces in a new way.

They will say: "We were appointed by the provinces; our duty is to protect the rights and powers of the provinces. Since they do not like this bill, we are rejecting it, and if the House of Commons is not happy about it, it is just too bad!"

Senator Robichaud: If I understand correctly, Dr. Forsey, you are saying that the suggested formula, which has yet to be implemented, would give rise to even more parochialism than the present system. Is that correct?

Dr. Forsey: It will take several years to produce that effect. Initially, only a few senators will be appointed by the provincial premiers. Senator so and so will die or reach retirement age or resign or whatever.

Gradually, under this formula, we would have a Senate consisting of a majority of people appointed by the provincial premiers. Granted, the federal government has the right to veto such appointments. It could say: That one is completely outdated; he is a good-for-nothing. Mrs. So-and-So is very nice and very charming, but she does not have much brains or common sense or whatever. That kind of power is entirely negative.

If a provincial premier insists that such and such a person should be appointed, this will probably, in the final instance, be an appointment that meets both the requirements of the provincial premier and those of the federal government.

Senator Robichaud: Do you think that practically speaking, the same candidate could be agreeable to both the provincial premier and the federal Prime Minister?

Dr. Forsey: Generally speaking, I would say yes.

Senator Robichaud: Whatever the political affiliations involved?

Dr. Forsey: Under this formula, if the federal government does not like the political views of a person nominated by the premier of a province, what can the federal government do? It can say: "No, that won't work. Would you please submit another name?"

Finally, there would be so much political pressure from the province that the federal government would probably say: "Well, this person does not hold to our political views, but he or she is highly intelligent and very sensible. This is someone who has served the public well in his or her province for a long time, so all right. This person is not the ideal candidate, because if we still had the same powers we had in the good old days, we would appoint someone else".

Senator Robichaud: Dr. Forsey, could you explain briefly what you mean by "transitional" when you say that this formula is merely a transitional one? What does that mean?

Dr. Forsey: It means that it would be valid until such time as the Prime Minister, the premiers and federal and provincial governments and legislators agree on a fundamental Senate reform. But to advise such a total and global reform formula for the Senate, you must obtain the unanimous consent of all provinces.

As I said earlier in English, how can you expect that a premier, given the power to appoint a senator, would be eager to give it away? In his view, this is the best system of all. It is a form of patronage which I called "fail-safe" because if Mrs. so-and-so asks for this appointment, the premier will tell her that her name will be submitted. He will agree to submit the name of Mrs., Miss or Mr. so-and-so to Ottawa. The federal government will finally decide to accept one name, rejecting all the others. But if the premier receives complaints from unsuccessful candidates, he will just have to say: "I did my best but those good-for-nothings in Ottawa, those "damn" federalists, those "damn" federal officials spoiled all my efforts. It is not my fault but that of Ottawa."

Senator Robichaud: Thank you, Dr. Forsey.

The Chairman: I thank you, Senator Robichaud. Senator Tremblay will now have the floor and he will be followed by Senator Hays.

[English]

Senator Tremblay: Senator Forsey, I should like to know if there is any section in the Constitution modification of 1987 with which you agree?

• (1520)

Dr. Forsey: Yes, and I thought I had said so when I appeared here before.

Senator Tremblay: Perhaps, for clarification, you could indicate the sections with which you agree so that we will know that what is left you do not agree with. I would then ask you to balance the matter yourself. With what do you agree?

Dr. Forsey: In the first place, I think the clarification of just how much of the Supreme Court of Canada's position is entrenched is an improvement.

Senator Tremblay: Could we go through the sections one by one? Do you have the text of the accord before you? I understand that you do not agree with section 1, which concerns duality and the distinct society.

Dr. Forsey: I am not talking about that.

Senator Tremblay: I would like you to point out which sections you agree with.

Dr. Forsey: That is what I am trying to do.

Senator Tremblay: Am I correct in that you do not agree with section 1?

Dr. Forsey: No, I do not agree with that. You want to go through it point by point. I thought, Senator Tremblay, you were going to make it fairly simple and say, "What do you agree with?" Then I could point out right away two things that I agree with.

Senator Tremblay: What are they?

Dr. Forsey: First of all, the provision which sets out exactly what about the Supreme Court of Canada is entrenched, subject to unanimous consent. That I think of as an improvement. I think the existing provision of section 42 is ambiguous, and I think this removes the ambiguity.

Curiously enough, the joint committee is not quite sure about that. It says that it is unclear and that under the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord it is not certain that Parliament would have the power to pass the present Bill C-53 and the present Bill C-225, and it raises other questions. It adds that the better view is that it would have the power, and I have said in my analysis that, in my very lay, illegal, legal opinion, the better view is correct. I think it does clear up the ambiguity, and I think this is an enormous improvement and I have said so publicly more than once.

The other thing that I think is an improvement is the provision for compensation for provinces which opt out of amendments, which would transfer power from the legislature of a province to the Parliament of Canada. That compensation now exists, as you all know, honourable senators, for amendments which deal with cultural educational matters. I cannot see why, if you are going to do that, you should not do it for any amendment which makes a transfer of power, because if a province gives up a power it gives up at the same time the necessity of expenditures for that power. If another province says, "No, we want to keep the power. That means we keep the expenditure. Those other people are getting out from under.

[Senator Tremblay.]

They do not have to tax for this, but we do. We want compensation." I think that if you are going to have compensation where there is opting out, you should have it for everything. You can question, of course, whether you want to have it at all, but that is another matter. We have it now for those particular types of amendment, and it seems to me only fair and equitable that it should apply to the others. If someone wants to say, "Throw out the existing provisions for opting out. Do not have any of it," that is another game altogether, and that I do not think we are called upon to discuss.

Those are the two things I do approve of. The rest I do not. I do not say absolutely that I think they are wrong, because in many instances they are so crammed with ambiguities, so loaded with ambiguities, so wrapped in ambiguities, that only when you have got a decision from the Supreme Court of Canada will you know what they really mean. I cannot prophesy what the Supreme Court decision will be.

Senator Tremblay: Having in mind the two sections with which you agree without qualification and those ambiguities, what would be your global recommendation: To accept or to reject the proposal?

Dr. Forsey: Unless there are a large number of very serious amendments, I would reject. I would not vote for it. If I were still in the Senate I would not vote for an unamended Meech Lake Constitutional Accord. I think there are just too many uncertainties, too many invitations to take a leap in the dark, too much transfer of power from Parliament to the court, too much transfer of power to the First Ministers' conferences, and too much transfer of power from Parliament to the legislatures.

Senator Tremblay: Some people, even some members of the committee, have said that they will propose amendments to make the accord better, but that if those amendments are defeated, in the end they will support the accord. Taking account of all the other aspects of the situation, am I correct that you would oppose it until the end? In the end you would still say no.

Dr. Forsey: Be specific. If the amendments which, apparently, the Liberal Party is proposing in the House of Commons, or has already proposed—I am not quite sure how many of them got on to the Order Paper—were carried, I would want to take another hard look and say, "Well, is this enough? Does this improve it enough that I would now be prepared to vote for it?" I think probably not, but I would not want to commit myself absolutely on that until I see the amendments, see what happens to them, and see what the reaction of the public is.

If I had been in Mr. Turner's position I would have followed the practice of Lord Asquith in 1910 in the United Kingdom when they asked him what he would do if such and such and such and such happened, and he said, "Wait and see." I would not commit myself beforehand to a certain course of action in circumstances which, by the time they arrived, might have changed my opinions for one reason or another.

There is, of course, also the possibility that by the time the vote is taken I might have been persuaded by the eloquence of you and your colleagues that I was all wrong, but at present my attitude is that it needs so many amendments, possibly more than the Liberal Party is proposing, that I would not be prepared to vote for it.

Senator Tremblay: I understand that despite the strong reservations you have you are still open to be convinced, am I correct?

Dr. Forsey: "Hoping to be convinced?" Well, I always hope that I may be shown to be wrong on something that I had read. I always hope that I shall follow the dictates of my reason, and I always hope that I shall listen to other arguments and that I shall be prepared to accept arguments which convince me. That is all the hope I can offer.

Senator Tremblay: Let us hope. Thank you very much, Senator Forsey.

The Chairman: The next questioner will be Senator Hays, followed by Senator Denis.

Senator Hays: My question touches on the same area as Senator Robichaud's question. That is, the Senate as it would be if the 1987 accord were passed. I would appreciate hearing your views on the comments that have been made in my province of Alberta about electing a Senate within the context of the accord as it is now.

My concerns are that we might have a different manner of determining who the senators from each province will be, even if they were all elected or appointed in some other way, perhaps, by the legislature. I should clarify that I realize that it will be a list only that is presented to the Prime Minister and the appointment will be made from that list. I do not know whether it will be necessary to have more than one name on the list. The question that arises in my mind is that we might have senators elected or appointed in a different way in each province with different terms of office and with different election expense provisions if they are elected. If they are going to be elected for the full term, that is a long time. Can you spend a lot trying to achieve that office? Would party affiliations be allowed? In other words, under a different system there would be a very different set of rules for each province. It strikes me that that may be challengeable as well. It may well be that the Supreme Court would say that senators must be appointed the same way from each province. In any event, I would appreciate your comments in this regard.

● (1530)

Dr. Forsey: If you are talking about a fundamental Senate reform, senator, then you get into a series of questions with which it would take some time to deal. I would like to concentrate for the moment on the possibility that under this transitional formula—which I think will turn out to be permanent, for the reasons I have stated—you might get one province passing legislation providing for the choice by the electors of the person or persons whose names would be submitted to the Government of Canada. I think that is possible and I think there is a good deal to be said for it. It would require a self-denying ordinance on the part of the provincial government, which might happen in Alberta, I do not know, and which might happen in some other provinces. In general, however, I do not think you will find provincial premiers too anxious to give up any power they have once laid their hands on. If they have the power under the section of the Meech Lake accord to say whom they are going to name for the Government of Canada to accept or reject, I strongly suspect they will want to hang on to it. I think that those provinces adopting a plan involving the election of their nominees would not be very numerous. Under this proposal you could have a variety; you might have six provinces electing the nominees and four not, or three provinces electing nominees and seven not, and so on. I do not know.

If there were a fundamental reform of the Senate in which a section were put into the Constitution stating that the Senate shall be chosen in such and such a way, I doubt very much whether such a section would provide that the senators from Prince Edward Island shall be chosen according to formula 1, the senators from New Brunswick according to formula 2, the senators from British Columbia according to formula 10, and so on. It is conceivable that the powers-that-be of one province might take the view that although they do not like a certain procedure for the whole lot, if they could just have it for themselves the rest could take their own way. Every province would then ask for what it wants individually, and we would have a wonderful chequer-board Senate. I do not think that is very likely; I am rather doubtful about whether such a chequer-board Senate would be very effective for any purpose whatsoever, but I confess the idea is new to me and I cannot say more about it for the moment.

Senator Hays: Do you think, Dr. Forsey, there is any likelihood that the Supreme Court, when asked to look at this, might take the view that there is only one way to appoint senators, that all we have to work with are the provincial lists of names directed to the Prime Minister, and that the provinces will not be allowed different means by which to come up with the list to present to the Government of Canada?

Dr. Forsey: I am not a lawyer, let alone a judge, let alone a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, so I cannot say positively. It seems to me, however, that the Supreme Court of Canada, faced with a short clause dealing with the appointment of senators, would take the view that what is required is that the province would submit a name or names and that the Government of Canada should say, "Yes" to one name, "No" to one name, or "Yes" to one name and "No" to the others. I think that is all the Supreme Court would consider. I do not see why it should import into this the idea that the government of a province must have an election to decide whom it is going to appoint. I cannot see why the Supreme Court would drag that into it. Again, however, I speak with what I hope is becoming diffidence, as I am not a lawyer and therefore am not really qualified to do more than speculate.

Senator Hays: Do you feel that way even if, for instance, one of the provisions of being on the list is the acceptance of the appointment for a ten-year term only?

Dr. Forsey: The Meech Lake accord does not say anything about terms, it just talks about appointments. Instead of the appointments being made as they are now by the Government of Canada, by instrument of advice to the Governor General from the Prime Minister, they would be made by the Government of Canada from names submitted by the provinces, and that is it as far as I can see.

Senator Hays: Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Hays.

[Translation]

Honourable Senator Denis, followed by Senator Molson.

Senator Denis: Dr. Forsey, I would like to take this opportunity to say that your name came up recently when I was being interviewed regarding the matter of the elective or appointed Senate. I would prefer a Senate appointed by Prime Ministers because when the Prime Minister, the State or society needs someone competent, someone who has made, and is still making, a contribution to the country, such a person can always be appointed. Often, this person could not get elected because he is disagreeable or unpopular. I mentioned your name, Dr. Forsey, as an example, in jest, of course.

Dr. Forsey: You are right, Senator Denis, I tried to get elected four times, unsuccessfully!

Senator Denis: I mentioned your name, in jest, as an example of someone who has made a contribution to society, but might have not been able to get elected for one reason or another.

I also want to apologize for another reason. I referred to you again when someone mentioned that with an appointed Senate, minorities and regions are better represented. To a question put to me concerning the representation of the various political parties, namely: Why don't you have any senator from the New Democratic Party? I answered: They did not want to be appointed, they have been offered a Senate seat and turned the offer down. But I added that some of our colleagues are Liberals who think like New Democrats. I even more foolishly mentioned your name. Therefore, I apologize and hope that you will not be offended.

As regards your comments, during your first appearance in the Senate, you said:

... some issues relating to the Meech Lake Accord. At times, you will think that I am perhaps a bit critical but on other occasions, you might be surprised by my favourable attitude.

Now, in your comments, you speak among other things about changes and omissions, you deal with the Supreme Court, you refer to the Senate and its establishment, and you also deal with native peoples' rights and so on. But obviously, during that conference, all issues could not be dealt with thoroughly. I read a statement made in 1986 by the Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney, who said in answer to a Member of Parliament, Mr. Axworthy:

... let me remind him that at the last Premiers' meeting in Edmonton last summer, which was chaired by [Senator Hays.]

Premier Getty, I believe it was agreed that the first round of constitutional discussions would exclusively focus, if I understood well, on the resolution to bring Quebec into the Constitution.

It is obvious that this was the major subject of discussion at the constitutional conference and that there will be other conferences where either the Senate or the Supreme Court will be discussed. But following what was said by the Prime Minister and what you said yourself in the somewhat unfavorable part of your comments, would it not be possible to make use of your comments at a future constitutional conference to discuss such corrections, omissions or amendments?

Dr. Forsey: The next constitutional conference will discuss the issue of Senate reform. However, the only thing that is certain is that the matter will be discussed, because without the unanimous consent of the premiers, nothing will happen.

Senator Denis: Would it not be possible to change the process at a future constitutional conference so that instead of requiring the agreement of ten provinces, we could require the approval, as in all other cases, of seven provinces having 50 per cent of the population? Could there not be a decision at a future constitutional conference to change the amendment procedure for Senate reform, which as you say, now requires the consent of all the provinces?

Dr. Forsey: To make special provisions for the Senate?

Senator Denis: To decide that, to proceed with Senate reform, instead of requiring the consent of ten provinces, we would need the consent of seven provinces with over half the population of Canada?

Dr. Forsey: The Senate cannot be touched without the unanimous consent of the provinces. Remember the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord, which give an absolute veto to the provinces.

Senator Denis: But all the premiers and all the provinces will take part in the next constitutional conference and there could be an amendment to this effect.

Dr. Forsey: There could be an amendment if there is unanimous consent.

Senator Denis: Exactly. Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Denis.

● (1540)

[English]

Senator Molson: I would like to revert, if I may, to a subject which Dr. Forsey dealt with to some extent. That is the question of linguistic minorities. Coming from the anglo group of Quebec, I am deeply concerned. I was also concerned in connection with the 1982 Constitution Act. I did not think that the Charter of Rights and the other accompanying actions taken at that time adequately protected the Anglophone minority in Quebec, as I believe in some cases the Franco-phone minority in other provinces has not been adequately protected. I also believe that our native population was left out entirely. However, I want to get back to the present.

I understand the difficulties that go with the definitions that are not clearly spelled out for us, and I am deeply concerned about the possibilities that may emerge for our English-speaking minority in the province of Quebec as a result of the definitions that are left hanging in the Meech Lake Accord.

You have said, Dr. Forsey, that so much depends on the Supreme Court. I believe we can all understand that. But do you feel, because of the way it is left at the moment, that if the accord passes it will, in fact, leave those minorities in a worse position? The minister responsible, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, has said that he felt that the Anglophones were going to be better off; but, personally, I fail to see that. I have very grave doubts.

I should like to point out something that does not seem to get mentioned very much. In recent years the province of Quebec has been very severely injured by what has happened since 1979. We lost something over 106,000 people who have gone—and I have to remind my friends from Toronto of this—to make Toronto one of the most prosperous cities in the world. It has been very largely our “boat people” who have left Quebec and gone to Toronto who have helped to achieve that.

The idea that that might recur if we are left in an uncertain state is very worrying to many of us in the province of Quebec, of either language.

I am wondering, Dr. Forsey, whether you believe anything can happen to improve the situation; whether you feel that we are in the same danger as we were in before we had Bill 101 and other problems? Have you any views wider than those that you have already expressed in answer to Senator Frith?

Dr. Forsey: Well, I share the views that you have just expressed, senator. I am an old Montrealer and an old member of the English-speaking minority in Quebec, with roots in Quebec reaching back well over a century, and I have exactly the same disquiet that you have over a number of these things.

I may have sounded somewhat less positive than you would expect, because I kept saying, “We can’t be absolutely certain because we don’t know what the Supreme Court will finally decide that the ‘distinct society’ provisions mean.” But let me deal with one particular thing with which I have some considerable acquaintance. I mentioned it a little while ago. I refer to the effect on the whole educational system in Quebec, which is a Protestant and a Catholic educational system. The Protestant system is guaranteed by section 93 of the act of 1867.

Well, for more than a dozen years a succession of Quebec governments, and a succession of bills and proposals, have been gunning, as you and I both know, for the Protestant schools. I have some first-hand detailed knowledge of this, and if anybody says, “Oh, this is just somebody from Ontario talking about something he doesn’t know anything about,” I venture to point out that on Bill 22 in 1974 I worked for seven solid days with the lawyers for the Protestant school commissions. They included the late Frank Scott and Jean Martineau, the then “bâtonnier” of the Quebec Bar. I drew up the petition for the disallowance of the act. I personally presented it in the Privy Council Office. I know something about what went on in connection with Bill 22.

I was repeatedly and deeply involved in connection with Bill 101, being consulted by the Protestant school commissions and various organizations representing the English-speaking Protestant community, writing articles, and making speeches in Quebec on the subject. I have a certificate of honorary membership in the Quebec Association of Protestant School Boards as a reward for my efforts.

Well now, so far all of the assaults on the Protestant school system have failed, because they have come smack up against section 93 of the Constitution Act of 1867, and the courts have stopped them cold. But the “distinct society” clause will give the provincial government a new weapon. It will be able to say—and I have not personally the smallest doubt that it will say—“Section 93 is now superseded. The abolition of Protestant schools is required, in our opinion, to preserve and promote our distinct society.”

Now, that weapon may break in their hands. The courts may say, “No. Section 93 still holds good.” But at the very least the Protestant school commissions may face a series of costly and long drawn-out court cases, and years of uncertainty, during which the government may very well act in many respects as if it had already won the case—and the government indeed might win the case, and that might be the end of the Protestant school system.

Incidentally, that will be the end of the Roman Catholic school system too, because as long as they cannot touch the Protestant school system they daren’t touch the Catholic school system. If they could get rid of the Protestant school system, they could get rid of the Catholic school system, and the Catholic commissions are very well aware of this and have been associating themselves with the Protestants in their efforts to preserve the existing system.

Of course, some people say, “Aren’t denominational schools completely out of date? Why shouldn’t you have just a single public school system divided on linguistic lines?” Well, that’s not the point. The point is that the Protestant system until now has been protected by constitutional guarantees, and this has, incidentally, protected the Roman Catholic schools as well.

But the answer to that might be, “Wouldn’t linguistic schools be protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which guarantees the educational rights of the English-speaking minority?” Well, not altogether. For one thing, it remains to be seen how far the Charter would protect the right of the minority to control English-language schools. They are guaranteed educational facilities provided out of public funds, but not necessarily control of those facilities.

For another, section 23(1)(a) of the Charter comes into effect in Quebec under section 59 of the Constitution Act of 1982 only when the government or the legislative assembly of Quebec formally accepts it, which neither has shown any signs of doing; and, for a third, under section 16 of the accord the “distinct society” clause applies to the whole of the Charter except the provisions on multiculturalism and the aborigines, and the courts might therefore hold that it overrides section 23 of the Charter.

Now, whether I think that is likely or unlikely is, for these purposes, neither here nor there. There is a danger. These are questions which, to say the least, in my judgment, need to be cleared up. They involve a very large number of people who, contrary to a widespread impression outside Quebec, are by no means all rolling in money and therefore well able to protect themselves by private schools. That is a specific answer to your question. There are all sorts of other things. You may easily find that if the Supreme Court of Canada—and I think I said this the last time I appeared here—says that unilingual signs are unconstitutional or contrary to the Charter, it is possible—and I think Monsieur Rémillard has suggested that this would happen—that the legislature would come back and say, “Ah, yes, but that decision was delivered before the Meech Lake Accord. Now we have the distinct society clause. The distinct society clause overrides that provision.” Piff! Bang! go the unilingual signs. So I am not confident that the rights of the English-speaking minority, even where they have been upheld by the courts under the existing Constitution, would necessarily be perfectly safe under the Meech Lake Accord if it is adopted. Does that answer your question?

• (1550)

Senator Molson: I think it does. However, in reality it will depend on the definitions that ultimately emerge, which may take a very long time.

Dr. Forsey: And which may, both from your point of view and mine, turn out to be all wrong.

Senator Molson: Right or wrong, in the meantime we have this condition of uncertainty in Quebec which we lived through for some years and which is highly undesirable from the point of view of any citizen of any race, language or creed.

Dr. Forsey: And extremely expensive.

Senator Guay: And minorities elsewhere.

Senator Molson: And elsewhere.

The Chairman: Before Senator Macquarrie speaks, I remind honourable senators that we have agreed to rise at 4:15 o'clock.

Senator Macquarrie: I note that the strictures on time come when I get the floor. However, Dr. Forsey, a certain legislative chamber not long ago expressed itself in a resolution that the best, and I suppose final, solution to the “Senate problem” was its abolition. It seems to me that through the years the one thing which has deterred the reform of this chamber is that our ancestors in their wisdom, having looked at the alternatives, have decided that in comparison the status quo was probably better. I am wondering about abolition in terms of the transitional situation. It would seem to me that any province whose representation in the House of Commons is vested on the Senatorial floor, such as Prince Edward Island, where we cannot have fewer people in the elected house than we have in the appointed one, must be careful. Any premier of Prince Edward Island, of whatever age, of whatever party, or of whatever IQ, who agreed to such a thing would be either a damn fool or a kamikaze pilot for his own destruction. Am I right in the assumption that if a premier agreed to the abolition of the Senate—and he or she would certainly be consulted and involved—he or she might, therefore, endanger the representation of his province in the lower house, as we sometimes call it here? That being the case, is it not very likely that one option—namely, abolition—is highly unrealistic?

Dr. Forsey: I think so. Of course, to get abolition even under the present Constitution would require unanimous consent. I quite agree that it is fantastic to suppose that unanimous consent would be forthcoming, particularly in light of the point Senator Macquarrie has just made which, I confess, had not occurred to me before. It seems to me quite clear that the premier of the Island and probably the premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, having an eye to the possible future decline in their proportion of the total population, might very well say, “Oh, no, not on your life. We have suffered enough from Upper Canada as it is.”

Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour): Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake): Dr. Forsey, I want to talk for a minute or two about the transfer of powers from the federal government to the provincial governments. Would you agree that, up until this time, over the years there has been a constant transfer of legislative and real powers through the power of the purse from the federal government to the provinces in Canada?

Dr. Forsey: Yes, I think in general that that is true. Of course, it is largely as a result of the work of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council before 1949—those old rascals, as my friend, the Honourable C.H. Cahan, used to call them. However, this accord would carry decentralization, it seems to me, far beyond anything that has happened to now. As Mr. Trudeau pointed out in his evidence before the joint committee—which, I am sorry to say, appears to have had no effect on the committee whatever—there has been an ebb and flow in the matter of real power. There have been times when the tide flowed toward the centre and times when it flowed toward the periphery. But on the whole, I think Canada has become a more decentralized federation.

Senator Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake): Would you not agree that since 1949, and especially in the last number of years, there has been a transfer of real power through the cost-shared programs? Although in theory the provinces have allowed the federal government to move into their jurisdiction in the matters of health, education and welfare, in fact, the federal government, to get what it wanted, which in many cases was national programs, has transferred large chunks of its own budget, given up control of its own budget, to the provinces. The biggest step of all was when the federal government gave the provinces block grants, over which the federal government now finds that it has little or no control. Is not the power of the purse real power, regardless of what the legislation says?

[Dr. Forsey.]

Dr. Forsey: Of course, the federal government was not able to invade the jurisdiction of the provinces, but it was able to say, "Look, if you want our money you must meet certain standards." In the case of health it was accessibility, and hence all that rumpus about extra billing in Ontario and, to some extent, elsewhere. On the other hand, the federal government was also able to say, "Look, you can have the money without strings." It did this recently with block grants for post-secondary education, if I remember correctly.

Senator Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake): And health as well.

Dr. Forsey: When they give these unconditional grants, of course, they lose control completely, and the provinces can proceed to spend the money which was given them, for example, for post-secondary education on highways, or you name it. I think that this is unfortunate.

The trouble with this accord as far as shared-cost programs are concerned is that there may be a tendency to go farther in the direction of block grants. Indeed, one of the people who appeared before the joint committee—I think it was Mr. Robertson—said that conditional grants were on the way out. There may be more of a tendency in that regard. There is also the possibility that the provinces will, as Professor Johnson pointed out, apply this attitude to the Trans-Canada Highway and things like that. Other people have pointed out that it might apply to pollution. For instance, with regard to pollution, there might be a national objective to get rid of pollution. Everybody will say, "Oh, yes, that is fine." The government here might say, "We are prepared to make certain grants to the provinces if they adopt certain pollution measures." But the provinces might do a "Reagan", and say, "We have an initiative, a program of our own involving research and incentives." The joint committee suggested that they would all be striving for the same goal in any event. I say, "Oh, yes, in the same sense the Honourable Tom McMillan, the Government of Canada and Mr. Reagan are striving for the same goal on acid rain—ha, ha, ha!"

Senator Steuart (Prince Albert-Duck Lake): Leaving aside the pollution question, do you not find it strange that the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and many of his ministers are decrying section 106(a), which deals with reasonable compensation for national cost-shared programs, by saying that this could be the end of such things as national medicare, day care, and so on?

● (1600)

I find it strange that you are quoting Professor Johnson and Mr. Robertson, who are, in large part, the architects of these cost-shared programs. They handed over to the provinces a tremendous share of the federal budget and, in my opinion, weakened the federal government to a great extent. These people are now saying that the roof is falling in and the sky is falling in because we propose to take one more step. If the sky is falling in after this one more step, surely it fell in a long time ago over the last 10 or 15 years.

Dr. Forsey: First of all, this applies only to new programs. There is some question there as to whether modifications to existing programs such as medicare would be regarded as new programs. I do not know, but that is a question that has been raised.

In the second place, in a large number of these shared-cost programs, notably medicare, it has been a matter of conditional grants, and the federal government has retained control over what happens. In the case of extra-billing, for example, they said to the provinces, "If you allow extra-billing you will get no money." It then held up the payments, and it was not until Ontario toed the line on that extra-billing policy that it got its money. I think the same thing has also happened in one or two other provinces.

If you refer then to the unconditional block grants, you can say that Trudeau or the government was too easy about those. However, that does not particularly impress me. Supposing that Mr. Trudeau was too easy about it; suppose he made a mistake. It does not follow that just because he made a mistake we must now make bigger mistakes. I am not here to argue that Pierre Trudeau was infallible; that everything he did was correct. But there is certainly a tendency I find sometimes on the part of the Conservative Party, which went around the country during the election campaign saying, "The Liberals are the devil incarnate." Now when they do something and are criticized they are saying, "The Liberals did it so it must be all right. What could possibly be wrong about it if the Liberals did it? We said they were the devil, but, after all, the devil can quote scripture for his own purposes."

I think that you can argue that there are things that Pierre Trudeau did by way of concession to the provinces that he ought not to have done. His reply was that he got something in return, which I think is a point. But even if he did not get enough in return, I do not think that this is an argument for saying, "We must go further and give them more." In my opinion, that is what is happening here, and if it is not happening, why are people in Quebec talking so much about a new federalism, the greatest victory in two centuries, and so on and so forth, Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay!

The Chairman: Senators, I wonder if I may interrupt here. We had agreed to rise at 4:15 because there is an important ceremony to be held later this afternoon in this chamber.

I have seven names still on my list. Is it your wish that we invite Dr. Forsey to come again before us?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, before I ask for a motion for the committee to rise I would like to recognize a visitor in our gallery, who is one of our ex-colleagues, the Honourable Senator Bird.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I might recognize, honourable senators, that this is a historic occasion for the Senate. This is the first time that, although not the full Senate, the Committee of the Whole has been televised.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, speaking now to the proceedings of this committee, I take it that this committee will not be sitting next week, because our task force travelling to the Northwest Territories and to the Yukon will be at work.

Having noted that, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

---

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sitting of the Senate is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Meech Lake accord and texts subsequently agreed to were referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again on Wednesday, November 4, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

PERSONS AWARD

NOTICE OF PRESENTATION CEREMONY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I would like to remind all honourable senators of the Persons Award ceremony which will be taking place in this chamber at 5:00 o'clock. Of course, all of the seats of senators are still the seats of senators. There is no change, so that everyone is quite welcome and, indeed, encouraged to attend that ceremony.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND — REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON QUESTION AND MESSAGE FROM HOUSE OF COMMONS

---

WEDNESDAY, October 21, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

NINETEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., dated 3rd September 1987 and the Message from the House of Commons dated 31st August 1987 relating to certain amendments to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, passed by the Senate on 13th August 1987, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference dated 3rd September 1987, examined the said motion and Message and now reports as follows:

PART I

Your Committee recommends that a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that, with respect to its Message to the Senate dated 31st August 1987 regarding Bill C-22:

- (i) the Senate does not insist upon the following amendments:

Amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9, 10(b) and (c);

- (ii) the Senate concurs with the following amendments made by the House of Commons to the amendments made previously by the Senate:

Amendments 1(c) and 8;

- (iii) the Senate does insist upon the following amendment:

Amendment 4(b); and

- (iv) in lieu of other amendments to which the House of Commons has disagreed, the Senate adopts the following amendments and requests that they be concurred in by the Commons:

AMENDMENTS

EXPLANATORY NOTES

To avoid ambiguity, the following amendments are numbered sequentially from the last amendment referred to in the Message from the House of Commons:

11. Pages 11 and 12, clause 15: Strike out lines 19 to 49 on page 11 and lines 1 and 2 on page 12, and substitute the following:

"(2) The prohibition under subsection (1) expires in respect of a medicine ten years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine where that notice of compliance is issued after the coming into force of this section."

12. Page 12, clause 15: Strike out lines 8 to 14 and substitute the following:

"(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of any licence pertaining to a medicine where on the date of the coming into force of this section, a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued."

This amendment establishes a uniform period of exclusivity of ten years with respect to compulsory licences to import, which is to apply only to drugs receiving their first NOC after the coming into force of this section.

This amendment specifies that the new regime for drugs is to apply only to drugs receiving their NOC after the coming into force of this section.

Amendments 11 and 12 effectively eliminate the concept of pipeline drugs.

13. Page 14, clause 15:

- a) Add, immediately after line 28, the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (2), where the price of a medicine is deemed to be excessive under subsections (8) or (9), the Board shall, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of either or both of

(a) the patent for the invention pertaining to the medicine, or

(b) any other patent of the patentee for an invention that pertains to one other medicine, whether granted before or after the coming into force of the order."

- b) Strike out line 29 and substitute the following:

"(4) A patentee shall commence compli-

- c) Strike out lines 36 and 37 and substitute the following:

"(5) Where an order is made under paragraph (2)(d) or subsection (3) in respect of a medicine, the"

This amendment establishes the penalty to be imposed on patentees in the event that the prices of some of their patented medicines increase at a rate faster than the rate of inflation. In this amendment, the Board must remove exclusivity from at least one drug.

These amendments are consequential upon amendment 13a). They renumber subsections and provide for an internal reference to new subsection (3).

- d) Strike out line 41 and substitute the following:

"(6) For the purposes of this section, in"

14. Page 15, clause 15:

- a) Strike out lines 16 to 18 and substitute the following:

"(7) Where, after taking into consideration the relevant factors referred to in subsection (6), the Board is unable to"

This is a consequential amendment. It changes the subsection number and the internal reference.

- b) Add, immediately after line 29, the following:

"(8) Notwithstanding anything in subsections (6) and (7), where a medicine has been sold in any market in Canada for one year or more, the price for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be excessive where:

This amendment establishes an upper limit for drug price increases as the rate of increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI). This new subsection (8) applies only to drugs which have been on the market for one year or more. It directs the Board to consider price increases over a 12 month period.

(a) the ratio of the price charged by the patentee in any such market, immediately preceding the Board's determination, to the price charged by the patentee in any such market twelve months prior to the determination,

This ratio determines the rate of price increase of the drug in question for the 12 month period, ending immediately before the Board's determination.

exceeds

(b) the ratio of the Consumer Price Index as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act for the most recent month available, to the Consumer Price Index for that same month in the preceding year.

This ratio determines the rate of inflation for a 12 month period, which ends one or two months before the 12 month period in (a) above.

(9) Notwithstanding anything in subsections (6) and (7), where a medicine has been sold in any market in Canada for less than one year, the price for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be excessive where:

This amendment establishes an upper limit for drug price increases, as in new subsection (8); but it applies only to drugs which have been on the market for less than one year. It directs the Board to consider price increases over the period since the drug was launched in Canada.

(a) the ratio of the price charged by the patentee in any such market, immediately preceding the Board's determination, to the price at which the medicine was first sold in such market,

This ratio determines the rate of price increase of the drug in question since the drug's launch.

exceeds

(b) the ratio of the Consumer Price Index as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act for the most recent month available, to the Consumer Price Index for either the month prior to the month in which the drug was first sold in any such market in Canada, or the month preceding such prior month, as the case may be."

This ratio determines the rate of inflation over a period of time equal to that used in (a) above. Depending upon the availability of CPI data, the appropriate ratio in (b) will start one or two months prior to the drug's launch in Canada.

- c) Strike out line 30 and substitute the following:

"(10) For the purposes of this section, in"

- d) Strike out line 42 and substitute the following:

"(11) The Board shall give notice to the"

These amendments are consequential upon the above amendments. They renumber subsections.

15. Page 16, clause 15:

- a) Strike out lines 3 and 4 and substitute the following:

"(12) Where an order under paragraph (2)(d) or subsection (3) is made by the Board, the Commis-"

This is consequential upon the amendments in 14 above. It renumbers the subsection and makes reference to new subsection (3).

- b) Add, immediately after line 9, the following:

"41.15.1(1) Every patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine which has not been sold previously in Canada, shall provide the Board with

This amendment deals with medicines that are being introduced into Canada for the first time. It instructs patentees to provide the Board with information regarding pricing intentions of the patentee and pricing information in other markets.

(a) in such form and manner and subject to such conditions as are prescribed, and at least sixty days prior to the anticipated initial sale of the medicine in any market in Canada, information and documents identifying the medicine and concerning

The Board is empowered to remove exclusivity granted in subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) if the patentee does not provide sufficient information at the appropriate time, or if the Board deems the expected launch price to be excessive.

(i) the price at which the medicine has been sold, is being sold, or is to be sold in any market outside of Canada,

(ii) the price at which the medicine is to be sold in any market in Canada, and

(iii) the costs of making and marketing the medicine, where such information is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee; and

(b) such additional information or documents with respect to the matters referred to in paragraph (a) as the Board may require, within such time as the Board may specify.

(2) Where, after providing every person against whom an order of the Board under this subsection is proposed to be made with a reasonable opportunity to be heard, the Board finds that

(a) a patentee in respect of a medicine has failed to provide information or documents in accordance with subsection (1), or

(b) a medicine pertaining to a patented invention is to be sold in any market in Canada at a price that in the opinion of the Board is excessive,

the Board may, by order,

(c) direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) do not apply or cease to apply, as the case may be, in respect of the patent for the invention pertaining to the medicine.

(3) Subsections 41.15(6) and (7) and subsections 41.15(10) and (11) apply with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of a matter referred to in subsection (2) of this section that comes before the Board under this section.

(4) Where an order under paragraph (2)(c) is made by the Board, the Commissioner shall forthwith inform the holder of each licence granted under section 41 in respect of any invention pertaining to the medicine to which the order relates of the terms of the order."

- c) Strike out line 40 and substitute the following:

"order under subsection (4) or (11) in"

This is consequential upon amendment 16a) below which adds a new subsection to 41.16. It renumbers the reference to old subsection (10).

16. Page 18, clause 15:

- a) Add, immediately after line 17, the following:

"(7) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (6), where the price of a medicine to which this section applies is deemed to be excessive, the Board shall, by order, declare that, effective on the coming into force of the order, the medicine ceases to be a medicine to which this section applies."

This amendment provides the penalty to be imposed on Canadian invented and developed drugs in the event that the Board deems their prices to be excessive. It declares that the special provisions afforded to Canadian drugs no longer apply. This could leave the drug with seven years manufacturing exclusivity and ten years import exclusivity. This penalty appears to be relatively weak, compared to the penalties which can be imposed on other drugs. The patentee, in this case, may retain the normal periods of exclusivity afforded other drugs, even after its price was ruled excessive. However, this price may still be deemed excessive subsequent to the order under 41.16(7) and thus be subject to the same sanctions to which others are subject.

- b) Strike out line 18 and substitute the following:

"(8) A patentee shall commence compli-

This is a consequential amendment which renumbers the subsection.

- c) Strike out lines 25 to 30 and substitute the following:

"(9) Subsections 41.15(6) to (11) apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of a matter referred to in subsections (6) and (7) of this section that comes before the Board under this section."

This is a consequential amendment. The subsection is renumbered and new subsections are referred to.

- d) Strike out line 31 and substitute the following:

"(10) Every patentee of an invention that"

These two amendments renumber the subsections.

- e) Strike out line 44 and substitute the following:

"(11) Where, after providing every"

17. Page 19, clause 15:

- a) Strike out line 4 and substitute the following:

"with subsection (10), the Commissioner"

This amendment changes the reference to a renumbered subsection.

- b) Strike out lines 10 to 12 and substitute the following:

"(12) Where an order is made under subsection (4), paragraph (6)(d), subsection (7), or subsection (11), the Commissioner shall forth-"

This amendment renumbers the subsection and makes reference to new subsection (7) and renumbered subsection (11).

18. Page 25, clause 15:

- a) Add, immediately after line 9, the following:

"(8) Where, for the calendar year 1991 or any year thereafter, the proportion specified in paragraph 41.25(4)(a) for a patentee is less than 0.08, the Board shall, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of any patent of the patentee for an invention pertaining to medicine, whether granted before or after the coming into force of the order.

This amendment provides for a company-by-company test of research spending, with sanctions to be levied on a company-by-company basis. The Board is empowered to examine the R&D to sales ratio for every patentee. If after 1991, the ratio is less than 8%, the Board shall remove exclusivity from any or all patents of a patentee which have been granted as of the time of the order, or may be granted in the future.

Once the Board removes exclusivity from a drug, that exclusivity cannot be returned to the patentee. It is possible under this amendment for the Board to remove exclusivity from all of a firm's patents, in perpetuity.

(9) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (8), where, for the calendar year 1996 or any year thereafter, the proportion specified in paragraph 41.25(4)(a) for a patentee is less than 0.10, the Board shall, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of any patent of the patentee for an invention pertaining to medicine, whether granted before or after the coming into force of the order.

Subsection (9) performs the same task as (8) above. It employs the stricter 10% test as of 1996.

(10) Where an order is made under subsections (8) or (9) in respect of a medicine, the prohibition set out in subsection 41.14(1) ceases to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the date of the order.

This amendment assures that the exclusivity with respect to manufacturing is removed whenever the Board removes exclusivity with respect to importation.

(11) Where an order under subsections (8) or (9) is made by the Board, the Commissioner shall forthwith inform the holder of each licence granted under section 41 in respect of any invention pertaining to the medicine to which the order relates of the terms of the order."

This amendment requires the Commissioner of Patents to inform licensees that any restrictions on the use of their licences cease to exist where the Board has made an order under subsections (8) or (9).

b) Strike out line 39 and substitute the following:

"(3) After the expiration of nine years after"

This amendment substitutes the word "after" for the word "on" in subsection 41.26(3) thereby making the French and English interpretations of the subsection uniform.

PART II

Your Committee recommends that a further Message be sent to the House of Commons as follows:

Hereinafter, Bill C-22, as passed by the House of Commons, is referred to as Bill C-22(C) and Bill C-22, as amended and passed by the Senate, is referred to as Bill C-22(S). The amendments contained in Part II reflect only the substantive amendments that the Committee recommends to the Senate. The full text of all amendments is presented above in Part I.

Since the Committee received its order of reference on 3rd September 1987, and after having commenced its study, a connection between Bill C-22 and some negotiations to achieve a trade agreement with the United States has been revealed. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Honourable Harvie Andre, had assured the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-22 that no link between the two existed. Other government ministers have been on the record to the same effect.

It may be that the Canadian government gave assurances during the negotiations that the Bill would be enacted. Furthermore, the Leader of the Government in the Senate stated that a failure to pass the Bill could affect the possibility of Congressional ratification of the agreement in the United States and would be against the spirit of such an agreement.

It is not appropriate to accuse the Minister or the Government of bad faith in this regard; but these recent developments have caused the Committee to question the assurances given in a number of areas such as the commitment to increased research and development expenditures and the control of drug prices. The Committee feels and has felt that the assurances given and referred to elsewhere in this report should be guaranteed by statutory provisions. A connection between Bill C-22 and the trade agreement is therefore not the reason for the Committee's recommendations; however, it has confirmed our resolve to insist upon such statutory guarantees.

ISSUES RELATED TO THE MESSAGE REFERRED TO THE COMMITTEE

In dealing with this reference, the Committee heard testimony from officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs; from representatives of the Consumers' Association of Canada (CAC); the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association (CDMA); the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada (PMAC); the fine chemical manufacturers; from Mr. John Orr; Dr. Pavel Hamet of the Clinical Research Institute of Montreal; and from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Honourable Harvie Andre. (See Appendix A.)

The House of Commons, in its Message to the Senate, declined to concur in most of the Senate's amendments to Bill C-22. In doing so it rejected the approach to intellectual property protection in the pharmaceutical industry and compulsory licensing proposed by the Senate. It also rejected the measures favoured by the Senate to promote greater research and development, to protect the consumer, and to foster better health care.

Bill C-22(C) and Bill C-22(S) take very different approaches to the principles outlined above.

Protection of Intellectual Property

Bill C-22(C) is designed to protect intellectual property in the field of pharmaceuticals by guaranteeing patent holders longer periods of market exclusivity. The Patent Act, as amended in 1969, does not guarantee any period of exclusivity with respect to patents pertaining to medicines. There is, of course, a de facto period of exclusivity based upon the regulatory lags faced by generic firms and the delay in the application for regulatory licences and notices which comes about as a result of normal business practice. The length of this period is highly variable, however, and individual patentees face much uncertainty in this regard. This period is also declining, on average, over time. The average of all generic copies coming on the market under compulsory licensing was 11.5 years after the first NOC granted to patentees. More recent generic drugs have been taking about nine years to come on the market.

Bill C-22(S) is designed to protect intellectual property primarily through the payment of royalties by licensees to patentees. It recognizes that the 4% royalty now paid by licensees is inadequate and consequently provides for an increase to 14%. It recognizes the importance of guaranteed periods of exclusivity, by providing four years to patentees. This period, according to the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry (the "Eastman Report"), is sufficient to allow patentees to establish their products on the market.

This combination of a short guaranteed period of exclusivity and higher royalty payments by licensees constitutes the Senate's preferred view of how intellectual property should be recognized in this industry.

The Promotion of Research and Development

The approach used in Bill C-22(C) to protect intellectual property is the means by which increased research and development activity is to be promoted. The PMAC has promised that in exchange for the enactment of the Bill, its member companies will increase research and development (R&D) spending in Canada to a level equal to 10% of annual sales in Canada by 1996. When the Canadian patent regime offered virtually full patent protection prior to the 1969 amendments, the industry's R&D to sales ratio was far below 10%; it was at approximately the same level as today. These promises, then, constitute a quid pro quo.

The Senate amendments were designed to encourage greater research spending by creating a royalty fund into which payments by licensees would be deposited and by specifying the rules under which patentees would be able to draw upon the fund. By making disbursements a function of the degree to which individual firms undertake R&D in relation to the industry average, the Senate intended to create a positive inducement to patentees to undertake R&D in Canada. As the degree of compulsory licensing grows in Canada, the size of the fund would grow accordingly, as would the payments to patentees for additional spending on R&D. Under current conditions, the size of the fund, and annual disbursements, would be relatively small.

Pricing and Consumer Protection

Bill C-22(C) introduced a regulatory board, the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, to provide a measure of consumer protection in the pharmaceutical market. There are two reasons for this. In the first place, the granting of greater periods of exclusivity to brand-name products raises obvious concerns that prices for these new drugs will be higher than they would be if generic competition could come onstream earlier than was proposed in the Bill.

Second, a large proportion of drugs never faces generic competition. Only 7% of all drugs are copied, accounting for 20% of total sales. Although there is evidence to suggest that today more than 20% of total drug sales in Canada are accounted for by multi-source drugs, it is still true that the consumers of many drugs do not enjoy the pricing benefits intended by the 1969 changes. The Board created in Bill C-22(C) would have the power to monitor and affect the prices of these single-source drugs. If the Board found that a drug was priced excessively, it would have the power to remove the exemption from compulsory licensing for both the drug in question and one other patented drug. Thus, the prices of single-source drugs would be influenced by removing the exclusivity for a drug which is likely to attract a generic copy.

Bill C-22(S) does not include a pricing board in its scheme. There are several reasons for this. First, it was not part of the Eastman Report's package of recommendations. Compulsory licences to import were viewed by that report as the means by which pricing in the pharmaceutical market was to be controlled. This is consistent with the rationale for the existing system. The impetus for the Commission of Inquiry and for the policy review undertaken by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in 1983 was not the concern about high drug prices. More importantly, however, the Senate's amendments would render largely powerless the operation of such a board. The Board to be established by Bill C-22(C) would have effective power to control prices only because of its ultimate sanction, the removal of market exclusivity. A ten-year period of exclusivity is valuable to patentees; its removal constitutes a strong sanction. The Senate preferred to grant four years of exclusivity. Since this is less than the de facto exclusivity patentees have enjoyed for all their patented products, the removal of this guaranteed exclusivity therefore would be a meaningless sanction.

Health Care

There never has been any serious suggestion that the innovative drug companies have been holding drugs off the market in Canada deliberately as a result of the 1969 changes to the Patent Act. It is also widely believed that greater periods of exclusivity in Canada will not have a significant impact on the availability of new drug therapies here. Yet despite these two observations, the issue of health care for Canadians is relevant to both versions of the Bill.

Bill C-22(C) aimed to guarantee greater periods of market exclusivity to patentees and thus, to increase significantly the amount of research and development undertaken in Canada by drug companies. It has been argued by supporters of Bill C-22(C) that both will have beneficial effects on health care.

It takes time for the results of clinical research to be translated into the widespread use of a drug therapy by physicians. If they have to rely upon professional journals and pharmaceutical companies' promotional and educational campaigns, this lag can be quite extensive. If, however, a major research effort takes place in Canada, the information regarding new treatments is likely to be disseminated more rapidly here, through more informal methods. The larger the research community, the greater will be the direct contact between that community and practising physicians.

The existing compulsory licensing regime has a widely variable impact on patentees. Some have been seriously hurt by the system; it is possible that some may shut down operations in Canada in the future. If the parent of such a company develops a new drug, there may be no mechanism by which such a drug can be launched quickly in Canada. Entry of new drugs may be delayed until new arrangements have been made to provide a mechanism to offer such drugs to Canadians. Not only would useful treatment to patients be delayed, but it might deprive provincial governments of more effective and more cost-efficient treatments.

Bill C-22(S) also attempted to deal with the issue of health care. The Senate chose to concentrate on the cost of health care and to ensure that drug prices do not contribute to greater strains on provincial health care budgets. By providing for only a four-year period of market exclusivity, no needless delay in the introduction of generic drugs would be created. Many references were made to the cost of pharmacare programs to the provinces and the threat that a decline in generic copying would pose for such plans. Bill C-22(S) ensured that no added financial burdens would be placed on those plans.

Promoting Fine Chemical Manufacture in Canada

Bill C-22(C) provided several incentives for the sourcing of fine chemicals in Canada by generic companies. It provided a "window of opportunity" of three years for new drugs, if generic companies bought the active ingredient for their copies in Canada. Whereas a generic company could only import the active ingredient under compulsory licence after a delay of ten years, they could manufacture that ingredient after a delay of only seven years. In addition, the transitional provisions which grant seven and eight years of exclusivity do not apply if the active ingredient is sourced in Canada by the generic company.

The June 1986 draft of the Bill also provided incentives for the manufacture of fine chemicals in Canada, but that version directed the major incentive towards patentees, not generic companies. If patentees sourced the fine chemicals in Canada after two years, they would earn the full ten years of market exclusivity. If not, then generic copies could come onstream immediately once they had passed the applicable regulatory hurdles.

Bill C-22(S) provides no measures to promote fine chemical manufacture in Canada. The design of the amendments made by the Senate precludes such measures. By eliminating the concept of pipeline drugs, Bill C-22(S) contains no provisions for early entry of generic copies on the basis of a compulsory licence to manufacture. By granting only a four-year period of market exclusivity for new drugs, which is less than the de facto period of exclusivity, any notion of a window of opportunity in that context would be meaningless.

POTENTIAL COMPROMISE ON FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

The Message from the House of Commons rejected all the substantive amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22(C). This Committee has been charged with the task of seeking a compromise between the two versions of the Bill. Several key witnesses have been heard and certain compromises have been offered with respect to some of the fundamental principles of Bill C-22(C). The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made it clear to the Committee that he would not agree to any compromise on matters of principle.

Protection of Intellectual Property

The Consumers' Association of Canada (CAC) noted that many organizations, like the CAC, questioned whether greater protection of intellectual property was needed in this industry. They recommended that a period of market exclusivity, substantially shorter than the ten years provided for in Bill C-22(C), be called for. The CAC also stated its support for higher royalties as a possible compromise in this area.

The Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association (CDMA) offered a compromise of seven years of exclusivity with respect to compulsory licences to import and four years of exclusivity with respect to licences to manufacture. The CDMA also supported the position of the fine chemical industry with respect to the encouragement of such manufacture in Canada. The recommendations of the CDMA, however, maintain the three-year window of opportunity now found in Bill C-22(C).

The PMAC argued that Bill C-22(C) already was a final compromise. That group of companies originally wished to have full patent protection restored for their products. A very extensive and lengthy process of negotiations and compromise had led to Bill C-22(C); they held that no further compromise was necessary. In response to questioning in the Committee, the PMAC representatives refused to offer any compromise against the prospect that Bill C-22(C) will not be enacted.

That association also argued that no compromise was needed since Bill C-22(C) would have had virtually no effect on the average availability of generic products. However, their statistical argument, which indicated that the launch of generic products would not be affected on average, is somewhat misleading. The periods of exclusivity in Bill C-22(C) affect only those generic products which would otherwise have been launched prior to the expiry of exclusivity. A generic drug which took 14.25 years to be introduced when no periods of exclusivity were granted will also take 14.25 years to be introduced when ten years of exclusivity are granted. Bill C-22(C), therefore, would delay the average generic launch in the PMAC's sample by one year.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs also contended that Bill C-22(C) already is a compromise among various competing interests. No changes to the periods of exclusivity would be acceptable to the Minister.

The Promotion of Research and Development

The CAC noted before the Committee that both the industry and the government view the promised increase in R&D expenditures as a binding commitment. They saw no reason, therefore, for not putting these commitments in Bill C-22(C) and tying a loss of market exclusivity to the failure to meet these targets. They also recommended that a true sunset clause be included in Bill C-22(C).

The CDMA offered nothing as a recommendation to promote or ensure research expenditures by the PMAC. The proposals of the CDMA are designed to promote the development of the generic sector, which they envisage as eventually becoming a domestically-owned and based pharmaceutical industry, doing a large amount of basic and clinical research in Canada. They cited a study by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) which noted that a prime ingredient in the establishment of a major pharmaceutical research effort is a strong domestically-owned industry. In their view, compulsory licensing promotes the establishment of such an industry.

The PMAC noted that they expect the Cabinet to react very unfavourably after four years in the event the R&D commitments are not being met. That organization saw no need to include their commitments and the penalties in the law. The Minister adopted much the same view. He said that a strict numerical limit would be inappropriate in that it could not account for differences in the quality of research.

Consumer Protection

Two suggestions were made by the CAC so as to strengthen the powers of the Board: to allow the Board to remove the exclusivity for all patented drugs in the event that a firm is found to be charging excessive prices; and to limit price increases to the rate of increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI). The CDMA and the CAC both felt that the best way to protect the consumers of medicines is to allow generic copying at the earliest date possible. The CAC also expressed concern about the Board's ability to control entry prices, but offered no direct amendments in this regard.

The PMAC submitted that: "In the future, annual price increases will be limited to the consumer price index and new product prices will be regulated to assure they are not excessive in relation to the established prices of competing products." They noted that these are the rules under which they expect to operate in the future. However, the PMAC did not agree that such a limit should be provided in Bill C-22(C).

The Minister stated that the Board does have the power to affect drug entry prices; he noted that several of the criteria on which prices are to be judged are directly related to entry prices. He also rejected the call for expressly limiting individual price increases to the rate of CPI increases. He insisted that his previous statements in this regard referred to overall price increases, not to the prices of particular products, and to be more a goal which the Board will strive to achieve, rather than a numerical limit. In his view, as expressed to the Committee, the CPI will not be an individual or aggregate ceiling.

Promoting Domestic Fine Chemical Manufacturing

The fine chemical manufacturing industry appeared before the Committee to raise its special concerns over the design of Bill C-22(C) and to offer compromise recommendations. Representatives of Torcan Chemical Ltd. and Delmar Chemicals Inc. indicated that the June 1986 draft Bill provided a better incentive to the domestic industry; but they were willing to accept an increase in the window of opportunity to five years from three years. In their recommendation, the period of exclusivity with respect to compulsory licences to manufacture would be set at five years instead of seven years.

COMPROMISE ON NON-FUNDAMENTAL ISSUES

The Minister told the Committee that he was unwilling to compromise on any of the fundamental principles of Bill C-22(C). However, with respect to matters which do not touch upon these fundamental principles, the Committee is of the view that flexibility is not only possible but absolutely necessary. It is in relation to these matters – controlling drug prices, research and development commitments, the retrospective operation of Bill C-22(C), and certain drafting concerns – that the Committee believes Bill C-22(C) can be improved to enhance the goals espoused by the Minister without derogating from its fundamental principles.

Controlling Drug Prices

One principle upon which Bill C-22(C) is founded is the protection of consumers from higher drug prices. In furtherance of this principle, it provided for the creation of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board to monitor the prices of patented medicines.

Patentees would be required to provide the Board with information as to the price at which a medicine was sold and the cost of making and marketing the medicine. Should the Board determine that a medicine is being sold at an excessive price, it could direct the patentee to reduce the price to one that is not excessive or direct that exclusivity would no longer apply to either or both of the drug under review and one other drug of that patentee.

Bill C-22(C) required the Board to take the following factors into consideration when making a determination as to whether a drug is excessively priced:

- a) the prices at which the patentee sold the medicine during the previous five years;
- b) the prices of other medicines in the same therapeutic class during the previous five years;
- c) the prices at which the medicine and others in the same therapeutic class have been sold in other countries during the previous five years; and
- d) the consumer price index (CPI).

If, on the basis of the foregoing factors, the Board cannot make a determination, it can consider the costs of making and marketing the medicine and other relevant factors.

There is widespread public concern that restricting the entry of generic drugs on the market will lead to higher drug prices. The Minister has stated that the Bill will not increase drug prices; rather, it will result in a delay in price reductions, thereby allowing prices to remain at a higher level for a longer period of time.

Two aspects of drug prices are of concern. The first is a drug's introductory price — the price charged for a drug when it is first launched on the Canadian market. The second is price fluctuations after introduction. A drug's introductory price is particularly important since it is the basis upon which subsequent price fluctuations will be judged.

When examining the price of a particular drug, the Board is empowered to consider the prices at which drugs in the same therapeutic class have been sold in Canada during the previous five years as well as the price of the medicine and others in the same therapeutic class in other countries during the previous five years. It would appear that these criteria are designed to enable the Board to make judgments upon the entry price of new drugs.

There has been considerable discussion before the Committee regarding the ability of the Board to control introductory prices. Some witnesses, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, felt that the Board would have a great deal of difficulty in affecting entry prices and questioned whether, in fact, it was empowered to examine such prices. Both the Minister and the PMAC believe that the Board has authority to deal with entry pricing. According to the PMAC, "entry levels will be studied . . . in relation to the basket of products with which it [a drug] competes . . .".

As no explicit mention of entry prices is made in Bill C-22(C), the Committee is concerned that the Board may view such prices as beyond its scope. Since it is the view of the Minister and the PMAC that the Board is empowered to examine entry prices, consideration must be given to making explicit what both the Government and the industry believe Bill C-22(C) is intended to require the Board to do.

Three approaches to an examination of entry prices are possible. One would be to examine a price after a product has been launched on the market. This is the method employed in Bill C-22(C), which deals with the price at which a medicine is "being sold in any market in Canada". Another would be "to approve" the entry price for a drug before it is launched on the market. The third approach is to require a patentee to provide the Board with sufficient information to judge an intended launch price as excessive or not.

Using the post-market-entry approach, it is clear that the current framework of Bill C-22(C) can serve as a basis to ensure that the Board deals with entry prices. This can be accomplished by requiring patentees to supply the Board with information as to the prices charged for new medicines upon entry into the Canadian and other markets and to provide a historical record of pricing changes in those other markets. Paragraph 41.15(1)(a) of the Bill specifies that drug companies must supply the Board with the above-noted information "at such times and subject to such conditions as are prescribed . . .". It is possible, then, to draft the regulations applicable to the operation of the Board in such a way as to ensure that the Board is provided with the relevant information whenever a new drug is launched in Canada and therefore assure that it could decide in a timely manner whether an entry price is excessive. This approach has been rejected by the Committee.

Having the Board approve a drug's entry price before it is introduced on the market is another approach to dealing with a drug's base price. This would ensure that a drug does not enter the market at a price which the Board considers to be excessive and would avoid possible lengthy hearings into excessive pricing during which a drug could continue to be sold. Periods of exclusivity would be held in abeyance until the Board rules a price as not excessive. This approach was also rejected by the Committee.

The Committee chose an approach to controlling entry prices which requires patentees to provide the Board with certain information prior to the introduction of a new drug. This requirement would be set in the legislation. The Board would have the capability, then, to establish what constitutes an excessive price, before a medicine is on the market. To make explicit what the Minister and the PMAC believe to be the case, and to alleviate the fears of groups such as the CAC that entry prices will not be controlled, the Committee recommends that the following amendment be made to Bill C-22(C):

"41.15.1(1) Every patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine which has not been sold previously in Canada, shall provide the Board with

(a) in such form and manner and subject to such conditions as are prescribed, and at least sixty days prior to the anticipated initial sale of the medicine in any market in Canada, information and documents identifying the medicine and concerning

(i) the price at which the medicine has been sold, is being sold, or is to be sold in any market outside of Canada,

(ii) the price at which the medicine is to be sold in any market in Canada, and

(iii) the costs of making and marketing the medicine, where such information is available to the patentee in Canada or is within the knowledge or control of the patentee; and

(b) such additional information or documents with respect to the matters referred to in paragraph (a) as the Board may require, within such time as the Board may specify.

(2) Where, after providing every person against whom an order of the Board under this subsection is proposed to be made with a reasonable opportunity to be heard, the Board finds that

(a) a patentee in respect of a medicine has failed to provide information or documents in accordance with subsection (1), or

(b) a medicine pertaining to a patented invention is to be sold in any market in Canada at a price that in the opinion of the Board is excessive,

the Board may, by order,

(c) direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsections 41.11(1) and 41.14(1) do not apply or cease to apply, as the case may be, in respect of the patent for the invention pertaining to the medicine.

(3) Subsections 41.15(6) and (7) and subsections 41.15(10) and (11) apply with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of a matter referred to in subsection (2) of this section that comes before the Board under this section.

(4) Where an order under paragraph (2)(c) is made by the Board, the Commissioner shall forthwith inform the holder of each licence granted under section 41 in respect of any invention pertaining to the medicine to which the order relates of the terms of the order."

Under Bill C-22(C), the Board has authority to remove a drug's period of exclusivity if it determines that a price is excessive. The Department of Justice has given its opinion on the constitutional validity of the Board. This opinion is based upon federal jurisdiction over patents. However, there may be some question as to the constitutional validity of empowering the Board to establish entry prices. The Minister is of the view that the Board has no constitutional authority to set the price of a drug. It would appear that if the Board is to deal with entry prices before a drug is actually sold in Canada, it will be necessary to tie such pricing to patent exclusivity and exemptions from compulsory licensing. This is precisely the approach taken in the amendment recommended above.

A second aspect of drug pricing which the Board will consider will be price fluctuations, in particular, price increases. Among the factors that the Board can consider when examining prices is the Consumer Price Index.

The CPI is likely to be a significant factor in an examination of price increases. Indeed, the Committee was told that the Board's mandate is to keep price increases at or below the CPI. Nothing in the Bill, however, limits drug price increases to the CPI. Because the Board may consider the CPI "to the extent that it deems reasonable", its importance and influence as a pricing factor may vary from case to case. Should price increases exceed the CPI, the Board may decide, on the basis of other factors, that a particular price is not excessive or that some price lower than the current market price but higher than increases in the CPI is acceptable.

The criteria for an examination of prices and the penalties that can be imposed for excessive pricing will be of utmost importance to the Board's ability to deal successfully with excessive prices. In this regard, the weight that the Board is to give to the CPI as a pricing factor could be crucial.

The PMAC made it clear that it views the mandate of the Board as requiring it to limit drug price increases to the rate of change of the Consumer Price Index, or less. That position was taken in its brief to the Committee; it was reiterated in response to questioning.

The Minister stated on a number of occasions that the Board is to keep the rate of drug price increases at or below the change in the CPI. In testimony before the Committee he stated that this would be an overall goal of the Board and not a criterion for limiting the increase in the price of any one drug. In his view, the Board may find that some prices should rise above the CPI while others should be only some fraction of the CPI increase. It should not, therefore, be hampered by rigid numeric limits or tests. The Minister also expressed concern that limiting price increases to the CPI by statute would mean that such increases would automatically be set at the CPI when other conditions might allow for smaller increases.

The Minister's position on drug price increases as expressed to the Committee is not as strong as were his previous statements. His position might be viewed as an implicit instruction to the Board. If the price of every patented drug is to be limited to no more than the increase in the CPI, the aggregate drug price index will almost assuredly increase by less than the rate of inflation in the future. This is because generic drugs tend to cause drug prices to fall over time. They enter the market at a level which is slightly lower than the patentee's price; then the generic price continues to fall as other generic copies are introduced. The average of falling drug prices for some medicines, together with increases in line with the rate of inflation for the rest, would produce aggregate price increases in this industry which would be less than the rate of inflation.

If the Board is only required to keep aggregate price increases at or below the rate of inflation, it would be possible for particular patentees to achieve increases which, on average, were above this rate. Again, this is due to the fact that multi-source drugs tend to fall in price over time. It is important to know whether the Board is to strive to keep patentees' prices in line with inflation on average, or if the Board is to strive to keep all drug prices in line with the rate of inflation.

When the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs estimated the impact of the Board, its upper bound estimate was determined by limiting the increase in the Consumer Price Index for Prescribed Medicines (CPIPM) to the rate of inflation. The CPIPM includes multi-source drugs. If it grows at the rate of inflation, the prices of single-source and possibly all brand-name drugs probably would increase at more than the rate of inflation. This would be higher than what was previously stated by the Minister and it would be higher than the PMAC believes would be the case.

The Committee feels that patentees' prices must not be allowed to increase faster than the CPI. The role of the CPI as a factor in an examination of prices must be strengthened. Rather than it being merely one of the factors which the Board may consider, the CPI should be the primary factor against which individual price increases are to be judged. Any price increase which exceeds the CPI increase should be deemed to be excessive, thereby invoking a removal of market exclusivity. The application of such a test would avoid protracted hearings into drug prices and provide assurances that such prices would not increase at rates exceeding the cost of living. Bill C-22(C) then, clearly, would foster the principle of protecting consumers from higher drug prices and would explicitly state the rules to which the PMAC already understands that patentees will be subject. Since the PMAC has implicitly accepted such a limit on their price increases, the Committee does not understand why the Minister should object to a statutory limit on drug price increases. We, therefore, recommend the following amendments:

"(8) Notwithstanding anything in subsections (6) and (7), where a medicine has been sold in any market in Canada for one year or more, the price for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be excessive where:

(a) the ratio of the price charged by the patentee in any such market, immediately preceding the Board's determination, to the price charged by the patentee in any such market twelve months prior to the determination,

exceeds

(b) the ratio of the Consumer Price Index as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act for the most recent month available, to the Consumer Price Index for that same month in the preceding year.

(9) Notwithstanding anything in subsections (6) and (7), where a medicine has been sold in any market in Canada for less than one year, the price for the purposes of this section, shall be deemed to be excessive where:

(a) the ratio of the price charged by the patentee in any such market, immediately preceding the Board's determination, to the price at which the medicine was first sold in such market,

exceeds

(b) the ratio of the Consumer Price Index as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act for the most recent month available, to the Consumer Price Index for either the month prior to the month in which the drug was first sold in any such market in Canada, or the month preceding such prior month, as the case may be."

The above recommended amendment defines the circumstances under which price increases would be deemed excessive. The following recommended amendments require the Board to impose a penalty but give it some discretion as to the severity of the penalty:

Page 14, clause 15: Add, immediately after line 28, the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (2), where the price of a medicine is deemed to be excessive under subsections (8) or (9), the Board shall, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of either or both of

(a) the patent for the invention pertaining to the medicine, or

(b) any other patent of the patentee for an invention that pertains to one other medicine, whether granted before or after the coming into force of the order."

Page 18, clause 15: Add, immediately after line 17, the following:

"(7) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (6), where the price of a medicine to which this section applies is deemed to be excessive, the Board shall, by order, declare that, effective on the coming into force of the order, the medicine ceases to be a medicine to which this section applies."

Research and Development Commitments

Two of the underlying principles of Bill C-22(C) are the enhancement of research and development in Canada and the creation of high technology jobs. It proposed to further these principles by guaranteeing periods of market exclusivity to innovative drug companies. In return for exclusivity, the PMAC has publicly committed its members to increase their level of research and development (R&D) expenditures as a percentage of sales from the current level of 4.9% to 8% by 1991, 9% by 1994, and 10% by 1996. According to the PMAC, this will mean an additional investment of $1.4 billion in pharmacological research over a ten-year period and will create 3,000 new jobs; it will also lead to improved health care for Canadians through earlier access to the latest advances in biomedical research.

The PMAC told the Committee that it will honour its commitments. It also believes that Bill C-22(C) contains the necessary safeguards to encourage the industry to meet its investment targets. These safeguards consist of a possible cabinet review of the compulsory licensing regime sometime after the first four years and a parliamentary review after nine years. A member of the research community told the Committee that Canadian scientists would also be closely monitoring the PMAC to ascertain whether or not the research promises were being kept.

Even though it is clear that the PMAC commitment to increase R&D is a quid pro quo for guaranteed periods of market exclusivity, Bill C-22(C) does not directly refer to these commitments; nor does it contain any sanctions which are specifically tied to the failure to reach specified levels of R&D. However, it does require patentees to report to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board their expenditures on R&D and their revenue from sales of medicines in Canada. In its annual report, the Board will publish percentages of R&D to sales on both a company-by-company and an industry-wide basis.

Significant criticism of Bill C-22(C) was based upon the absence from the Bill of direct mechanisms to enforce the PMAC's R&D commitments. There is no explicit link between the cabinet and parliamentary reviews, and levels of R&D; the Board has no power to enforce the commitments. Indeed, it has been suggested that tying market exclusivity to requirements to undertake R&D in Canada may violate certain provisions of the Paris Convention on the Protection of Industrial Property, to which Canada is a signatory.

The fact that the cabinet review is not mandatory and is not required to occur immediately upon the expiration of four years after Bill C-22(C) becomes law has been a concern. The Consumers' Association of Canada is of the view that stronger safeguards are necessary to ensure that the industry's promises regarding R&D and job creation will be kept.

The scope and application of legislative safeguards and the events which trigger their operation are crucial to the effective enforcement of the R&D commitments. Safeguards could operate on a company-by-company or an industry-wide basis. On the one hand, a patentee could be required to earn its exclusivity or it could be penalized (by a removal of exclusivity) if certain statutory requirements are not met. Alternatively, sanctions could be based on industry performance as a whole rather than on the performance of a particular member.

One approach might consist of requiring a patentee to earn its market exclusivity. The draft version of Bill C-22 issued by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in June of 1986 did this. To maintain exclusivity, a patentee would have to manufacture or source a drug's active ingredients in Canada within two years of receiving a NOC for the drug. Failure to do so would result in a loss of exclusivity in relation to compulsory licences to manufacture. However, this provision was not included in Bill C-22(C).

The review mechanisms found in Bill C-22(C) are industry-oriented. A cabinet review could result in an overall reduction of market exclusivity or the reinstatement of the present compulsory licensing system. This would affect all patentees, regardless of their individual levels of investment, should the overall industry commitments not be achieved. Although levels of R&D investment are not the explicit determinants of the reviews, they are to be important components of the process. In fact, it is the PMAC's understanding that a failure to meet the targetted R&D investment levels after four years "will result in the loss of some or all of the protection afforded by Bill C-22."

Although the PMAC expects that the failure of its members to produce certain industry-wide ratios of R&D to sales by specified dates will result in a loss of patent protection, it is unwilling to have Bill C-22(C) amended to include such a provision. In the PMAC's view, enshrining such commitments in legislation would not make good patent law.

If the industry-wide approach to R&D commitments currently implied by Bill C-22(C) is to be maintained, investment safeguards could be strengthened in a number of ways. One method would be to empower the Board to remove or reduce the periods of exclusivity applicable to all patentees should the PMAC members fail to reach the announced industry investment levels. Since the Board will be collecting R&D information on a regular basis and publishing the data annually in its report, it would have ready access to all the information required to make such a determination.

Even though Bill C-22(C) is premised upon an industry-wide approach to research and development, and the Bill could be readily amended to provide assurances that the industry's commitments would be met, the Committee is of the view that a company-by-company rather than an industry-wide approach to the R&D commitments may be both fairer and more viable. First, by requiring every patentee to achieve the targetted R&D levels, each clearly would be obligated to do something to maintain its market exclusivity. This would alleviate one of the problems identified with Bill C-22(C), namely, that exclusivity is given to all patentees, yet in return, all patentees are not required to enhance their R&D programs. Second, it would allay the concern expressed regarding a possible reluctance on the part of the Cabinet to penalize companies which have exceeded the investment targets simply because the overall industry commitments are not met.

A preferred approach is to make market exclusivity available to all patentees, but require each patentee to do something to maintain it. If this approach were to be adopted, the continuance of market exclusivity could be tied to how much R&D a patentee undertakes in Canada. The failure of a patentee to reach the targets announced by the PMAC (8% by 1991, 9% by 1994 and 10% by 1996) would result in a loss of market exclusivity. In such a case, the Board could be given authority to remove the exclusivity pertaining to some or all of a company's drug patents. Dealing with patentees on an individual basis would ensure that only those who fail to reach the statutory requirements would be penalized. It also would alleviate the concern that has been expressed about the fact that it is an unincorporated organization without assets which has made the commitments.

The Minister was of the opinion that enforcing research targets on a company-by-company basis may not be appropriate and would not necessarily alleviate the problems associated with penalizing an entire industry for the failure of a few to meet these targets. Penalizing individual companies that have had to reduce research because generic competition has significantly decreased sales would be, according to the Minister, unfair.

The Minister also opposed the establishment of a numerical target for R&D in Bill C-22(C). He preferred a "judgmental" test which would give government the opportunity to "ask questions about quality of research" and felt that a numeric test would become a maximum as opposed to a minimum. He would prefer the Government to be in a position to "exercise moral suasion in terms of meeting a test than to have a pure numeric test, the passage or failure of which would ultimately be decided by a judge as opposed to parliamentarians or a minister."

Contrary to the Minister's position, a company-by-company R&D test will not impose particular hardship on patentees with declining sales. The test is not on total research spending but on such spending relative to sales. The Committee feels that every firm failing to meet individual R&D goals in any year should be subject to some sanction. By directing the Board to apply these penalties we would provide for some discretion as to the severity of the sanctions and allow for them to be imposed on an individual basis.

The Committee wishes to enhance the ability of Bill C-22(C) to satisfy the concerns of the research community that the R&D commitments are to be met and to make clear to the PMAC what the new rules are to be in this regard. We again see no legitimate reason for the Minister to object to a statutory provision for assuring that additional research spending is undertaken. The following recommendation outlines an amendment to Bill C-22(C) which would accomplish this task:

“(8) Where, for the calendar year 1991 or any year thereafter, the proportion specified in paragraph 41.25(4)(a) for a patentee is less than 0.08, the Board shall, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of any patent of the patentee for an invention pertaining to medicine, whether granted before or after the coming into force of the order.

(9) Notwithstanding anything in subsection (8), where, for the calendar year 1996 or any year thereafter, the proportion specified in paragraph 41.25(4)(a) for a patentee is less than 0.10, the Board shall, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of any patent of the patentee for an invention pertaining to medicine, whether granted before or after the coming into force of the order.

(10) Where an order is made under subsections (8) or (9) in respect of a medicine, the prohibition set out in subsection 41.14(1) ceases to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the date of the order.

(11) Where an order under subsections (8) or (9) is made by the Board, the Commissioner shall forthwith inform the holder of each licence granted under section 41 in respect of any invention pertaining to the medicine to which the order relates of the terms of the order.”

The Retrospective Operation of Bill C-22(C)

Retrospective laws are, no doubt, prima facie of questionable policy, and contrary to the general principle that legislation by which the conduct of mankind is to be regulated ought, when introduced for the first time, to deal with future acts, and ought not to change the character of past transactions carried on upon the faith of the then existing law.<sup>1</sup>

Changes to the compulsory licensing provisions of the Patent Act have been some time in the making. In 1983 the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs issued a discussion paper on the subject in which it was suggested that a rebalancing of the 1969 policy was required. The paper set out the following three approaches for changing the Patent Act: (1) variable royalty rates; (2) market exclusivity with respect to compulsory licences to import; and (3) company-specific exemptions from compulsory licences. Following this, a Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry was established in 1984. In its report, that Commission recommended, among other things, that patent holders be given a four-year period of exclusivity with respect to both compulsory licences to manufacture and compulsory licences to import and that licence royalty rates be increased, paid into a fund, and distributed to patent holders on the basis of the amount of research and development carried out in Canada.

On June 27, 1986 the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs issued proposed changes to the Patent Act which, among other things, would have established guaranteed periods of market exclusivity to patent holders. These proposals would have guaranteed patent holders seven, eight or ten years of market exclusivity against compulsory licences to import. The seven and eight-year periods were based upon the degree to which generic companies had, as of June 27, 1986, completed the regulatory requirements essential to marketing a drug. Patentees receiving a Notice of Compliance after June 27, 1986 were entitled to ten years of exclusivity with respect to compulsory licences to import regardless of the regulatory steps a generic company may have completed on that date.

In order to obtain exclusivity with respect to compulsory licences to manufacture, the June scheme required a patentee to source a drug's active ingredients in Canada within two years after receipt of a NOC for a drug. If a patentee met this requirement, it would receive ten years of market exclusivity. If, on the other hand, a patentee failed to manufacture the active ingredients in Canada, a generic company could obtain a compulsory licence to manufacture at any time after the two-year period.

Bill C-22(C) contains the same provisions as the June 1986 version with respect to compulsory licences to import. Like the June proposal, the Bill affects the ability of generic firms to market their products on the basis of the extent to which they had, on June 27, 1986, completed certain regulatory requirements. If a patentee has received a Notice of Compliance by that date, the drug is placed in one category and is granted zero, seven or eight years of exemption from compulsory licences to import. If, for this category of drugs, a generic company has received its NOC and compulsory licence by the June date, the patentee has no exclusivity with respect to that generic firm. Where a generic company has completed one of the regulatory steps, the patentee is granted a seven-year exclusivity with respect to a licence to import. If a generic company has completed none of the regulatory steps, then the patentee is given an eight-year exemption from compulsory licences to import.

A patentee receiving a Notice of Compliance after June 27, 1986, receives a ten-year period of exclusivity against compulsory licences to import regardless of the regulatory steps a generic company may have completed as of that date.

Bill C-22(C), however, substantially changed the provisions of the June 1986 proposals with regard to manufacturing exclusivity. There was no longer a requirement for patentees to source active ingredients in Canada in order to obtain exclusivity against compulsory licences to manufacture. It shifted the manufacturing onus away from patentees to generic firms by providing that for all drugs for which NOCs are issued after June 27, 1986, the period of exclusivity would be seven years if a generic company manufactures or sources the active ingredients in Canada.

Bill C-22(C)'s guiding characteristics for the classification of drugs and the designation of the appropriate periods of exclusivity are the requirements for entry into the market. In most instances, however, firms have little control over the length of time the process takes. The Committee heard that it takes approximately 15 months after service of a licence application on a patentee for the Commissioner of Patents to issue a compulsory licence, while the Department of National Health and Welfare takes about two years to issue a NOC to a generic firm and approximately four years to issue one to a patentee.

It is difficult to account for all the factors that a firm takes into consideration when making its business decisions. An important consideration in the pharmaceutical industry is the regulatory environment that firms face or expect to face. At present, generic firms start the process of applying for compulsory licences and NOCs in the belief that they will be able to market their products once these steps are completed. Since both procedures require the expenditure of time, effort, and financial resources, they constitute economic transactions with the Government. Generic firms enter into these transactions in good faith, but Bill C-22(C) would alter their consequences.

The Minister has argued, on a number of occasions, that the seven and eight-year restrictions on the so-called "pipeline drugs" were necessary because of the large numbers of applications for compulsory licences made by generic producers in anticipation of a legislative change. This stated rationale for their inclusion in the Bill ignores the possibility that many applications may have been made in the normal course of business and in anticipation of substantial increases in the licence application fees that occurred in 1985. The restrictions on the pipeline group of drugs do not take into account the factors which may have motivated a person to apply for a compulsory licence.

Regardless of the rationale for these restrictions, the basic issue of whether those who enter a regulatory process on the basis of existing law should be entitled to complete the process without restriction cannot be ignored.

The Committee has heard concerns about the retrospective operation of the periods of exclusivity contained in Bill C-22(C). In the CDMA's view, the Bill confiscates rights where a generic company had not commenced selling a product on June 27, 1986. This was of particular concern with regard to products for which they had carried out their research and development, and had obtained a compulsory licence prior to the June date. According to the CDMA, a number of products would be affected, such as Ranitidine, Nifedipine, Diltiazem, and Atenolol.

In the Minister's opinion, Bill C-22(C) is not retroactive. The publication of a draft bill in June 1986 put the parties on notice as to the rule changes. The fact that Bill C-22, when introduced in November of 1986, used June 27, 1986 as the operative date for the transition from the old to the new compulsory licensing regime is, in the Minister's view, fair, since the new rules had been announced some four months prior to the introduction of the Bill in Parliament.

It is clear that Bill C-22(C) does not prevent generic companies that have entered the regulatory process required to market a drug in Canada from completing that process. Nothing in the Bill empowers the Commissioner of Patents to discontinue the issuance of compulsory licences, both with respect to applications made prior to June 27, 1986 and those made after that date. Compulsory licences continue to be a statutory right. However, it does restrict the scope and operation of certain licences issued both before and after June 27, 1986 by proscribing the use of such licences in the Canadian market. For many of those who applied for a compulsory licence to import prior to June 27, 1986 expecting to receive a licence which conferred rights to supply the Canadian market, the situation has changed materially.

It has been suggested that Bill C-22(C) does not operate in a retrospective manner so as to take away already-acquired rights. This argument is based upon the fact that the seven and eight-year restrictions on compulsory licences to import apply, respectively, to generic firms having either a compulsory licence to import or a NOC, or those having neither of these. As a consequence, these firms could not have brought a drug on the market in Canada on that date. Accordingly, if rights are acquired only when both the NOC and compulsory licence have been granted, Bill C-22(C) does not in any way remove or derogate from these rights.

If one accepts that a compulsory licence and a NOC are inseparable and interdependent components of one right and only one right – to market a drug in Canada – then the foregoing argument has merit. However, if a compulsory licence and a NOC, in fact, confer separate and distinct rights, then the argument is not persuasive.

The granting of a compulsory licence confers certain rights on a licensee to use a patented invention pertaining to a medicine. A NOC authorizes the marketing of a drug on the basis of the drug's safety and efficacy. Although a generic company cannot market a drug for consumption in Canada without both a compulsory licence and a NOC, it is clear that each confers separate and distinct rights. The absence of a NOC does not derogate from the rights acquired under a compulsory licence, and vice versa.

Bill C-22(C) has a significant impact on the rights of licensees under compulsory licences to import. The Bill's treatment of such licensees is not uniform. The rights of certain licensees are impaired while those of others are not. In particular, a licensee having both a compulsory licence to import and a NOC on June 27, 1986 is not subject to restriction, while a licensee who had a licence to import on that date but not a NOC is subject to a seven-year restriction. In this latter situation, the licensee's right to use the invention in Canada, a right conferred by the granting of the licence, is impaired by the mere absence of a NOC. Thus, two compulsory licensees having had compulsory licences issued on the same date with identical rights conferred by the licences would be afforded different treatment by the Bill. It is the impairment of rights under licences granted on or before June 27, 1986 which contributes to the retrospective effect of Bill C-22(C).

The retrospective operation of the Bill is contemplated and highlighted by a statutory bar against actions or proceedings against the Crown as a result of Bill C-22(C)'s restrictions on compulsory licences to import and to manufacture (subsection 41.26(4)). Licensees whose rights have been adversely affected by the Bill would be prohibited from seeking legal redress against the Crown.

The Senate recognized that Bill C-22(C) had a retrospective impact on certain generic firms and proposed to deal with this by eliminating the seven and eight-year periods of market exclusivity relating to the pipeline drugs and by making a four-year period of market exclusivity applicable only to patented medicines which had their NOCs issued after the date that the Bill would be proclaimed in force. The division between the new regime and the existing one was to be based solely on the receipt of a NOC by a patentee after that date. No transition provisions apply in Bill C-22(S): drugs would be classified clearly as old, receiving no periods of exclusivity; and new, receiving four years of exclusivity. Bill C-22(S) eliminates the possibility that a generic drug currently on the market would be affected in any way by the Bill.

This Committee is concerned with the retrospective operation of Bill C-22(C). In particular, we object to the use of June 27, 1986 as the operative date for the transition to the new compulsory licensing regime and the restrictions placed on compulsory licences to import pertaining to the pipeline products. We note that the general amendments to the Patent Act proposed in Bill C-22(C) do not have an operative date other than dates to be fixed by proclamation. The Committee is of the view that the use of the June 27, 1986 operative date impairs the rights of certain licensees and of those who have applied for but have not yet been granted compulsory licences. The rights of those who have entered the regulatory process to bring a generic drug to market merit protection. The dividing line between the old and the new regime for compulsory licensing, therefore, should be the date on which the Bill is proclaimed into force and the criterion governing the transition from the old to the new regime should be whether a brand-name drug has received its NOC on that date. This single criterion would effectively eliminate the restrictions on the pipeline drugs and ensure that any generic drugs which have come to market since June 27, 1986 would not be removed from the market by the enactment of Bill C-22(C). Accordingly, the Committee insists upon Senate amendment 4(b) and recommends the following amendments:

Pages 11 and 12, clause 15: Strike out lines 19 to 49 on page 11 and lines 1 and 2 on page 12, and substitute the following:

“(2) The prohibition under subsection (1) expires in respect of a medicine ten years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine where that notice of compliance is issued after the coming into force of this section.”

Page 12, clause 15: Strike out lines 8 to 14 and substitute the following:

"(4) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of any licence pertaining to a medicine where on the date of the coming into force of this section, a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued."

Drafting Concerns

In the course of its examination of the Message and the motion, a number of concerns relating to the drafting of Bill C-22(C) have arisen.

One of these relates to section 41.26 of Bill C-22(C). Subsection 41.26(1) provides that "after the expiration of four years" the Governor in Council may reduce the periods of exclusivity or return to the current compulsory licensing system. This is the so-called cabinet review provision. Another review by Parliament will occur "on the expiration of nine years".

The PMAC views the cabinet review as a safeguard to ensure that its R&D commitments will be met and assumes that a review will occur on the expiration of four years.

The Committee notes that the French version of subsections 41.26(1) and 41.26(3) uses the word "après" to mean both "on" and "after". On the basis of the French version of Bill C-22(C), both subsections would have the same meaning. If this is the intention, then the English version of these two subsections should use identical words to reflect a uniform interpretation. This would also ensure that the flexibility which the Minister states is necessary for the review process to work effectively, is maintained. Therefore, the Committee recommends the following amendment:

"(3) After the expiration of nine years after"

Subsection 41.26(1) of Bill C-22(C) empowers the Governor in Council to repeal sections 41.1 to 41.25 of the Bill if it is in the public interest to do so. This confers significant powers on the Governor in Council. While there is precedent for vesting such authority in the Governor in Council, the Committee is of the view that it should be used sparingly so as not to usurp the powers of Parliament.

Dissenting Opinion

This report represents the views of a majority of the Committee. The members who support the Government are in disagreement with the report.

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 22, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-55, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it has not been usual for us to abridge the time required for the legislative steps of a bill. Indeed, in my opinion, it should only be for special reasons that we do so. However, in the case of Bill C-55, in my view, there are special reasons. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is presently studying Bill C-84, the refugee bill, and when I have been present at that committee and, according to my colleagues, since then there have been frequent references to Bill C-55 while the provisions of Bill C-84 were being considered. In fact, it seems to be almost impossible to talk about Bill C-84 without referring to Bill C-55.

Therefore, honourable senators, although I know there are some honourable senators who wish to speak to this bill, it would be useful to accelerate the process to give us all an early exposé of the government's position and to facilitate the referral of Bill C-55 to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which I assume is the committee to which it will be referred. Although immigration finds itself in another committee's mandate, clearly it is the legal and constitutional dimension that is appropriate in this case, and we feel it is fitting that these two bills should be dealt with together.

Deputy Leader of the Opposition, and I appreciate the desire and disposition of the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to try to deal with these matters at the same time, because some of the testimony being heard touches on both bills.

However, I do draw to the attention of the Senate that it is the government's position that Bill C-84 is a necessary piece of legislation that stands on its own merits. We would very much want to see that bill emerge from the committee and be dealt with by the Senate regardless of the hearings on and the disposition of Bill C-55.

Motion agreed to and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REVISED THIRTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Royce Frith, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, October 22, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

THIRTY-FIRST REPORT (Revised)

Your Committee has examined and approved the following salary scales for Senators' secretaries including the secretary to the Leader of the Opposition effective April 1, 1987:

$26,185   $27,725   $29,265   $30,805

Your Committee has examined and approved the following salary scales for secretaries in the office of the Speaker pro tempore, the Deputy Leader of the Government, the Government Whip and the Opposition Whip, effective April 1, 1987:

$27,725   $29,265   $30,805   $32,616

Respectfully submitted,

ROYCE FRITH
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be taken into consideration now and adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and revised report adopted.

ORIGINAL THIRTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in view of the adoption of the revised thirty-first report, may I have leave of the Senate to withdraw the unrevised thirty-first report?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and original report withdrawn.

ORIGINAL THIRTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE—MOTION WITHDRAWN

Leave having been given to proceed to Motion No. 3:

That the Thirty-First Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, respecting approved salary increases for Senators' secretaries, tabled in the Senate on October 9th, 1987, be referred back to the Committee with instructions that the Committee consider the impact such increases will have on negotiations with represented employees, and on the Hay formula of classification and salary levels for non-represented employees.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask leave of the Senate to withdraw Motion No. 3 standing in my name.

The subject matter of the motion has been resolved to the satisfaction of everyone concerned. I would like to congratulate the members of the committee, particularly members of the subcommittee who brought forward the original plan. I thank all members for their courtesies to me in this particular respect.

Motion withdrawn.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FILM ENTITLED "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS"—PUBLIC RESPONSE TO PETITION—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, October 27, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the response of Canadians to a petition mailed out calling upon Parliament to urge the government to act on the motion dealing with the production of the National Film Board film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss."

SENATE TASK FORCE ON MEECH LAKE CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD AND YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

REDUCTION OF QUORUM

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the quorum of the Senate Task Force on the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and on the Yukon and Northwest Territories be reduced to three members.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators are aware that the government side of the house has relatively few members on that committee, as is the case with most committees, proportionate to the total number of members. If the quorum is reduced to three members, does that mean that there need not be any representation from the government side for the work of the committee to go ahead, or is it the intention of the Senate that the task force activities be carried on in the absence of a government member?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, the committee as structured has eight members—three members from the government side and five members from the opposition side of the house. According to the rules of the Senate, there must be five members present to have a quorum.

I understand there are difficulties on the government side to have members present at the hearings in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. At present there are only two members available for those hearings. Because of that difficulty there was a proposal to reduce the quorum from five to three members. It has always been my practice in committee meetings that unless there is at least one member of the government present I have not proceeded with the meeting if a decision had to be made. At times we have listened to witnesses when there was only one member of the government present.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Finlay MacDonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, October 27, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

MR. DALE M. JARVIS—FELICITATIONS ON COMPLETION OF 25 YEARS' SERVICE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just before Question Period I want to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that one of our most senior employees joined the Senate exactly 25 years ago today. That person is our Director of Personnel, Mr. Dale M. Jarvis.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: I thought it useful to do so because he and some of his colleagues in senior levels of our administration represent a principle that all senators encourage, namely, that our staff can have a full and lifetime career with the Senate and, whenever possible, can achieve promotions.

Senator Flynn: Like that of the senators!

Senator Frith: Not in comparison with senators, as Senator Flynn is suggesting, but it is appropriate in that context.

Mr. Jarvis started as a committee clerk exactly 25 years ago. That is how he represents something we encourage, that promotions, where possible, come from within the Senate, and the Senate provides that kind of full, lifetime career.

Senator Guay, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Classifications and Salaries, who works quite closely with Mr. Jarvis, might want to add something.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Thank you, Senator Frith.

Honourable senators, I also rise today to pay tribute to Mr. Dale Jarvis, the Senate Director of Personnel, who today, as mentioned before, celebrates 25 years' service in the Senate.

Mr. Jarvis was employed by the Senate on October 22, 1962, as committee clerk, was appointed Assistant Chief of Administration and Personnel, and then in 1985 became Director of Personnel. From December 1986 to July 1987 he served as Acting Director of Finance. We must acknowledge our appreciation of the dual job that he performed during that period of time.

Without going into all aspects of the job description of the Director of Personnel of the Senate we must point out that he attends all subcommittee and committee meetings, over and above the work that he is called upon to do as Director of Personnel.

We are proud to have a man of such distinction as the head of our personnel, and I wish to reiterate to Mr. Jarvis my personal good wishes along with those of the Senate for a job well done and continued good health so that we may have him with us performing his heavy responsibilities for a long time to come.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to take a moment to add the good wishes from this side of the chamber to those expressed by our colleagues opposite.

We also appreciate very much the loyalty and good service of Mr. Jarvis over the years. We particularly admire his patience. It is difficult enough for an administrator to work for one boss, but when an administrator has to work for 100 bosses, it makes the job that much more difficult. We admire his competence and ability. We appreciate his patience and thank him for his service. We hope that he will be with us for many years to come.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

BINDING DISPUTE-SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—FINDINGS OF BI-NATIONAL PANEL AND TRADE COMMISSION—RIGHT OF RETALIATORY ACTION BY INJURED PARTY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, this is a question to which I have not had an answer. The previous time I asked this question I was told that there was difficulty resulting from my moving from one part of a government text to another. This time I have written it all down, and I will read it. I hope the Honourable Leader of the Government will read these passages in the order in which I shall dictate them shortly. If he would be kind enough to give me an answer to this question at his earliest convenience, I would be most grateful.

• (1410)

Given the fact that on April 2, 1987, the Right Honourable the Prime Minister told the New York Times that in the Free Trade Agreement we then sought with the U.S., and I quote, "... the trade-remedy laws cannot apply to Canada, period."; and given also the fact that the Leader of the Government in the Senate keeps referring to the existence of a binding dispute-settlement mechanism, will the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate please explain, preferably at the next sitting of the Senate, how the position of the Prime Minister quoted above and the statements of the Honourable Senator Murray himself on a binding dispute-settlement mechanism accord with the following extracts from the government document entitled "Preliminary Transcript—Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—Elements of the Agreement"? I now read the extracts, identified by page number and line.

On page 5, at lines 7 to 12, it states:

The free trade agreement shall provide that each Party reserves fully its right to change its domestic antidumping and countervailing duty laws, provided that:

no future changes in such laws can be applied to the other Party . . . ;

it notified such proposed changes to the other Party and entered into prior consultation with the other Party upon request;

On page 6, at lines 1 to 3, it states:

A panel . . .

That is, a bi-national panel—

... may issue declaratory opinions with respect to changes by a Party to its anti-dumping or countervailing duty statutes after entry into force of the FTA ...

That is, the Free Trade Agreement.

I further quote from page 7, lines 15 to 18, as follows:

The decision of a panel shall be binding on the Parties and their investigating authorities. The panel may uphold or remand ...

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. This is Oral Question Period. I fully appreciate the honourable senator's hunger and thirst for knowledge in this particular area. I know it is a matter of great importance.

I would be obliged if Senator Gigantès would take his seat, since I have risen on a point of order.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: I apologize.

Senator Doody: I simply want to point out that rule 20A states:

(1) A question ...

(a) that seeks statistical or other information not readily available ... shall be sent in writing to the Clerk of the Senate to be placed on the Order Paper until answered.

Honourable senators, this is clearly a case where this particular rule should be taken into account. How anybody could be expected to remember the detail and answer coherently—whether it be today or tomorrow—the question that is now being placed before us by the honourable senator is completely beyond comprehension.

I sincerely ask senators to support me on this. This is not really what Oral Question Period was designed to be used for, and if we do not get some semblance of order in Question Period it is going to escape us and it will not be effective for anyone.

I simply ask the honourable senator to please place that particularly involved and complex question on the order paper. Then I am sure that all steps will be taken to get an answer for him as quickly as possible.

Senator Gigantès: I should like to respond to the Honourable Deputy Leader of the Government. He referred to a part of the rules of the Senate which states that if we are seeking statistical information we should place the question on the order paper.

Senator Doody: No, excuse me, I said, "statistical or other information not readily available."

Senator Gigantès: The point is that the paper on the Free Trade Agreement was introduced to this chamber by the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. Moreover, he is a member of the cabinet, where this was discussed. He is also the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. The Free Trade Agreement will, undoubtedly, affect the provinces, and I am sure he is perfectly cognizant of every detail and implication of this agreement.

Therefore, I am asking him to explain, first, how this agreement as worded can possibly be construed to mean that we achieved some relief from trade remedy laws, and, second, how its provisions can remotely be described as including a binding dispute-settlement mechanism. I want to set down the words so that they will be at the disposal not only of the government leader but of the house as a whole so that all honourable senators will know what I am talking about.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have raised a point of order and I would like to have a ruling on it, please.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I think that rule 20A is clear, and I shall read it:

(1) A question described in paragraph 20(1)(a) or (b)

(a) that seeks statistical or other information not readily available, or

(b) to which an answer in writing is desired, shall be sent in writing to the Clerk of the Senate to be placed on the Order Paper until answered.

It seems to me that the question before us seeks statistical or other information not readily available and that it should be sent in writing to the Clerk of the Senate.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I bow to this ruling, although I must say that I cannot see how this is in any way a statistical question, since I have not asked for a single figure. I will, however, send this question to the staff so that it can be placed on the order paper.

The Hon. the Speaker: I must say to the honourable senator that the rule applies to questions seeking "statistical or other information not readily available."

TRADE

IMBALANCE BETWEEN CANADA AND U.S.S.R.—UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM—SUGGESTED CANADA-U.S.S.R. COMPREHENSIVE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he has an answer to the question I put to him last Tuesday as to whether or not the government has given any indication to the Soviet Union that Canada will try to purchase substantial quantities of Soviet goods over the next three-year period. The second part of the same question had to do with whether the Canadian government, in its purchasing program, is making any endeavour to include the purchase of Soviet goods where that seems appropriate.

dented step, he has taken Canadians on a trade mission with a view to purchasing goods from rather than selling goods to that country. He gave me some other information which I cannot find in my notes at the moment, but I will retrieve it and communicate it to my honourable friend.

Senator Argue: I would appreciate that, because I think this is a matter of great importance. I am pleased that the minister took this initiative. I can recall vividly that when I put forward in the House of Commons the notion that because of our trade relationship with the Soviet Union Canadians might consider the purchase of some Soviet tractors and some Soviet cars, members of the Conservative Party threw up their hands in holy horror, and there was a demand that I be fired from the cabinet for such an intemperate suggestion.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: They probably had their reasons!

Senator Argue: Well, Senator Flynn, as a Conservative, would know all about underhanded, underlying reasons. He would be the authority on those. I just took it at face value, as though they really meant what they were saying. Conversion is fine, however; and I am glad they have come around. I hope they make greater efforts in this regard and I wish them every success. I also hope that the answer the government leader is looking for will be satisfactory.

Honourable senators, I notice with a great deal of dismay that the Americans are moving into the Chinese and Indian markets and are making an endeavour to move into the Soviet market. This they are doing even after their apparent approval of a trade agreement that, as part of its objective, would remove subsidies. They are going into the international market and are providing massive subsidies—subsidies of the order of hundreds of millions of dollars—by way of free gifts of wheat to prospective customers. I ask how that squares with the idea of fair trade and the removal of subsidies. I want to know whether or not this government, up to this point, has made a protest. I ask them if they have made or will make a formal diplomatic protest against this absolutely uncalled-for, unconscionable action by the United States.

• (1420)

Senator Perrault: Muster up your courage to do it.

Senator Argue: It puts in jeopardy markets that mean billions of dollars to Canada. It affects not just the grain producers; its effect concerns everyone. I could read quotes from leaders—

Senator Flynn: I am sure you could.

Senator Argue: Well, maybe I should. Here it is—

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

Senator Argue: You can rise on anything you like. It's lucky you rise at all.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that the way the honourable senator is putting his question is out of order. He has been making a speech, and now he is going to read from a press report, which is—

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Perrault: It's just a long question.

Senator Flynn: He never puts a short question, in any event. Perhaps we could ask His Honour the Speaker what the rules are concerning no preamble to short questions. Perhaps I will put a question to the chairman of the Rules Committee to see whether we can deal with any abuse.

Senator Argue: I don't agree that there was any abuse. I think that I put the question in a very appropriate manner. I did not make a long-winded speech. I am down to the nitty-gritty. I am wondering whether the government has made any protest; I wonder if the Leader of the Government has any comment to make, since Senator Flynn has raised it, on the statement attributed to a senior official, John Morriss of the Canadian Wheat Board, who, in speaking of the Americans, said:

They are blanketing the world with their subsidies, and no consideration is being given to our interests.

We feel they are practically targeting our markets. They may be preaching friendship in the free-trade deal, but they are getting worse.

And so it goes, on and on; but I will not quote any more, because they are all the same.

What is this government doing to protest this unconscionable action by the Americans?

An Hon. Senator: Good speech!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I presume the honourable senator is referring to the Export Enhancement Program of the United States government which has been in place since 1985, during which time Canada has increased its exports.

I may say that it is my information that there have been no United States offers under the Export Enhancement Program—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Just say they are over-enhancing their Enhancement Program.

Senator Murray: —to China, the U.S.S.R. or India since the signing of the bilateral trade agreement between Canada and the United States. Nevertheless, we are concerned about reports that such offers may be imminent, and, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated in the other place yesterday, we will be making the necessary representations to the United States administration in this regard.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: Well, it is not a very reassuring answer. Whether they have done it now or whether they are going to do it tomorrow or the next day I suppose does not carry any great significance in itself; but the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the House of Commons that he is going to meet with Secretary Shultz in Europe, that in the next few days he will visit with him. I am asking if the government has considered a diplomatic protest. Has the government considered having the Prime Minister telephone the President of the United States?

Senator Flynn: Ha, ha!

Senator Argue: You can "Ha, ha!" all you like, but this is a very important question for Canadians.

Senator Flynn: The way you put it is an exaggeration.

Senator Argue: It is not an exaggeration. If you were a representative from the Prairies you would know it is not exaggerated.

Senator Frith: Hazen, they are so timid! I am sure the Prairies are glad that they are in your hands, not theirs!

Senator Argue: Here is a man who likes to follow the rules. Well, there are rules against interruptions. But keep on interrupting! I don't mind if you break the rules! Keep on! You are the best rule-breaker this place has ever produced! You do it every day, so just keep on coming!

Senator Flynn: I was calling you to order!

Senator Argue: Just keep on coming, just keep on coming!

Senator Flynn: Don't you understand what I mean when I say "Order!"?

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am wondering if there is more of an answer than what I have been given. Is this the end of the protest? Is there nothing more? Is this not an abrogation of the Free Trade Agreement?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the first thing I did was correct the premise of the honourable senator's question. The honourable senator was fulminating—

Senator Perrault: That is an unparliamentary comment!

Senator Murray: —about unconscionable, outrageous and perhaps even sinful actions that have been taken by the United States government. I was advising him that since the signing of the Free Trade Agreement there had been no offers under the Export Enhancement Program by the United States to the customers the honourable senator mentioned—the U.S.S.R., the People's Republic of China and India. We are concerned about reports that such offers may be imminent and therefore we are making representations to the Secretary of State of the United States through our own Secretary of State for External Affairs. It seems to me that this is an appropriate course to follow in the circumstances.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I understand, also according to what is in the press, that the Soviet Union is reported to have turned down the offer by the United States—an offer made some time in the past, no doubt—to provide grain to the Soviet Union under the Export Enhancement Program. For instance, the press report says that the Soviet offer would have included subsidies of $200 million. The report goes on to say that the Soviet Union indicated little interest in this offer. I am pleased that the Soviet Union indicated little interest. Our trade relations with the Soviet Union, particularly with regard to grain, has been one of a good working relationship over many years, and it is respected on both sides. Since this trade in grain is so important to Canada, and since there is a great possibility that this kind of trade could be expanded in the future, I suggest and I ask the minister to convey to the Prime Minister the idea that the Prime Minister of this country should invite Secretary Gorbachev to visit Canada, and during that visit he should discuss with Mr. Gorbachev the possibility of a Canadian-Soviet trade agreement of a massive size that would provide for increased purchases by the Soviet Union of our goods and something of a reciprocal—though perhaps not of the same proportion—commitment on our part to assist in the import of their goods into Canada. I put this proposal forward as being a realistic and practical one. Since the Soviets have indicated, according to my information—and it is all public—that they may be interested in larger quantities of grain, I ask: Has such a comprehensive trade agreement been considered or would it be considered?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot forbear to observe that my honourable friend seems to be a good deal more enthusiastic about the possibility of such an agreement with the Soviet Union than he is about the Free Trade Agreement—

Senator Argue: One is practical and the other is impractical!

Senator Murray: —that we have signed with our closest neighbour.

Senator Argue: One is a winner and the other is a loser for Canadians!

Senator Murray: Senator Argue's position—I presume that he is speaking for himself—is that a trade agreement with the Soviet Union is a practical matter and a trade agreement with the United States is impractical, that a trade agreement with the Soviet Union is a winner and a trade agreement with the United States is a loser. I leave that on the record for Senator Argue and others to ponder in the days and weeks to come.

Honourable senators, with regard to our trade with the Soviet Union, as I pointed out the other day, we understand the concern of the Soviet authorities over the fact that they have a considerable imbalance in their trade with us. In recognition of the fact that trade is a two-way street, and in recognition of the importance to us of the long-term agreement signed some time ago for 25 million tonnes, we have set up a U.S.S.R. trade task force to provide marketing advice and to ensure that Soviet goods have fair and equal access to the Canadian market.

● (1430)

My friend the Minister of State for Grains and Oil Seeds has told me of the existence of a committee, made up of Soviets and Canadians, to increase our trade on an ongoing basis. We have made it clear to the Soviet Union, however, that we would not engage in countertrade, nor have we entered into specific purchase commitments on behalf of the Government of Canada.

Senator Argue: I wonder if the minister might be a little more clear. Does that mean, then, that there is no such thing as a letter of comfort or no such thing as an indication that Canada would use its best efforts to assist in the possible importation into this country of as much as $780 million Canadian of Soviet goods over the next three years?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, "best efforts" is exactly what we have undertaken to deploy, and "best efforts" is what we are deploying on this matter. I do not have any indication from my colleagues that a so-called letter of comfort has been conveyed to the Government of the Soviet Union, but I can inquire on that matter. Neither do I have any indication that a specific dollar commitment has been made to the Soviet Union with regard to the import of goods to Canada from that country.

Senator Argue: Would the Honourable Leader of the Government care to comment on whether or not a leading official in the Department of External Affairs dealing with Soviet-Canadian trade has tendered her resignation and is likely to be leaving that post in a very brief time? I must say at this time that I am not sure whether this is "the" leading official or "a" leading official.

Further, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether or not there is a replacement on hand to fill that post who has a comprehensive knowledge of this important and, I think, very intricate field?

Honourable senators, I really do not expect the Leader of the Government to have that kind of information at his fingertips—although he might well have—or if he wishes to say whether or not the person involved is leaving and if there is some suitable person ready to fill that position.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think the honourable senator would need to identify the officer to whom he is referring so that I can make an inquiry on this matter.

Senator Doody: This is not a job application, is it?

Senator Argue: I do not think there is any mystery. It is one of the two people whom the Leader of the Government recently told us about, and reference was made to them on the record in this chamber a short time ago.

Senator Murray: I would have to know who the person is. The honourable senator must be aware that these postings are a moveable feast in External Affairs. I remember some years ago being very impressed by an officer whom I met in Moscow who spoke the Russian language and seemed terribly knowledgeable about affairs in the Soviet Union. The next time I saw him he was on the Commonwealth desk here in Ottawa. However, that is the way of External Affairs.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, that is really not an answer to my question. The person involved is stationed in Ottawa, as far as I know, and is not a roaming official.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT ON TWO-PRICE SYSTEM FOR WHEAT

Hon. Hazen Argue: I do not intend to take too much umbrage with what the minister has said about my statement that a deal with the Soviet Union might carry great advantages and that the so-called free trade deal with the United States carries very grave disadvantages. I stand by that statement. Our trade with the United States is very important. They are our biggest customer. However, that does not make this agreement a good free trade agreement and, in my opinion, it is not.

[Senator Argue.]

My question is: Why has the government opened up the Canadian domestic market to American wheat, put that market at risk for Canadian producers, and, in my opinion, made it almost impossible to continue a domestic wheat subsidy—and the minister can quarrel with my phrase if he likes? Why have we opened up our domestic milling market to the United States and at the same time failed to write into the agreement something of a concrete nature whereby the Americans would undertake to stop trying to elbow us out of our export markets by using U.S. Treasury subsidies—and by that I mean the enhancement program?

Senator Argue: The domestic market has been opened up to American wheat. That comes into Canada and now comes in without licence. If the Leader of the Government does not accept that, then the leader does not know what he is talking about, because that is what is in the agreement. That is what terrifies the Canadian farmers. Grant Devine says that the farmers will lose $280 million. He made that statement in the press; he did not tell me that on the telephone.

I would like to know why Grant Devine knows how bad it is and the Leader of the Government in the Senate here does not know that.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think Senator Argue would not want to misrepresent the position of the Premier and of the Government of Saskatchewan with regard to this Free Trade Agreement with the United States. The Premier and the Government of Saskatchewan are firm supporters of the agreement that was signed between Canada and the United States.

I may say also that if the honourable senator will take the time to read some of the statements made by representatives of the farm communities in the three prairie provinces—indeed, in the four western provinces and even in some of the eastern provinces—he will find, by and large, very enthusiastic support for this agreement and for the positive impact it will have on Canadian agriculture.

If the honourable senator does not believe me, I will undertake to bring in and read into the record one of these days some of the statements from some of those farm leaders.

Senator Argue: I ask the minister once again: Is the Premier of Saskatchewan wrong in saying that the domestic market is in jeopardy and that the two-price system is lost, and because it is lost it will cost western grain producers $280 million? I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Does the Premier of Saskatchewan know what the Premier of Saskatchewan is talking about?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the two-price system for wheat is still in place. If, as and when there is any change in that, the honourable senator will be one of the first to know what that decision is and what steps have been taken.

Senator Argue: It has already been given over.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is wrong in suggesting that the Premier and the Government of Saskatchewan are anything but firm supporters of the Free Trade Agreement that has been signed between Canada and the United States.

Senator Argue: He wants the $280 million that you have given to Uncle Sam.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—ACTION OF SENATE—ATTITUDE OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—SUGGESTED FREE CONFERENCE—CONSTITUTIONAL RESPONSIBILITY OF SENATE

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, in an article in today's Globe and Mail with respect to Bill C-22 and yesterday's action of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, the Honourable Harvie Andre, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, is quoted as saying:

I would sooner lose this bill or any one of a number of bills than to acquiesce to the principle that we have a bunch of non-elected Liberals exercising veto power over the elected Government of Canada . . .

● (1440)

"That principle ought to offend anybody. In South America they have revolutions over things like this," Mr. Andre added.

Could the Leader of the Government tell us if the Government of Canada shares the view of Mr. Andre in this matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the Senate in recent years has exercised the kind of self-discipline that it should exercise. The Senate in recent years has not defeated legislation coming from the elected house, and it has very rarely amended government legislation in any substantial way. In recent years the Senate has adopted the technique of pre-study under which it is possible to obtain improvements, amendments and changes in government policies and legislation without the necessity of confrontation between our two houses.

It is fair to say that the 19th century rights of the Senate to defeat legislation coming from the elected house have fallen into disuse, and this happily so in a democratic country.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, I do not propose to argue with the Leader of the Government. I would only remark that confrontation requires two sides. There seems to be a desire on one side to accept compromise and to recognize the kind of "garbage," if I may call it that, that we are receiving from the other side. When I say "garbage," I am talking about legislation that is badly drawn and in great need of amendment. This legislation is in a form which reflects a philosophy that needs to be drawn to the attention of the Canadian people.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government and the Government of Canada are aware that our Constitution provides for two chambers in our Parliament, one of which is the Senate. The Constitution provides for the method of appointment, and it has prescribed legislative responsibilities. I wonder if the Leader of the Government is aware that that situation was reconfirmed as recently as 1982 by the Constitution of Canada Act and that the Senate was continued in its present form with the same responsibilities and the same legislative activity expected of it? Is the Leader of the Government now refusing to accept the constitutional function of the Senate, and does he expect to find a way of giving this body either its final rest or reformation so that it will have real influence on the legislative program of government, without being constantly abused by this kind of attitude of ministers and the government?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I regret if the honourable senator, or any member of this place, takes offence to statements made by my colleague or any other members of the government in the other place. In their defence, I would simply point out to him that the bill in question has now been here for more than six months. It has been the subject of prolonged study by a special committee which travelled the length and breadth of the country listening to witnesses. This special committee brought in proposed amendments which were later rejected by the elected members of the House of Commons.

Rather than bow to the will of the elected chamber, as has been the custom, the majority in the Senate referred the bill to still another committee—the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, we did not refer the bill; we referred the message from the House of Commons.

Senator Murray: The Deputy Leader of the Opposition corrects me. The message from the House of Commons was not accepted by the majority in the Senate. It was then referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, with the mandate to seek a compromise among the interested parties.

Far from having achieved a compromise among the interested parties or, indeed, a consensus of the committee, we received a report yesterday recommending another five or six amendments. Once again, we are back in this ping-pong game with the House of Commons.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is responsible for that bill. He has explained it at length in the House of Commons, where it had a very long ride. He has explained it to the committee of the Senate, and he has explained it publicly. I believe he is justified in expecting that the Senate would come to a decision shortly on the matter.

The honourable senator has raised three points in his question. The first point deals with legislation, which he says is badly drawn or in need of amendment. We all know that happens. Sometimes by inadvertence there is bad drafting, or in studying legislation we find that there are effects which the drafters and the government had not intended. If that happens, we take the necessary corrective measures. This was the purpose of the pre-study technique. That technique has worked successfully in this place for a number of years, until very recently when my friends opposite decided not to pursue it further and not to grant pre-study for most legislation.

Senator Frith: Let's not get into that. That was for a very good reason caused by the Leader of the Government.

Senator Murray: The reason they have decided not to grant pre-study is that they want to insist on the formal procedures that are provided for in our rules which, when we decide to amend a bill, leads inevitably and of necessity to confrontation between our two houses.

The second point the honourable senator raised concerned political philosophy behind bills, a political philosophy which he does not accept. That, of course, is his privilege, and it is his privilege and his responsibility to bring these philosophical differences to the attention of the Canadian public, if he wishes to do so. There is ample opportunity in our committee system and in our chamber to do that. Senators on both sides have done it on many occasions.

The third point the honourable senator raises concerns the constitutional role of the Senate. I do not deny the role that was given to the Senate by our Constitution. He says confrontation requires two sides. That is correct. However, surely he does not pretend that in the Canadian democracy of 1987, when the two sides consist of a democratically elected House of Commons and an appointed Senate, that the two sides enjoy equal democratic legitimacy.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, has the Leader of the Government forgotten, or perhaps misunderstood, the reference that was given to the committee? The reference was not to negotiate a compromise with the government. It was to find a middle ground between the version of Bill C-22 as passed by the House of Commons and the amendments that were adopted in the Senate.

The message that we received was from the House of Commons. The constitutional duty that the Senate performed, as referred to, arises from the same Constitution that gives the minister the right to take the position he does take. To say that we ought to have abandoned our work and our duty because the minister had refused to make any amendments and to say that we ought to, perhaps, continue to abandon our work and our duty because the minister has again refused to make any amendments perhaps answers Senator Stanbury's question, and that is exactly how the government sees the Senate's role. But I am not clear as to what the answer is. As I understood the question, it was: Does the government approve of the position taken by the minister, namely, that the issue is not Bill C-22 but his apparent disapproval of the Constitution of Canada, which imposes certain duties and rights on one of the houses of Parliament?

● (1450)

Senator Murray: Briefly, honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is in a better position than I am to speak as to the intent of Senator MacEachen in moving the motion that he moved to refer the matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. However, my recollection is quite clear as to the spirit in which Senator Sinclair, the chairman of that committee, indicated he was accepting that mandate. My recollection is quite clear that the kind of compromise Senator Sinclair was talking about was a compromise that would be acceptable to the various parts of the pharmaceutical industry as well as to the government. If I understood him correctly, that is the compromise that he said he was seeking.

Senator Frith: He does, and that is exactly what we have done, namely, asked PMAC to put into writing what they have told us is so.

Senator Murray: I am telling the honourable senator and the Senate that the committee may have sought that compromise, but they did not find it. The compromise is not there.

Senator Frith: No, because he is too busy Senate bashing to read the report.

Senator Murray: Well, I beg your pardon. The amendments that are suggested in the report do not represent a compromise that is acceptable to the various interested parties, including the government. I have no hesitation in saying that.

With regard to the second part of the question, it is clear that for a great many people in this country the matter has become a constitutional issue as to whether the majority in the Senate in the year 1987 intends to exercise to the full the right of vetoing legislation that comes from the elected house. This is a right that the Senate has not exercised for many decades.

I believe that after more than six months of delay on this matter—

Senator Frith: Delay? You mean study. Why is it "delay"? When we take our time to study something it is always characterized as "delay."

Senator Argue: It has not been vetoed.

Senator Barootes: Maybe the word is "stalling"!

Senator Frith: That word is just as inappropriate.

Senator Murray: Perhaps my friends could indicate to me a bill that has taken the opposition longer to dispose of than this one has. After six months of delay it is natural, I think—in fact, normal and quite understandable—that the issue would become a constitutional one as to whether the majority in the Senate intends to exercise to the full the undoubted right that it has in theory in the Constitution.

Senator Frith: The Leader of the Government says that for a great many people it has become a constitutional issue. The government has been trying for six months to make this a constitutional issue. For a great many people it is not a constitutional issue, it is an issue of drug prices.

Senator Argue: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: It is an issue of protecting the consumers. However, we are getting into the debate, and I am sure that we can expand on that next week. But I do not think that I should let that comment go by, because by the many ways of measuring what people are thinking it seems to me that many more are concerned about drug prices than are concerned about the constitutional issue.

Senator Argue: They do not want Ronald Reagan ruling this country!

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a specific question. I know he realizes that the history of our country shows that every time when there has been a sudden change in the political complexion of the other House after the other party has been in power for a long time there has been a period of friction, and perhaps even conflict, between the House of Commons and the Senate. There is nothing new, in short, in what he regards as the present difficult situation.

I am sure he also realizes that every time these periods have set in there have been attempts to achieve a compromise between the two houses. The standard technique by which the Senate and the House of Commons have sought to reconcile their differences every time they have happened in the situations that I have described has been by a free conference.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Does he dismiss a free conference as part of the 19th century tradition of the Constitution Act, 1867 to which he referred just a moment ago?

Senator Hicks: As recently as 1947.

Senator Stewart: No. I wanted the Leader of the Government to answer the question; I did not ask Senator Hicks!

Senator Hicks: I apologize.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, far be it from me to intervene in this discussion—

Senator Frith: "A thousand ages in Thy sight are like an evening gone"!

Senator Murray: —between two distinguished academics from two great Nova Scotia universities.

I think that Senator Stewart's reading of history is not that recent. He says that every time there has been a change in the complexion of the other House—

Senator Stewart: A major change.

Senator Murray: —a major change in the political complexion of the other place after a government has been in power for a long time there has been a period of friction and conflict between the two houses.

I will not refer to the brief nine or ten months that the Clark government was in power in 1979-80, but there was a period between 1957 and 1963 when the Diefenbaker government was in power. While there may have been—

Senator Stewart: What about the Coyne affair?

Senator Murray: My friend mentions the Coyne affair. That is an interesting example. Does my friend recall exactly what happened in the Coyne affair?

Senator Stewart: Boy, do we!

Senator Murray: Let me put it on the record. What happened was that a Senate committee insisted on doing something that a House of Commons committee had declined to do, which was to give Mr. Coyne an opportunity to appear before the committee and state his case. He undertook that if he was given that opportunity he would resign rather than be dismissed by legislation, which is exactly what happened.

But apart from the famous Coyne affair, there was no major confrontation that I recall between the two chambers during that period. As for the so-called "free conference," there was one in 1947, as Senator Hicks has reminded us, but this was not during a time when there had been a change of government. As a matter of fact, the majority in both houses was Liberal, and the confrontation concerned some differences over a number of amendments to the Criminal Code.

I do not think that a free conference would avail us of anything whatsoever. Minds are made up on this matter, and the honourable senator knows as well as I do what will be the fate of the report brought in by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce yesterday. He knows as well as I do what its fate will be on the other side. I put it to honourable senators that as soon as possible thereafter they should decide what they want to do about Bill C-22.

Senator Frith: Maybe accept the minister's invitation!

Senator Murray: So be it.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has forgotten the Nowlan tariff legislation which was turned back by the Senate. That did involve public legislation directly. He does not mention anything that happened in the 1935 instance nor, indeed, after the change of government in 1911.

He dismisses the free conferences as if it were a 19th century institution. Let me remind him that the free conference is entirely a 20th century institution. It was never used in the 19th century. It is the constitutional technique for attempting to resolve these kinds of differences, which are perfectly understandable when we have the kind of dramatic political change that we saw in 1984.

● (1500)

Senator Murray: What the honourable senator is asserting is that this institution has a democratic legitimacy that is equal to that of the other place.

Senator Stewart: No, I am not asserting that at all.

Senator Murray: In 1987 that is not the case.

The honourable senator says that I dismiss free conferences. I do not dismiss free conferences. I do say that a free conference with regard to Bill C-22 would avail us nothing, and I think I am on pretty solid ground on the basis of the experience of the last six months.

Senator Frith: Stubbornness!

Senator Stewart: Am I to understand, honourable senators, that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is saying that this government turns its back upon the free conference technique, which has been the conventional method by which difficulties between the two houses have been resolved in every major instance in which they have occurred in this century?

Senator Murray: I tried to answer that question a moment ago. I do not turn my back on the technique of free conference. I do say that a free conference on the matter of Bill C-22 would avail us nothing.
